Prayer is work, dost thou believe it?
Prayer is power, wilt thou receive it?
Prayer is the path our Saviour trod,
Prayer the touch that links with God.
Make thy life a daily prayer,
He will answer—here and there.

KEEPING THE DYNAMIC OF PRAYER from degenerating into an empty form is one of the most trying concerns of sincere Christians. The ultimate test of faith comes in the prayer closet. If there is a breakdown in the outward life of a Christian, it is because his prayer life had broken down some time before. It is when we are alone with God—when we acknowledge our spiritual need and feed upon spiritual food of the Word and fellowship with Jesus Christ—that we grow in maturity as disciples of Jesus Christ. Likewise, it is when we are alone with God, that we often, to our own tragedy refuse to acknowledge our need and cut ourselves off from nourishment. Lack of nourishment automatically means spiritual flabbiness and ultimate death unless there is a return. All this begins in the prayer closet too. The habit of being alone with God may continue for some time; but much more than habit or ritual, the key to radiant fellowship with God in the prayer closet is the open heart. The secret of the open heart is repentance. Tragically enough, repentance in our activistic, extroverted age has come to be falsely equated with something approaching unhealthy introversion and even morbidity. In the minds of many it works against what they term a "healthy self-respect." But the highest kind of self-respect begins when an individual "comes to himself" and says to God, "I have sinned . . . . make me . . . ." At that point the ritual of self-vindication ends and a vital prayer-life begins. A satisfying prayer or devotional life is based squarely on the recognition of our complete inadequacy apart from God. The "land of beginning again" in our prayer life is reached at the station of repentance.

"How many times we never pray at all, and then work ourselves to death to earn something that is ours for the asking. Help us to understand that faith without works is dead and works without faith can never live. Amen."—From a prayer by the late Senate Chaplin Peter Marshall.

JUST AS TRUE is the fact that prayer is one of the most profound problems of a church. The simple fact that a congregation has regular prayer meetings is absolutely no guarantee that the congregation is a dynamic, spiritually minded church. Having said that, it should be added that churches that have dropped stated prayer meetings because of lack of interest dare not take encouragement in the above fact. For is not the usual order of retrogression something like this: sincere dynamic prayer meetings, insincere formal prayer meetings, and, finally, no prayer meetings? This problem of vitalizing or bringing to life the prayer life of a congregation is not a simple one. The condition has probably come about because of several reasons. One is the prevailing emphasis upon the self-sufficiency and adequacy of man to solve his own problems. The other is the tendency for the minister to take over, as well as the congregation to give over much of the responsibility that belongs squarely on the shoulders of the laymen. If the minister does all the personal work and soul winning how can any congregation have a dynamic prayer life? It is only as the people of our congregations get into the thick of the fight with the forces of evil and keenly feel their lack of resources in themselves that the desire for fellowship in prayer can spring up anew.

SEVERAL RECENT EVENTS in the religious life of America have been the occasion for extensive newspaper comment. One is the Billy Graham revival in Los Angeles which according to some press reports was one of the most stirring evangelistic campaigns ever to hit that city. A television star and a world renowned athlete were among the converts. Whether we agree with all the methods and theology employed in this effort or not, we ought to thank God that His Spirit is at work and is making men stop and think and turn to God. Sometimes it almost seems that, as Mennonites, we let our emphasis upon love and good-will drain from our appeal the demand for a complete about-face. When that has happened the agape (love) of the gospel has degenerated into sentiment and our message has lost its cutting edge. The true agape must always ask, "Lovest thou ME?" and in asking demands a decision.—J.J.E.

This is a lost world to be saved, and not simply an ignorant world to be educated.—Evangelical Visitor

WHY EVERY PREACHER WANTS HIS PEOPLE TO GIVE

Is it wrong for preachers to ask their folks to give? Not any more than it is wrong for the coach to ask his men to go and give their best to win! Not any more than it is wrong for your banker to encourage you to make a lucrative investment! Not any more than it is wrong for you parents to expect your children to do their best with the opportunities which you have given them! Not any more wrong than it is for you church members to want your preacher to be the best preacher and pastor in the whole town! The way some folks complain about being asked to give, one would think they were being "shanghaied"! Not so! If your preacher is fulfilling his ministry to you and to the Lord, he wants you to give "that fruit may abound to your account." (Phil. 4:17). After all, you can't draw more money out of the bank than you put in!—John M. Aeby.

THE BEST FOR HIM

God does not care for the gift you make after all the wants are supplied. We must be willing to lay the best on the altar, or miss the blessing. The stewardship of money is a searching test of loyalty to Christ. Money presents something we think most about, work hardest to get, and when we pay a part of that precious possession as the Lord's, it spells loyalty.—Selected.

From the Mission Front

God's Logic of Foreign Missions

by P. W. Penner

THE world-wide Christians missions are not based on emotions, altruism, or expediency, but upon the transcendent love and eternal purpose of God. Those who deny the Lordship of Christ and reject the authority of the Scriptures have no urge to carry the gospel to other parts of the world. They may look on missions as pious, self-intended undertakings, which afford outlets for philanthropic instincts in social service and in humanitarian and educational activities, but otherwise they will see littl foreign missionary work to interest realistic men and women of today. But those who accept the authority of the Bible and acknowledge the Lordship of Christ, while not neglecting works of benevolence, have logically, also assumed the obligation to make Christ known to the ends of the earth. If we believe in the deity of Christ and the authority of the Bible we must also believe in foreign missions. The following facts challenge us to actions.

The Great Need of Mankind

It would be easy to enlarge upon the temporal and moral needs of the non-Christian world—the gross ignorance, wretched poverty, filthy conditions, distress, and their social degradations—for these are often appalling. But let us consider only their spiritual need, for they are infinitely more important since they concern eternal destiny as well as present welfare. (I Tim. 4:8). There are many who think that those who have not heard the gospel are not condemned, and that they stand a fair chance of being saved without the knowledge of Christ. The Bible teaches and makes very plain the spiritual needs of mankind, including those of pagans.

"There is none righteous, no not one." (Rom. 3:10, 23). This includes all pagans.

The Bible speaks of those without Christ as "having no hope, and without God in the world." (Eph. 2:12). This certainly is true of all pagans.

"But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers and idolators and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death." (Rev. 21:8). Note the words, "They which commit such things are worthy of death." (v. 32).

Jesus said, "I am the way, and the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father, but by me." (John 14:6). The word "no man" includes all pagans and shows their need of Christ. Therefore, the gospel must be taken to them—that is the supreme purpose of foreign missions. It is true that pagans do the best they know and live up to the light they have. This I have seen repeatedly. The various means they use in seeking to gain "merit" to offset their sins and to avoid or minimize their punishment. Hence, the urgency of getting the good news of Christ and His salvation to them.

The Explicit Command of Christ to His Disciples

To preach the gospel to all nations—was given after the Lord's resurrection on at least three different occasions. It was given to all disciples, not to the apostles only. That command is recorded near the end of each of the four gospels and at the beginning of the Acts of the Apostles (Matt. 28:16-20; Mk. 16:15-18; Lk. 24:47-49; Jn. 20:21-23; Acts 1:8). Were a departing friend to make a last special request of us, would we not do our utmost to fulfill his desire? However, this was not a request of a friend. "It was a command of our Lord. It has been well called the Great Commission for it is the Church's march orders. It was this that made the apostolic church a missionary church. The Great Commission inspired the early believers to witness for their Lord and to preach the Word wherever they might be. (Acts 8:4)." In Africa, India, China, South America, and other mission fields, there are wide areas where there are no missionaries, no Christians, no churches. Let's take India, best known to me, with a population of 400,000,000. There are 640,000 villages without one resident Christian. There is a tremendous call to the Christian. "The restless millions wait! The light whose dawning 'maketh all things new.' Christ also waits—but men are slow and few. Have we done all we could? Have I, have you?"

celebration of
General Conference Mennonite Missions in India

Have you ever thought a missionary's life was dull, uninteresting, and severe? Missionary Harold Ratzlaffs spent thirty days on a cargo vessel with three hundred monkeys, when they came home this year. They saw Mt. Sinai, the Suez Canal, and Gibralter. And they slipped into port between two hurricanes. Surely, as the Christians in India had said, "God saved you for us."

A LAST PRAYER

Father, I scarcely dare to pray,
So clear I see, now it is done,
That I have wasted half my day,
And left my work but just begun;

So clear I see that things I thought
Were right or harmless were a sin;
So clear I see that I have sought,
Unconscious, selfish aims to win;

So clear I see that I have hurt
The souls I might have helped to save;
That I have slothful been, inert,
Deaf to the calls thy leaders gave.

In outskirts of thy kingdoms vast,
Father, the humblest spot give me;
Set me the lowliest task thou hast;
Let me repentant work for thee!

The Primacy of the Holy Spirit

A Message for the Week of Prayer

"And he said unto them, Did ye receive the Holy Spirit when ye believed? And they said unto him, Nay, we did not so much as hear whether the Holy Spirit was given." Acts 19:2.

THE modern Church lacks a spiritual thrust to match its institutional machinery. It is highly organized, but it is not spiritually dynamic. It can build programs, but it finds it difficult to change people. May not the Church's lack of power be due to a lost emphasis?

Lost Identity

Christian doctrines may lose their identity, as well as persons. A man who is unaware of his personal identity wanders about in aimless confusion. He lacks both intent and direction. It is the assumption of these meditations that the Christian Church today is less effective than it should be because of a lost emphasis—the recognition of the primacy of the Holy Spirit.

To the average Christian the Holy Spirit is a vague, puzzling concept. The word "holy" implies that which is set apart or is sacred. The term "spirit," however, is difficult both to define and to grasp. It means literally "breath." "Spirit" may be thought of as the life principle which has the capacity to think and to act. It is that part of a person which endures. In Christian usage, the Holy Spirit refers to the third person of the Trinity. The idea of the Holy Spirit embodies two structural ideas: God as universal Presence, and God as Energy. We may think, therefore, of the Holy Spirit as the manifestation of God as a dynamic, universal Presence. Of course when the Christian refers to the Trinity, he never thinks of the term as implying three Gods. Christian doctrine holds that there is one God Who has expressed Himself in three relationships. I should like to suggest a helpful human analogy. Here is a man who experiences three meaningful relationships: to his mother, he is a son; to his wife, he is a husband; to his children, he is a father. He enjoys a three-fold human relationship, and yet remains the same identical person. In some such fashion, but far more profoundly, God has revealed Himself as Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.

Our lack of positive belief in the Holy Spirit has left us on the one hand, cut from power and, on the other hand cut off from service.

God as Powerful Presence

I am pointing out that we are not as spiritually dynamic as we should be because we have neglected to recognize God as Holy Spirit. Rightfully, we have recognized the unique meaning of Christ as Lord and Saviour. But when we recognize the leadership of the Holy Spirit, we think of God as a powerful Presence at work in us and through us, interceding and intervening, convicting men of sin, challenging the secular conscience of today, and effecting spiritual changes which the Church alone can never achieve.

Emperors Baffled

One word accounts for the amazing creative power of the early Christian Church—Pentecost. Men of mediocre talents became aflame with spiritual passion and were emboldened to face persecution and martyrdom because the Holy Spirit nerved and fortified them to do heroic things. The Roman emperors were baffled by these Spirit-filled Christians: if they imprisoned them, they converted their fellow-prisoners; if they put them to death, their heroic dying inspired unbelievers to seek to know the secret of their valorous conduct. The spiritual earthquake which followed Pentecost, and which shook the Roman Empire, was due to the fact that untutored men and women for the most part, became the responsive channels through which the Holy Spirit quickened and transformed a pagan world.

Most of us, as we search our spiritual lives, must admit that we have been neglectful in recognizing the primacy of the Holy Spirit. We are much like the disciples Paul found in Ephesus. They were living meager Christian lives in terms of the early teaching of John the Baptist. When Paul asked: "Did ye re-receive the Holy Spirit when ye believed?" they said unto him, "Nay, we did not so much as hear whether the Holy Spirit was given."

Ingrown and Self-centered

We, too, need a fuller grasp of God as a living Presence in our individual lives and in the work of the Church. Too often our religious faith has been something we have clutched unto ourselves drawing from it strength and comfort to face personal crises—the horizontal limitation of illness, the ache of sorrow, the threat of death—but, as a result, our religious lives have become ingrown and self-centered. "A cynic," a modern writer states, "is like a dangling electric cord cut off from power at one end and service at the other." Our lack of positive belief in the Holy Spirit has left us on the one hand, cut off from power, and, on the other hand, cut off from service.

Surely, our neglect calls for penitence. Paul, writing to the Ephesians, urged: "Grieve not the Holy Spirit." Let us, therefore, seek forgiveness for our spiritual. failures; let us, as we read the Scriptures, seek for fresh insights as to the place and power of the Holy Spirit in our lives; and let us resolve to be more sensitive to the urgings of the Holy Spirit, and to be guided by Him in all our plans and efforts.—Prepared for the 1949 observance of Week of Prayer by Lloyd E. Foster, Newark, New Jersey.

M. C. C. Notes

Medical Relief in Formosa Continues

Recent reports from our workers in Formosa (Taiwan) indicate that the mobile clinic continues to go from place to place in the mountain areas of the island, serving the aboriginal peoples living there. Among the ailments for which patients are treated are numerous diseases which abound in an unsanitary environment, and among people ignorant of health measures. Assisting in the work along with the M.C.C. personnel are several graduate medical students who are also interested in helping these people in a medical capacity.

Burr Mills to be Sent

A short time ago a request was made for two or three stone burr mills to be used by the Mennonite colonies in Paraguay. Several of these have been located and plans are being made to ship them soon. These mills will serve a useful purpose for grinding kafir and other grains in the colonies throughout the year, but especially during periods when limited river shipping makes it difficult to import white flour.

Voluntary Service Notes

The shortage of housing for members of the service unit at Topeka State Hospital in Kansas has been alleviated through the purchase of a house by an interested individual who is making it available to the M.C.C. It is hoped that by January 1 the quarters would be occupied by the Mennonite young people working at the hospital and serve also as a Mennonite center for others employed in the city.

Again this year the Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges is planning a Summer Program in Europe for students, alumni and others. Approximately half of the summer will be spent in an educational tour and the other part in international service units administered by the M.C.C. Members in this summer's European program pay all of their own expenses. More information can be obtained from any of the Mennonite or Brethren in Christ colleges or the Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pennsylvania.

Help for Old People

In Germany the old people and those who for other reasons are not able to work for wages, are still in great need, although many people have passed the time of their greatest need. The money these people get from state relief is barely enough to pay for poor living quarters, a little fuel and food, with no money left for clothing and other expenses which they might have. Bed linens and towels seem to be the items most often missing, for no agency supplies these and they are unable to buy them. Warm, dark clothing is also in demand, for the houses are cold almost all year round, and hot water and soap are scarce. —from report by Anna Wiens.

During September and October the following relief contributions from the United States and Canada, with total evaluation of $185,785.83, left port:

To Germany: 3½ tons clothing, bedding, shoes, etc., 56 tons flour, 17 tons mixed foods; to Italy: 3 tons clothing and Christmas Bundles; to France: 1 ton Christmas Bundles; to Paraguay: 11 tons clothing, Christmas Bundles, etc.; to Belgium: ¾ ton Christmas Bundles; to England: 245 lbs. Christmas Bundles; to Holland ¾ ton Christmas Bundles; to Austria: 1¾ ton Christmas Bundles; to Japan: 1¼ ton food and 1 ton Christmas Bundles; to Java: ¾ ton Christmas Bundles.

Are You a Nurse?

There is opportunity for several Christian nurses to serve in the M.C.C. unit in Mexico. The project there centers in a medical service to Mexicans and Mennonites, and the lack of adequate nurses at present is limiting the contribution which the unit can render. It is hoped that a nurse may feel a call to this work and be available by January 1.

New Faces at Weiler

During September and October twenty of the oldest and healthiest children were discharged from Weiler, the M.C.C. children's home in France, to enable another group of twenty needy children to be admitted. With the coming of new children to the home, new problems and concerns are likewise felt by the workers. Each child has a unique background and needs to be nurtured "in the Name of Christ." There are 43 children in the home at present.

Leaving on November 19 for relief service at Weiler is Jonas Classen of Hillsboro, Kansas.

Washington Office Continues

The National Service Board for Religious Objectors, which served the Peace Churches during World War II in connection with C.P.S., is being continued largely by support of the M.C.C. and the Brethren Service Commission. Although the present draft law is now quite inactive, it is felt that this channel for observing developments in Washington is helpful in serving the peace interests of our churches.

Personal Notes

Kathryn Long and Alice Richert returned on November 15 from relief service in Europe. Viola Wenger also returned on the same day after contacting European relief units in the interest of determing specific clothing needs. Orie O. Miller left on November 12 for a three-month visit to various foreign relief units.

Results of Peace Team Work Favorable

Reports indicate that the work of the MCC Peace Teams in the California and Minnesota-South Dakota areas during the past summer, was helpful to the churches visited. In both areas the busy harvest season made it difficult for the people to attend all the services. In spite of this, good support and participation was felt by the Team members. Church leaders who observed the work of the teams have expressed strong encouragement for such work in which young people participate in bringing the nonresistant message with a Christ-centered, biblical emphasis.

From the Mission Front

A Challenge to Intercession

by Malcolm Wenger

If you have found that the Christian life is not always smooth and easy but at times difficult and trying, then you will understand a little of what it means to Cheyenne young people to become Christians. In order that you might uphold these young people in prayer, we will tell you a little of them and their problems.

Of the teen-agers who are not yet married, only a few have become Christians. For example, here at Busby there are only twelve who have acknowledged Christ as Saviour. Just at Christmas time (1948) our group was saddened by the death of Marie Eaglefeathers, one of the Christian girls whose picture some of you have seen on the slides. Two other girls, Mae Littlewhiteman and Louise Risingsun recently had to stop school to go to the Tuberculosis Sanitarium at Rapid City, South Dakota, for at least a year.

No Example to Follow

Most of you no doubt have the support of your parents, friends and relatives in living the Christian life. Often these young people face severe tests in trying to live God-honoring lives among friends and relatives, many of whom are not Christians. Take marriage for instance. There is hardly an example of true Christian marriage for these young people to follow. Some of their own homes have been broken by unfaithfulness. Even if there is a desire to establish a Christian home it is not easy to find someone with a similar ideal.

Between Two Ways of Life

From these young people should come the future leaders of the church, leaders that are desperately needed. How can training be given for such leadership? Perhaps part of the answer lies in giving opportunities for schooling in some of our Christian Mennonite schools. With the help of gifts from Christian people, three Cheyenne young people are now attending school at Freeman, South Dakota. Delores Littlebear is a freshman in the Academy, Sylvester Knows-his-gun is a Senior and Ted Risingsun is a freshman in college. Marie Eaglefeathers' brother Milton is considering entering the academy next quarter. These young people are between two ways of life, the old and the new. Their adjustments are not easy.

More Contacts Desired

It is our hope that in the future there might somehow be opportunity for the Christian young people here to have fellowship with other Mennonite young people.

We would like to urge you to set aside some time for prayer for the young people here. Perhaps it would be possible to do this in some of your meetings. Do not forget to pray also for the salvation of the non-Christian youth. Too often lives are ruined by sin before any need of the Saviour is felt.—Workers Exchange, Pacific District Conference.

WHAT THEY SAY . . . . . about The Handbook to the Mennonite Hymnary

"THE HANDBOOK IS A VALUABLE contribution to a more comprehensive knowledge and better understanding of the hymns we love to sing.

"The main content of the HANDBOOK is the well-classified "Notes on the Words and Music of the Hymns." The interesting and yet brief biographical sketches of authors and composers indicate exhaustive research on the part of the author. This information increases much the value of the hymns of the church.

"The seven complete indexes are of particuuar value and greatly increase the usefulness of the HANDBOOK.

"We quote with hearty endorsement the last of the very much worthwhile "John Wesley's Rules for Singing," found on page 39 of the "Introduction."

"Above all sing spiritually. Have an eye to God in every word you sing. Aim at pleasing Him more than yourself, or any other creature. In order to do this attend strictly to the sense of what you sing, and see that your heart is not carried away with the sound, but offered to God continually; so shall our singing be such as the Lord will approve of here, and regard you when He cometh in the clouds of Heaven'."—C. H. Suckau, Grace Bible Institute, Omaha, Nebraska, Grace Tidings.

MENNONITE MEN FOR CHRIST

PACIFIC LAYMAN SUPPORT MISSIONS

The laymen of the Pacific District Conference for a number of years felt the need for an organization of this kind. I believe this same need for a layman's Organization in our Generel Conference has been present for a number of years, but did not come into reality until our last General Conference at Berne, Indiana.

With the needs and purpose as stated in the last General Conference Report for a Layman's Organization our laymen took action upon it, the year following the General Conference, in 1948 at Aberdeen, Idaho. The main reason for organizing was to keep the layman at church and discuss church problems of their own, while all the other organizations—the women's missionary society, the ministers, the young people's group—were meeting at the same time in separate rooms. Up to this time the men were left at liberty outside of the church waiting for the set time to come when all groups would meet for the joint session. As a result many men became tired waiting and took the opportunity to drive around in cars to pass the time. This resulted in many being absent for the joint session.

Interest for such an organization was present at the first layman's meeting. Several men reported on the active brotherhoods in their respective churches. The need for such an organization was supported at our last district conference held at Upland, California by the large attendance at the layman's meeting.

At our last district conference meeting the laymen felt the great need of a definite project, and since the new mission station at Sweet Home, Oregon with Missionary Alfred Schwartz's on the field in that lumber area needed a chapel, attention was directed to this project. The small dwelling house for the missionaries was also used for worship. This proved too small and immediate action was taken by the laymen to raise enough money to pay for the outside structure by buying the concrete bricks at the amount of $1.00 per brick. Naturally the brick did not cost $1.00 per brick, but that was our aim to have each layman in the Pacific District Conference buy at least one brick to raise the $3,600.00 for the outside structure. Booklets with paper bricks in them were secured and sent to all twenty churches. If the donor wishes the paper brick as a receipt with his name written on it he gets it. Some brotherhoods prefer to give in one lump and have no paper bricks as receipts. That is left up to the individual brotherhood. The main aim is to get this work done by the laymen.

The greater number of brotherhoods of the twenty Pacific District Conference churches have sent in contributions up to October 31st ranging from $3.00 to $942.00 per brotherhood. By our next conference which will be held in Dallas, Oregon (most likely next June 1950) the Laymen expect to have raised their required quota for the Sweet Home project.

Action was taken immediately by the Conference authorities to build. At present the Sweet Home Chapel is completed far enough so that the services are held in the chapel. A number of ministers and laymen donated free labor in building this chapel. Where there are willing hands and hearts to give God will bless His Work.

It would be of interest and encouraging if the laymen from the other districts would report of their work in THE MENNONITE.—P. C. Jantz, Odessa, Washington

PRAYERS OF A SENATE CHAPLAIN

I was able to secure through Senator Lucas' office a copy of the prayers offered by Senate Chaplain Peter Marshall—now deceased—during 1947 and 1948. Some excerpts indicate the fine spiritual tone of these prayers.

"... no short circuits"

"Our Heavenly Father, in this moment of prayer, when there is silence in this Senate Chamber, may there not be silence in Thy presence.

"May our prayers be heard.

"May no short circuits be made by our lack of faith, our high professions joined to low attainments, our fine words hiding shabby thoughts, or friendly faces masking cold hearts ..."

"... more important than winning votes"

"... We have an uneasy feeling that we have not been right or consistent and have risked the peace of the world for lesser gains at home. Only if Thy Spirit guide our spokesmen and shape our policies can this Nation regain the respect of the world and merit Thy blessing. Winning peace in the world must become more important than winning votes in America. God, direct our Senators to do what is right for Jesus' sake and the sake of peace and good conscience."

"... we never pray ... work ourselves to death"

"... Often we pray for that which is already ours, neglected and unused. Sometimes we pray for that which can never be ours and sometimes for that which we must do for ourselves.

"How many times we never pray at all, and then work ourselves to death to earn something that is ours for the asking.

"Help us to understand that faith without works is dead and works without faith can never live. Amen."

"....as hard ... and as easy as possible."

"... Direct our Government that it may ever make it as hard as possible to do wrong and as easy as possible to do right. To that end, incline our leaders to the eternal truths Thou hast revealed in the Bible and in Thy Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen."

"... that 'I' is in the middle of sin"

"We confess, O Lord, that we think too much of ourselves, for ourselves, and about ourselves.

MUTUAL AID OFFERS NEW OPPORTUNITIES

(CONCLUSION, MOUNTAIN LAKE COUNCIL OF BOARDS REPORT)

Board of Mutual Aid

The Board of Mutual Aid, in its fifth annual session, reported a favorable year to work, having 43 loans in active operation during the current year. Eleven loans were completely repaid during the current year. As has been the case since the beginning, numerous loans asked for were not granted. This may be because the purposes for which the loans are wanted to do not seem sound, or the board does not feel qualified to take the kind of loans which are requested, or sufficient money may not be available at that particular time. Numerous opportunities were provided for giving information and counsel in connection with the locating of jobs and farms for rent.

The Board decided to try to raise $10,000 in loan capital for the current year. Thus far, out of 72 loans granted, there have been no loses. Three of the 72 have been delinquent but full payment of these deliquent loans is expected.

The Board in session with the conference Executive Committee was designated as the conference agency responsible for all loans issued on a self-liquidating basis. The Executive Committee further recommended that the Board be empowered to investigate the desirability of incorporating as a subsidiary of the General Conference in order to facilitate the financial assistance program. This action was made contingent on conference approval at the coming General Conference session. The Board of Mutual Aid wishes to have conference members in general and district boards and committees consider the work of the Board of Mutual Aid as a desirable place to invest funds which at the present time are often invested in public utilities and secular securities of one sort or another. The Board is endeavoring to provide a safe place of investment, at the same time it is rendering a useful service to its brethren who qualify for loans.

Thus far the Board has loans from 29 individuals, amounting to $26,665, and six conference boards and congregations amounting to $17,645. Congregations are urged to make financial provision for the work of the Mutual Aid Board in their offerings along with provisions for other conference activities.

"If our Lord had thought about Himself, we would not now be bowed in prayer, nor have the liberty in which and for which to pray.

"...Help us to see, O Lord, that 'I' is in the middle of sin, and let no man among us think more highly of himself than he ought to think, to the end that we may be used of Thee in Thy service for the good of all makind.

"Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

Books can be Secured

By writing to one's Senator it is possible, in many cases, to secure a free copy of this 66-page book (Senate Document 170, 80th Congress, 2nd Session). In all cases it can be secured for thirty cents by writing the Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D. C.

Minister's Aid-The "Sleeping Giant"

August Epp, Newton, Kansas(one of two laymen appearing on the program, pointed out that the Conference's "sleeping giant" of Minister's Aid will some day awaken and prove that the ideal of mutual aid has been lost in the matter of the support of aged pastors. The Pension and Ministers Aid Committee is having an increasing number of aged ministers in need, called to its attention.

The preventative side of its task is bringing the eligible younger ministers under the Conference pension plan.

Studies Divorce Problem

Some three-fourths of the divorces involving members of the General Conference Churches are traceable to "mixed" marriages according to a study sponsored by the Doctrine and Conduct Committee. The statistical study on divorce of which the above is one finding is to be written up in pamphlet form by Olin Krehbiel, Berne, Indiana, in collaboration with the Committee.

The Committee is also concerning itself, as authorized by last General Conference, with the problem of stewardship education.

A series of articles on scriptural church discipline are planned for the MENNONITE by this committee.

Mennonite Biblical Seminary

Though the Seminary Board did not meet at Mountain Lake, President Pannabecker did give a brief report pointing to the objectives of the Seminary to prepare men for service in the Kingdom and in the Mennonite churches. The impact of the Seminary was felt in that five students or alumni participated in this Council of Boards session.

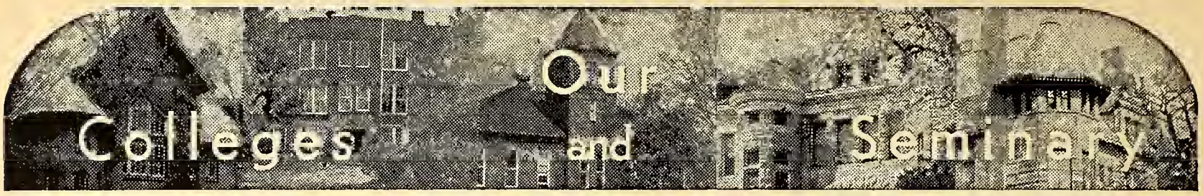
Publication Board—Conference Merchandizer

Some $75,000 passes through the Conference Publication Office in the course of a year as it supplies the churches with various materials.

Marvin Linscheid, Aberdeen, Idaho, speaking for the Board of Publication, reported that in 1950 this Board expects to have ready for distribution a revised edition of C. Henry Smith's Story of The Mennonites and the Minister's Handbook. The Board also plans to employ a book editor to do all the proofreading. Grades four, six and eight of the Summer Bible School Series are ready, completing the entire series.

The Board of Publication is cooperating with the Home Mission Board in supplying German materials to our brethren in South America.

Plans are also underway to devote at least a page of THE MENNONITE every week to devotional material with evangelical warmth.



FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

The Women's Auxiliary of the College is a very active organization. This group, composed of women from all the surrounding Mennonite communities, is buying the kitchen equipment for the new kitchen in Pioneer Hall. This includes sinks, cabinets, stoves, a dishwasher and whatever is needed to furnish such a kitchen for efficient work. During Founders Day this group sponsored a hand-work sale. The day after they prepared and served the meal for the Farmers Achievement Day banquet. Through many such efforts they are raising the money for their project.

Work on Pioneer Hall is going on steadily. Crews of men who donate their labor are working faithfully every day. At present work is being done on the ceiling. Wiring is almost completed and work on the stage will be started next.

President Miller and Dean Gross attended the annual conference of the West Central Area of Church Related Colleges at Omaha, Nebraska on Saturday.

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

A candlelight vesper service was rendered by the College students in the Bethel Mission Church on Sunday, December 4th. The College choir is also planning to present its Christmas concert here on December 18th. The program will consist of parts taken from Handel's "Messiah" and also four other Christmas selections.

Students have finished a course and have now also written their examinations in a first aid course. The course was given by the St. John Ambulance Corps. This has been an effort on the part of the College to follow the suggestions given by the M.C.C. toward emergency relief work. It has been felt that such training might be of benefit and help in times of emergency, such as floods and fire.

TRUEBLOOD TO ADDRESS BLUFFTON

The Aolean Trio gave a much appreciated concert in the chapel Wednesday evening, December 14. The trio consisted of piano, cello, and violin. This was a part of the Bluffton College Music Series.

The Messiah was given Sunday evening, December 11, before an overflow audience in the high school gymnasium. The need of a larger and more comfortable auditorium was very evident. Many expressed the hope that the new building might be completed in time for the concert next year. This was the fifty-seventh rendition of the Messiah by the Bluffton College Choral Society.

D. Elton Trueblood has accepted an invitation to be the commencement speaker next spring. He is the author of The Predicament of Modern Man, Alternative to Futility, Foundations for Reconstruction, and The Common Ventures of Life. He is professor of philosophy at Earlham College.

Important historical documents were recently received from Mrs. N. C. Hirschy relative to the founding of Bluffton College. Original documents in the hand writing of the founders were included. They will be placed in the Mennonite Historical Library.

Dean J. S. Schultz was one of the speakers at a recent meeting of the Northwestern Ohio School Administrators Association in Toledo.

CHRISTMAS AT THE SEMINARY

A lovely feature of our Christmas season here was a period of caroling in the neighborhood. The first stop was in a large apartment building mainly occupied by Japanese Americans, the second place was the Eleanor Club, a large residence building for women somewhat like the Y.W.C.A. We then had a period of caroling out-of-doors in a strategic point in the community.

In the midst of many celebrations of Christmas all over this huge city we are reminded once again of the different practices of Jewish people. Starting on Friday, December 16, Jews of Chicago launched the Hanukah Sabbath, also known as the Jewish Festival of Lights. This festival goes on for an eight day period.

The Sunday school Christmas program was greatly appreciated by everyone. A pageant, 'The Streets of Hearts" was given by the children with the special participation of Mrs. Marvin Dirks' Bible class students. A number of children in the neighborhood took part. The parents of the girls in the Bible club were in attendance thus giving us an unusual outreach in the neighborhood.

SHORT-TERM COURSES AT BETHEL

The Bethel College Extension Department plans to offer three short-term courses during the second half of the winter quarter. Each of these is to be two weeks in length, non-credit, and designed primarily for those that are not now attending school and who can spend 10 days on the Bethel College campus.

The schedule for the short courses follows: church music, January 16th to 27th, taught by W. H. Hohmann and staff; farm carpentry and wood work, January 30th to Feb. 10, taught by P. R. Kaufman; and farm and community, February 13th to 24th, taught by M. Harder.

Each of these courses includes a Bible study period in the afternoon of each day.

The course in church music is for pastors, choir leaders, and others interested. Instructors are: Lester Hostetler, lecturer on the Hymnary; David Suderman, church choir music; Walter Hohmann, organ and instrumental music in the church; and, Joan Veston Entz, junior choir music.

Jottings

—Alexanderwohl Church, Goessel, Kansas: Our congregation had a series of pre-Christmas services December 4-9 with Victor Sawatzky of Hutchinson bringing the message each evening. The Abundant Life, the Birth of Christ in our Hearts, the Provision for the Birth of Christ in our Hearts, the Reception of the Birth of Christ in our Hearts, the Expression of the New Birth, and the Enjoyment of the New Birth were the topics presented in his sermons. Our Thanksgiving offering by the children was $452.70, by the adults $5,473.14, making a total of $5,925.84. Our 1949 relief meat canning project has been completed. The workers from our church served two days at the canning center in Hillsboro, canning, 2,489 cans of beef and 558 cans of lard, a total of 3,047 cans. Henry Hege of Corn, Oklahoma, who spent some time in Germany this summer, spoke at a service in the Goessel High School on November 27 to which the congregations of this community were invited.—Katie Wedel, Corr.

—Bethel College Church, North Newton, Kansas: The Junior Choir School of Bethel College Church, dressed in their new robes, sang Christmas carols of many lands Sunday evening when they presented their first program of the season. Mrs. Joan Veston Enz directs the choir and Mrs. Henry Dyck accompanies the choir. The choir has a full schedule of public appearances during the Christmas season.

—Lorraine Avenue Church, Wichita, Kansas: Christmas in song and story was presented by the choir on December 18, 1949. Ancient carols, English carols, German carols, French carols, and American carols were sung. George S. Stoneback, pastor of Fairfield Church, Fairfield, Pennsylvania, accepted a call to the Lorraine Avenue Church, Wichita, Kansas.

—Gnadenberg Church, Newton, Kansas: Possibly the last commemoration services since the coming of the Mennonites to America 75 years ago was observed in the Gnadenberg Church, east of Newton, on December 4. This congregation arrived at Peabody on December 5, 1874. They came from Michalien, Small Russia, and it is this group that constituted the oldest Mennonite settlement in Russia. Dr. J. W. Kliewer was of the Michalien group.—Mrs. Herbert A. Schmidt, Corr.

—Brudertal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: Another year is dawning and we have many reasons to be thankful for. So far our congregation reports only two deaths for this year. Missionary P. W. Penners are feeling fine and settled in their new home. We have taken part in several projects: Christmas bundles, meat canning, and gathering shoes and clothes for relief. This year, as a congregation, we had our first retreat at the Oswin Mouttet farm, a real summer resort. The young people have a class of leather craft and making other articles which they sold at an auction sale. The proceeds went for young people projects, and retreat grounds, etc. On December 26 our congregation observed its 75th anniversary. Pictures of the past had been gathered for this occasion.—Corr.

—Meadow Church, Colby, Kansas: On December 9 we had our annual business meeting. Sunday School teachers and other officers were again elected.—Mrs. Peter J. Franz, Corr.

—First Church, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania: Although we have been without a pastor since May, God has blessed us by sending us spiritual men to fill our pulpit. We have had ministers of our own Conference, students from the Eastern Baptist Theological Seminary, a professor and students from the Bible Institute of Pennsylvania, and speakers from Youth for Christ. Rev. Ben Rahn from Paso Robles spent November 27 through December 4 with us preaching a series of sermons on the Creative, Redemptive, Typical, Prophetical, Admonitory, and Anticipated "Beacon Lights for Christ." We enjoyed having had Rev. C. J. Landes on June 18, and Rev. J. J. Plenert on December 11 for the morning service. Both were former pastors. Rev. James Roberts will be our supply pastor from December 11 until February at which time he will assume his duties as asscoiate pastor in a Los Angeles Baptist Church.—Corr.

—Zion Church, Souderton, Pennsylvania: The Sixth Annual Rendition of "The Messiah" in our church was given to a capacity audience on Sunday evening, December 4. A repeated rendition on Sunday afternoon, December 11, was broadcast over radio station WBUX. Soloists for both performances were Theodora Brandon, soprano, Emalee Earon, contralto, Milton Sandler, tenor, and Roy Wilde, bass, all of Philadelphia.—Corr.

—Deep Run Church, Bedminster, Pennsylvania: Our pastor and Walter McDowell of the Upper Milford Congregation exchanged pulpits one Sunday morning recently. The Sunday School presented their Christmas program on the 18th of December and the young people sang carols to the shut-in and sick on Christmas eve. The second annual students meeting was held on December 21. We enjoyed having the Bluffton College Girls' Gospel Team with us on the 28th. The Women's Missionary Society held an all day quilting and a covered dish supper followed. A special offering was taken the 25th of December for Relief and Resettlement of War Refugees.—Corr.

—Goessel Church, Goessel, Kansas: The Thanksgiving collection for foreign missions was $1129.35. A Thanksgiving banquet was enjoyed by about a hundred young people on Friday, November 25. The after-dinner speaker was P. W. Goering who talked on "Being Thankful in spite of Hardships and Handicaps." Alice Richert, a returned relief worker, talked and showed pictures of Holland at the Mission Friends Circle's Christmas program.—Mrs. Eldon Rich, Corr.

—Rev. Andrew Shelly will be the Bible Conference speaker at the Oklahoma Bible Academy from January 16-20. In the evening Shelly will speak in the following churches: Enid, January 16; Goltry, January 17; Ringwood, January 18, Orienta, January 19; Medford, January 20.

—Gospel Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: Two of our faithful members passed away recently. On December 14 P. C. Klaassen passed away, having suffered for six years the after affects of a stroke. He reached the age of 81 years and a few hours. On December 23 the funeral of Jacob Stoesz took place. He made his home in the Home for the Aged for the last years; he was a faithful member and took great interest in Bible study hours. He reached the age of 80 years. The King's Co-workers Mission Society went out caroling and carrying out fruits. After they finished Mrs. Suderman invited them for a lunch. —Corr.

Bible History in the Earth

By T. H. Stillwell

Today we know more about life in Bible times and more about the Bible itself than did the translators of the King James Version of the Bible in 1611. Those are daring words. Had you ever wondered how that could be? The story of the archeologist gives the answer. It is because of him that we today enjoy such extensive information and knowledge. It is because of him that the new Revised Standard Version of the New Testament is so thorough and accurate.

WIND, sand, cold, heat, and man's folly, all part of the relentless, destroying hand of time, change the face of the earth over the long ages. Once-busy cities have disappeared. Many of the centers of living of the Bible are now just names. But archaeologists have studied ancient Bible lands and have made discoveries that not only have proved the record but also have added greatly to our detailed knowledge of the Bible. These are the men who find cities that have disappeared.

Let us suppose that we are scientists who have set up a camp in a promising region of the Holy Land. We are looking at a great mound that the natives think is a natural hill. We know that it is an artifical, man-made "tell," which was once an old city, the sharp outlines of which have long ago disappeared. Grass and trees cover it. A few exploring checks have convinced us that we may find interesting history beneath all the dirt and rubble that is now coated with green vegetation.

We have the past study and the present know-how to handle the excavation of the mound. A crew of native workers have been recruited who will be rewarded for any unusual finds they locate during their careful digging. The rewards will be made in addition to their daily pay. An American steam shovel could eat up the dirt in a hurry—and ruin everything in the process. No rushing methods will be used at our mound.

As representatives of an institution, with funds that took a great deal of time and effort to raise, we have received permission from the government of the land to dig at this spot. A survey has been made, and the site has been registered. We have made a bargain with the Government to share our finds. Our survey has been marked off into squares and numbered, so that we can locate anything we find in an accurate fashion. Sub-numbers will be added for each square. All the objects found will have to be tagged with a number and sub-number.

Several members of our party understand the language of the region. We are thoroughly familiar with its history, laws, and customs. In addition to a good knowledge of past explorations in the district, we are well posted on work done throughout the Holy Land. We know ancient history in a very detailed way. Any laymen who think that we archaeologists are merely men with a curiosity concerning the past and a pick and shovel are sadly mistaken.

We expect to use the best and most expensive system of uncovering the mound—the total clearance method. Everything will have to be removed and a complete record made as we go along.

Suppose we discover some valuable objects under the dirt and rubbish of the tell. In a general way, how can we date our finds? That question brings us to a consideration of what has been done before—the labors of pioneers in the science of backing up Bible history, with material evidence. The first great help came many long years ago.

When the soldiers of Napaleon were encamped near the Rosetta mouth of the Nile River, in 1799, a stone, later to become famed as the "Rosetta stone," was uncovered while trenches were being dug. On this stone is a message inscribed in three different kinds of writing. One is Greek, another Egyptian hieroglyphics, and the third Egyptian handwriting known as demotic. Not until 1822 did a French scholar, Champollion, guess that the Egyptian was the same as the Greek, which learned men could read. Deciphering followed.

As archaeologists about to explore a Holy Land mound, we are greatly indebted to Sir Flinders Petrie, especially concerning the dating of our finds. He was a great explorer of the territory of ancient Egypt and the Holy Land. While he was working in Palestine, he noticed that fragments of pottery and well-preserved pottery objects varied from level to level during excavation work. He began to study this difference. By relating other objects with the pottery at different levels he figured out the approximate time in which they had been made. This pioneer principle, first used in 1890, has naturally been improved upon, and by using it men are able to assign approximate dates to various sites. Petrie is the scientist who discovered a monumental stone at Egyptian Thebes on which is the earliest known use of the word "Israel" as the name of the people in Palestine.

As explorer-scientists, we would also owe a debt of thanks to two Americans, Dr. Clarence S. Fisher and Dr. George A. Reisner, who were the first men to use a scientific method for excavating. They used a survey, marked off with squares and a number system for keeping track of their work and finds, just like we intend to use in uncovering our mound. This was back in 1909. The old hit-or-miss trenching system often destroyed valuable objects and ruined chances for accurate dating.

Heinrich Schliemann was the explorer who, in 1870, dug on the site he believed to be ancient Troy, or Troas as it was known in the time of Paul. Learned men once thought that Homer's Troy was a myth. They were proved wrong.

In 1922, Howard Carter discovered the tomb of Tutankhamen, popularly known as "King Tut," in the Valley of the Tombs of the Kings, near Egyptian Thebes. Other tombs, with interesting and unusually valuable treasures, have been found by archaeologists at Sakkareh and in the Delta region.

Nelson Glueck located what has been identified as King Solomon's great copper- and iron-smelting center at Eziongeber on the shore of the Gulf at 'Akabah, an arm of the Red Sea. The principle of the Bessemer blast furnace was used there about 3,000 years ago. Included in the excellent work of Nelson Glueck is a thorough knowledge of the River Jordan region.

During 1932-1938, J. L. Starkey worked at the site of the ancient fortress city, Lachish, located on the road to Gaza. The Lachish letters—military correspondence written on bits of pottery about 589 B.C. —are important because the language used is the Hebrew of Jerusalem in the time of the propeht Jeremiah. King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon was marching against the Jews at this time.

Among the accomplishments of William F. Albright and John Garstang was the excavation done at the site of the ancient city of Jericho, the place where the walls fell down, as related in the Bible account of Joshua and the Israelites who marched around the walls of the city. Nineteen levels of this ancient site were explored.

The work of James H. Breasted, distinguished scholar of Egyptian history and authority on the ancient times of mankind, at Megiddo Mound, once an old fortress city that controlled the Plain of Esdraelon and the Carmel Pass to the country of the pharoahs, has added to our knowledge of Bible times, Megiddo was one of King Solomon's chariot cities. Its water supply—a spring reached by a shaft and steps—is an engineering feat. The name is Hebrew is said to mean, "Place of Troops."

We will recall that the Bible mentions that Ur was the ancient home of Abraham. Sir Leonard Woolley has made some wonderful discoveries at the site of this ancient city, the history of which fades away into the mists of time. Through his work we know a great deal about the culture of this center in the Euphrates River valley. In the pre-Flood level, he discovered clay figurines. Some of the gold objects found in the royal tombs of Ur were made with such skill that they have not been equaled by modern artists

We can see that we, as Biblical archaeologists, about to begin the excavation of a Holy Land mound, owe a lot to pioneer scientists. Time has temporarily hidden many of the details of Bible history, but trained men are working at the job of uncovering missing evidence.

Can a Student Study When He is Hungry?

By Marvin B. Dress From Regensburg, Germany

We ate a delicious breakfast together, two slices of black bread spread with vegetable fat and sprinkled with salt. Why do I say "delicious?" Because any breakfast is better than none at all, and most of the time the day's diet begins with lunch.

Lunch consisted of a thick soup of cabbage and potatoes which always tastes good when one is hungry—and the average university student in Germany today is almost always hungry.

The evening meal varied somewhat from the morning meal—the bread was white. Like breakfast, it was eaten in the privacy of one's own room.

Once a week, usually on the weekend, a small piece of sausage is purchased to go with the evening meal. Then again it might be varied with some fried potatoes prepared over the little electric hot plate which almost every student owns.

Sunday dinner will be the only really decent meal of the week where, at the local canteen a fairly tasty dinner can be had for seventy-five pfennings, or about eighteen cents. Otherwise, the meals throughout the week are a drab assortment of alternating monotonies.

Yes, in spite of a large measure of economic recovery in other areas of present day German society, the student is often not even decently fed. Efforts to supplement the diet of students in Germany have been made and still continue in the form of the "schulspeisung," or school relief meal, which is usually a thick soup or cooked cereal.

For the payment of a small fee per month, any student can receive this ration; and I believe all of them do, for the little tin cup or pail is seen attached to every child's bag of books. It is the necessary middleman between the full ladle and the empty stomach.

At first it was difficult for me to understand why the average student's diet in Germany was so poor with an evident abundance of food on the market. I soon learned some of the many reasons why.

Coupled with all the personal losses that the war inflicted—the destroyed homes, the clothing and personal effects that millions of refugees had to leave behind them in the East—came the currency reform in 1948. By this reform, any family savings that might have survived the war, were completely liquidated.

As a result, student veterans, for example, are compelled to live on a stipend that averages $10.00 per month. Other students seldom have more for all of the expenses of the living and studying, and since the prices for of tuition, room, and books are fixed, the diet is the only place where he can economize.

Yet, there is no bitterness, no despair. There is only a firm resoluteness, and a certain pride in the fact that he remains a student whose intellectual hunger still prevails over the physical.—The Witmarsum

Volunteers Serve with STICA in Paraguay

by Darrell Albright and Robert Snyder

Fresh out of Voluntary Service School in Akron, we, Robert Snyder and Darrell Albright, found ourselves sailing high above the blue-green waters of the Atlantic on our way to serve in a country we read about when we were kids—Paraguay. Through the cooperation of the Mennonite Central Committee and the Institute of Inter-American Affairs, we two were chosen to work on a new experiment that would give a Southern outlet for those who are willing to give two years of their life in some kind of service for the Lord.

S.T.I.C.A., Servicio Tecnico Interamericano de Cooperacion Agricola, or Stica, as it is called, is an agricultural development operation jointly sponsored by the Paraguayan Ministry of Agriculture and the Institute of Inter-American Affairs, the Food Supply Division.

Stica has a very large program here in Paraguay which includes the following: Supervised Credit of Home Improvement and Resettlement. They sponsor the National Institute of Agronomy which is the training center, and it is designed to serve as a base for testing the application of scientific agricultural practices in Paraguay and their adoption to Supervised Credit and the various Stica projects. They have a Storage program and Surveys of Soils, Forests, Farm Census, and Food Consumption. Stica's Cattle Development program is very large, which includes Artificial Pasture Fattening Experiments, Model Farm and Dairy, Breeding Service, and the project we are connected with —Estancia Barrerito.

Estancia Barrerito is a 27,000 acre cattle ranch about one hundred miles to the south-east of Asuncion. The land is mostly rolling prairie, very few trees, and a small river cutting the northern third from the rest. The ranch has over 6,000 head of cattle with a large experiment program.

Our work here at the farm has been from riding horseback to building an airport. When we first came here we were working down fresh plowed sod in plots of four acres each, so they could be planted into shade trees for the cattle. We have also prepared ground for sugar cane, soya beans, and alfalfa. Our latest work has become very interesting. The ranch has purchased a T. D. 18 Diesel International with a bulldozer. The diesel was turned over to us and since we have made miles of drainage ditches, a two-mile strip of road, and a good start on a landing strip, 3,250 ft. by 130 ft. We have yet to finish the airport, surface tanks, miles of roads, and many other jobs.

Life on the ranch is somewhat different from that at home. The food is pretty much the same day after day. Soup, first course, meat and usually rice for the second course, third course of salad, fourth course we usually have a rice dessert, which is then topped off with a cup of Brazilian coffee—but now that our bodies are used to it we find it very nourishing and good. We have electric lights and as soon as they finish the well they are drilling we will also have running water. In our dining room, which is apart from the Paraguayans' mess hall, we have a radio that gives us music, news, football games, Christian programs, etc., from the States. Our boss, Ejnar Faber, is the only other person who speaks English; therefore, the need for the Spanish language became very important.

The ranch has well over twenty employees who do their tasks from Monday to Saturday noon. The people are all the happy-go-lucky type and make play out of their work. They can't understand why we would want to leave the United States to come and work in Paraguay, and why we don't drink, smoke or dance. The more I see the spiritual need of the world, the more I see the matchless grace of God. I think this is leaving us an open field to spread the teachings of Jesus by word and deed.

We go to Asuncion to be with our other unit members the first week-end of every month. We attend English services then. When we are here at the ranch our spiritual study and fellowship is done by devotions, discussions, and meditations.

Comments by the Editor-- "Some New Year Resolutions"

An ancient custom and superstition was that to have a happy new year, you must scare the evil spirits away and through luck and magic you could have a successful new year. The horns, bells, and noise which heralds in the new year comes from this superstition. It was thought evil spirits may be frightened away by noise. It was important to be able to start the new year right, for then you would stand a good chance of ending it successfully. This superstition gripped the souls of people and controlled their attitudes and practices in its day.

New Year's resolutions, thus, come from this ancient superstition. We make much fun of making resolutions, the general line of thought being that we never live up to them anyway. Doubtless, that is true. Especially is it true if our resolutions are of a demanding type; to resolve not to sneak Jack's girl away from him may not be at all difficult to abide by!

To join the company that makes resolutions, here are a few to consider:

a) I resolve to find ways of carrying the spirit of Christmas through the year, by visiting the poor, giving aid to the needy and sick—doing this not only at Christmas time, but all the time.

b) I shall try to actively participate in at least one church activity through the year, be it the choir, the young people's society, the church athletic and recreational program, retreat, or special discussion groups, or other special activities.

c) I shall read my Bible daily and seek guidance in prayer and devotional living.

d) I shall seek to attend public worship and Sunday school once a week.

e) I shall seek always to live my Christian profession. Based on the love of Christ, I shall ever practice love in my relationships with others—forgiving my enemy, being slow to pass judgment, seeking the welfare of others at all times through genuine concern seeking to serve always rather than to seek selfish gain.

f) In my personal life, I shall strive always to exemplify the Christ and live as he would live so that with Paul I may say, "Not I, but Christ liveth within me."

g) In community and national life, I shall ever be aware that my Christ is a redeemer whose love is the greatest power that I know. My community and national relationships will be guided by that.

h) I shall seek to do my part in missions and evangelism by being concerned for the welfare of those about me as well as those in far lands.

What would you add to such a list to make up your set of resolutions?

M.C.C. Makes Voluntary Service Assignments

The young people enrolled in the sixth Orientation Class at the MCC headquarters and studying from Nov. 18 to Dec. 18, have been assigned as follows: Calvin Redekop to Espelkamp, Germany; Richard Yoder, Herbert Hess and Charles Allison to Gulfport, Miss.; Cernon Nisley and Mayard Miller to Topeka, Kansas; and Helen Fehr to Cuauhtemoc, Mexico.

The work project connected with the training program for these volunteers consisted of home repair in the "slum" section of a local city. Arrangements for this work were made through the Mennonite mission serving the colored people of the city. It was shocking to see such deplorable living conditions so near to a large Mennonite community.

Liquor Ads. Yes or No?

Christian people of many denominations are much interested in the hearings to be held soon before the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee on the temperance issue.

The issue is couched in Senate Bill 1847 (its equivalent is House Bill 2428) which, if enacted into law, would prevent the advertising of liquor across state lines. No mailings, magazines, newspapers, news reels, radio broadcasting, or similar means would be lawful for interstate liquor advertising. (Advertising within states would still be allowed!) Interstate solicitation of liquor sales by these methods would not be lawful.

January 12-13 Set for Hearing Those in Favor

Two days, January 12-13, have been set aside by the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee to hear organizations and persons in favor of the bill. Many church groups will testify.

A very subtle part of the technique is the plan to hear those opposed to the bill at a later date. As this is witten, the exact date has not been set, but will likely be the last week in January. At this time the liquor interests will testify against passage of the bill.

Church People Seeing Senators at Home

Many church people in favor of the passage of the bill the planning to visit their Senators and Representatives while the latter are still at home before returning to the capitol. There are reports here that other church people are planning to visit the Capitol City to see their legislators and to listen to the hearings.

Personnel of Senate Committee

The personnel of the Senate committee which will hold hearings in January is as follows: Edwin C. Johnson, Colorado, chairman; Estes Kefauver, Tennessee; Ernest McFarland, Arizona; Warren Magnusen, Washington; Frances Myers, Pennsylvania; Brien McMahan, Connecticut, Herbert O'Conner, Maryland; Lyndon Johnson, Texas; Charles Tobey, New Hampshire; Clyde Reed, Kansas (deceased); Owen Brewster, Maine; Homer Capehart, Indiana; John Bricker, Ohio. The addresses of these men is Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

The House may hold hearings on their bill later in the session.

Beyond Our Own

CHICAGO. A major Protestant group took a stand against what is called legalization of gambling "including bingo."

In the meantime, Chicago officials were considering the widespread bingo playing in their city. Asked his official attitude, State's Attorney Boyle said research by his legal staff showed it to be gambling. He added that it had been so construed by the courts of many states, including Illinois.

The question put to Chicago's Mayor Kennelly was: "Do you approve of bingo when conducted for a worthy cause?" Quipped Kennelly: "I'm not approving of any gambling."—Moody Monthly CHICAGO. Youth for Christ is now reaching an estimated one million young people, Robert A. Cook, president, said at the organization's World Vision Conference held in Chicago October 22-30. The present figure was reached with the inauguration of Youth for Christ meetings in four new countries: Yugoslavia, Burma, Guatemala, and Honduras.

Summarizing future aims of the organization, Dr. Cook expressed the desire to reach the goal of "evangelizing the world in this generation." Youth for Christ meetings are now held in fifty-nine countries all over the world.—Moody Monthly

NEW YORK CITY. The first nation-wide interdenominational planning conference of Protestant home mission leaders in over 20 years will take place at the Home Missions Congress in Columbus, Ohio, January 24, to 27. The meeting is sponsored by the interdenominational Home Missions Council of North America.

One of the crucial issues to be discussed by the group will be the role of home missions work among special language, racial, religious, and economic groups.

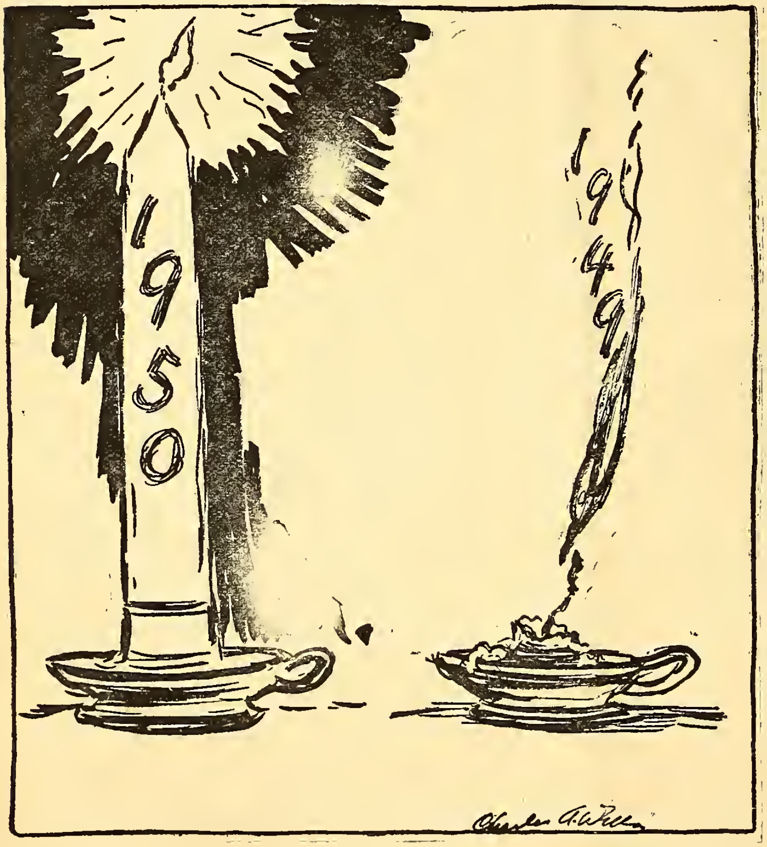
Included in this phase of the Conference's work is an evaluation of the church program to the nation's 350,000 Indians, who are being dealt with "by an outdated system of paternalism and racial inequality."

The question of Christian-Jewish relations will also be aired, the president of the organization said, adding that "home missions need to develop a truly Christian answer to the questions raised by Anti-Semitism in the Church and their implications to its program of evangelism."

The Congress will also act on the relationship of religious institutions to state and national governments, especially in the field of education and child welfare.

Among the Church leaders who will address the Congress are: Reinhold Niebuhr, Union Theological Seminary, New York; Ralph Sockman, Christ Church, New York; Mark A. Dawber, co-executive secretary, Home Missions Council; Hermann N. Morse, general secretary, Board of National Missions, Presbyterian Church, U.S.A.; and others.

Theme of the Congress is "Home Missions for a Christian World." A special feature of planning for the gathering is the inclusion of a representative youth delegation, with a view to stimulating interest in mission work.



THE GIFT OF TIME

By Charles A. Wells

A new year, like youth, can seem so endless in its storehouse of time. In January we have endless time for all those things that we want to see accomplished in the year. In December it is as if some thief had stolen into our lives and made off with a large portion of our days. The thief is neglect,—procrastination. He has robbed so many lives of success and the richness of experience that had been anticipated. One of the great benefits of the Christian faith is its teaching that we are responsible to God for all things. We are stewards who have given many treasures that we are to invest and not squander. So the devout person faces the end of a year with a deep awareness; he wants to mark the passing of the year with prayer and meditation. Let the bells then ring and the fun begin,—after he has taken God into his accounting. It is no wonder that those who have made a cheap and wasteful failure of their years want to dim the New Year bells in an alcoholic fog. The question all must face at the year's end—what have we done with the light that has now been spent?

Conference Column

FROM THE CONFERENCE PRESIDENT

Nineteen hundred and fifty is a General Conference year. There will be much planning and careful preparation for this meeting of the 32nd Session of the General Conference to be at Freeman, South Dakota, August 23 to 30.

But we must bear in mind that the most important preparation is a spiritual preparation throughout the churches of the Conference. More than the giving of reports and announcing future plans, the General Conference should be a time for hearing and obeying the voice of God. More than the delightful experience of meeting friends, it should be a time for meeting God. It must not be simply a series of varied programs; it must be a high religious experience.

To make possible such abiding spiritual results, let us as churches, boards, committees, and members, everywhere make careful spiritual preparations by opening our own hearts to the infilling of the Spirit, by renewed consecration to His will, and by sincere prayer for God's continual and complete guidance in every phase of planning and preparation. The time to begin is NOW. "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much."—J. N. Smucker, Bluffton, Ohio.

Editorials

WHEN ONE CONSIDERS the fact that the Chinese have had an irrigation system as long as the Egyptians have had theirs, and one recalls (as Pearl S. Buck wrote in the New York Times Magazine of October 13, 1949) the fact that the Chinese people have had "Four thousand years of political experience of every sort, including even a variety of communism, centuries ago." one is not too ready to draw up a generalization writing off China once and for all to Russian Communism and consequent inability to embrace the Gospel. Even the experience of the last fifty years would instruct us to be extremely cautious. In 1900 the Boxer uprising swept across North China with 10,000 Chinese Christians plus 189 missionaries and children of missionaries suffering martyrdom. But as before "The blood of the martyrs became the seed of the Church." Again in 1927 the Church of China staggered under the blow of intense anti-Christian and anti-foreign feeling, but came through purified and strengthened if not in numbers then surely in quality. Another blow came in the period of 1937 to 1945 when the victorious Japanese Army destroyed or commandeered churches lying in their path, causing complete disruption of the Christian communities before them. But after the war the gospel has gone forward steadily. In the past the gospel has displayed its incomparable vitality and ability to survive in China under the most intolerable conditions.

Christianity has died where it was merely preached. It has never died where it was really lived. This is the supreme challenge in China.

NOW THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH OF CHINA faces a fourth great challenge. Communism, which took root in China in 1922 under Sun-Yat-Sen at which time the party was organized and Russian advisors brought in. Once an insignificant force in China, communism has developed very rapidly during recent years. China now is a communistic state. Nevertheless, an outstanding work is being done not only in Christian hospitals and the relief of human suffering, but also in numerous and efficient Christian schools. Churches are growing in numbers as well as in spiritual strength. Missionaries have decided to stay at their posts. How they will fare is difficult to determine. What will be the policy of the Communists toward the Church? While the Church and the Communists have in common the concern for racial equality and economic improvement, they are at opposite poles on the fundamental reality or non-reality of the spiritual basis of life. Practically, youth will be educated the communist way. Churches may not be allowed to have connections with churches abroad. Congregations have been forbidden to give anything to pastors thus involving a self-supporting ministry. Missionaries may find that they are not welcome by the regime.

THE CHURCH, consequently, must become aware of certain needs that the crisis calls for. Is it possible that the Church's appeal has been weak because it has ministered in too restricted a way to the soul. Jesus ministered to the whole man. If the future of our service to China is to be effective we will need men and women (in view of the crisis, preferably single) who are filled with the Holy Spirit but also filled with wisdom that will help them make a technical contribution to a China that insists upon alleviating its great social and economic ills. Then, too, the Church must realize anew that the Kingdom of God does not rise or fall with the presence of certain political regimes. Therefore, Christians should beware lest periodically their spiritual dynamic for just such crisis be drained away by participating in wars that work in direct contradiction to missions. By no stretch of the imagination can we assume that God must have wars to fulfill His plans. A question is raised as to how much the Church should wait for quarreling governments as she seeks to send her ambassadors to the ends of God's creation. A measure of sacrifice is demanded that is hitherto unknown to us. "God forbid that I should sin in ceasing to pray for you," must become our attitude toward our fellow Christians in China. Pray for the older and more favored churches as well as those younger and weaker. Finally, there must be a renewed willingness to suffer and, if need be, lay down our lives as did our Saviour. In China, in America, our Lord Jesus Christ still seeks those who will desire to "know him in the fellowship of His sufferings."—J.J.E.

If we have not enough in our religion to drive us to share it with all the world, it is doomed here at home.—Evangelical Visitor

WORK GOES ON UNHINDERED ON NORTH CHINA FIELD

Mrs. Louise Schrag from Shantung Province, North China, states in a letter written in November that: "The work goes on unhindered. We treat about 100 patients a day for sores, etc. We baptized about 200 persons in the past year. The Chinese are very kind to us."

Mrs. Schrag is a missionary under the China Mennonite Mission Society whose mission field is adjacent to the General Conference mission field in North Chna, all in in Communist territory now.

Christmas Eve, 1948, found a group of five missionaries of various groups still miles from their destination, Chengtu. Someone mentioned an inn, but there was a mission near by and we were all cared for hospitably. We remarked, as we thought of other Christmases, that there had been no room for Him in the inn, but because of His coming there was room now for us, in the far west of China.

What a joy it was to greet my co-workers on Christmas day. We were eight then. In the days that followed, the various aspects of the work came into focus, and my assignment to student work began to take on form. However, first you should hear something of our situation here.

Something of Our Situation

Szechwan means "Four Rivers" and is one of China's largest, most fertile and therefore most densely populated provinces. It is larger in area than France. The 60 million people who live here on this vast plain, 2,500 miles in extent, enjoy an altitude of 200 feet. Because of the mountain ranges which enclose it, it is a kingdom within itself and its history goes back more than three thousand years. These mountains are probably also part of the reason that our government has not yet changed. The four rivers are harnessed to provide irrigation for the countless fields of rice and sugar, vegetables, and fruits. This system is not quite so old as that of Egypt, but it is effective. One of our rare excursions out of the city took us to Kuanhsien to see the opening of the barrier which would start the water distribution in the spring.

Many Schools and Colleges

Chengtu is the capital and is a walled city of about 600,000 people. It surprised me to find some modern streets, buildings, electric lights, and in general, the appearance of a big city anywhere in the world. Naturally this applies only to certain parts. Foreign style dress is quite common, though sometimes with adaptations. There are many schools and colleges here.

Everywhere one goes, the dialect is a bit different, but our Mandarin is quite readily understood here, though we cannot always understand what the people here say. However, we are all learning. English is the "other" language for high school and college students, and they are anxious to speak it at every opportunity. We direct them to Bible classes and many enter. "My word shall not return to me void" often comes to mind.

A Parish With 150,000

After a survey of the city in 1946 when some of our missionaries came from Paokim, it was deemed wisest to settle in the west section. There have been Christian churches, schools, and hospitals in Chengtu for many years, but not many in this section. The population in this corner is 150,000, surely a large enough parish. At first, weekly services were held in the home of the missionaries but by the time I came, additional property had been rented, and there was a small chapel in constant use for church services, Sunday school, English and Bible classes, women's meetings and prayer meetings.

Babies Are Ushered In

Beside the city church, in April, God enabled us to open a gospel-preaching place in the west suburb, on a busy main street. A few days later a clinic opened there too, as well as a maternity center. Clinic is held every day but Sunday and there are nightly preaching services, but babies are ushered in whenever they arrive. They hung up a record lately when there were three born in one night. About four hours after delivery, they go home in a ricksha. The post-natal visits provide a good opportunity to invite the family to learn more of the gospel, and many doors have been opened to us this way.

Once a week the truck goes out with a number of our church folks and this forms a fine preaching platform and group. Many people are reached in this way

by P. J. Boehr

HOW true it seems from our end what Haggai the prophets said long ago: ". . . and I will shake the heavens, and the earth and the sea, and the dry land. And I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come."

They Are Approaching From Three Sides

Here we are now (December 3, 1949) in the capital of China, which, as a radio-news had it, was just being arranged for the new provisional capital, when they were again planning on removing the capital to Taiwan (Formosa). We hear today that a vanguard of the National Government boarded plane for a new capital, and maybe within two weeks we'll be "liberated." They are approaching this new capital from three sides, one side most likely is our precious "Paochi Side."

We Have Little Fear

So we, in a very peculiar situation here in West China, are looking forward to the Happy Christmas season, when we will often read the song of the angels on Bethlehem's plains, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace among men in whom He is well pleased." Never have Frieda and I been in such a situation at this season of the year. We seem to have little fear and are kept busy with Bible classes and interviews with precious hungry hearts.

A Home Has Opened

How happy we are that a home very near us has opened up to the gospel. At times three of one family, the Ch'in family, come out either to the "Number 12" (newly purchased) mission place, where we are in the midst of a two-weeks inquirers' Bible class, or to our upstairs apartment just a few doors from them. There are eight children, the youngest two being twin-boys, who now grow up in the church, praise God! One of the four Ch'in daughters seems genuinely saved and has the joy of the Lord in heart and face. It is such a delight to read chapter after chapter in our home with these hungry hearts, and they read so well, and grasp the truth so quickly. There are nine in our class at "Number 12" and a few dozen at the West Suburban class—this as it were under the war-cloud, and with a change of government before our eyes that is not friendly toward Christianity or any form of faith. Yet we hear that there are also Christians in their ranks. From some quarters we hear that missionaries have been promised to return to their mission fields in other parts of China, which also seems-to be a hopeful sign. Pray with us for the continued open door for the gospel.

Avoiding 'International Incidents'

We are in a barricaded city now, with almost every street entrance having a high pole-gate, which can be closed anytime it is deemed necessary. This may be for a few days at a time should the "turnover" be slow or the looting danger be prevalent. Hence, as we from our home address go to our recently purchased chapel and residence property at Number 12 Ssu Dao Kai, we must pass through three stockade gates. Going up town to the jeweler or, photographer, we must go through around a dozen such stockade gates. The streets are full of people, cars, trucks, rickshas, men- or women-drawn coal and goods, wagon, cyclists, and pedestrians.

These folks seem to hear no bell or horn but walk right in the center of the street as though they wish to be touched or harmed so they can "kick up a fuss." It is interesting to hear 'Willa' Kuyf say that she must go slowly on her bike through the streets to "avoid an international incident." Both Frieda and I are out on bikes often too, and it's the same for us. In general, we are dealing with a friendly people who seem to bear the unbearable but can be unruly too.

Not So Looting-conscious

It is feared right now that looting may take place most any night, when the ruling elements withdraw, hence the many stockades all over the city. Last night our landlord took bedding, clothing, and what, not, upstairs into his attic which is accessible

We Give up to Easily

by Marie J. Regier

UNLESS you have tried it probably you are not aware of the difficulties involved not only in doing mission work itself but merely in getting to the field. It takes much time and energy of many individuals in order to get one missionary there.

Last summer when people asked me about my plans for the future I said I hoped to get back to China if possible. With the Communists making steady headway and many missionaries and other people returning to this country I wondered whether there was any transportation at all. I was surprised to find no difficulty in getting transportation either by boat or by air, nor is it difficult to get a Chinese visa; but, it is difficult to get a Hongkong transit visa and Hongkong is the gate into China at present. Hongkong belongs to Great Britain and is full of refugees. Great Britain therefore tries to keep out as many people as possible.

By Boat or Plane?

After the Mission Board decided that they were willing to let me go and join our small force on the field, definite plans were made for my return. We considered going by freighter from New Orleans, by passenger boat from San Francisco, or by plane either from San Francisco or New York. It was finally decided that I go by plane since the Communists were making such rapid progress.

Menno Travel Service informed me that it was next to impossible to get a Hongkong transit visa in New York and suggested my getting one in Kansas City. But before I could get one I had to send information as to when and how I was going and under whose auspices. By the time I could send the necessary information, Kansas City had orders to issue no further visas. The consul suggested by-passing Hongkong. I wired this information to Menno Travel Service. Menno Travel Service thereupon bought a ticket to Calcutta via London, Brussels, Damascus. From Calcutta I was supposed to go to Ch'engtu via China airlines. But before I could even get this information the China airways were suspended. This idea had to be given up.

Everything Looked Hopeful

Then S. F. Pannabecker, a Mission Board member, tried to see what he could do in Chicago. He gave us the welcome information that the Chicago consul merely wanted an assurance that I had a place to stay while in Hongkong and a way to get out. This assurance I had, thanks to W. C. Voth who is in Hongkong. He had gotten me reservations in the Lutheran home and on the Lutheran plane, the "St. Paul." Everything looked hopeful, I merely had to fill out some blanks which I did posthaste by rushing to Newton from where I could send the information straight back to Chicago.

Marie Regier

On the strength of these prospects a farewell service was arranged for me, some of the men postponing their trip to the Council of Boards meeting in Mountain Lake for several hours in order to be at the service. The tone of the service though serious was one of hope and victory. Not least did I appreciate the fact that one of our Chinese Christians, Grace Liu, now student at Bethel College sang on the occasion.

Too Hasty!

We had been too hasty, however. I had expected the final word on Tuesday but it failed to come. Neither did it come on Wednesday. I found out then that in spite of the former promise the application had to be sent to New York. Chicago could no longer grant visas. From New York the refusal came back directly, whereupon the British consul in Chicago wrote an airmail letter to Hongkong. Pannabecker also wrote to Voth to see if the latter could do anything over there to press matters. That is as far as we are at present.

To get into Ch'engtu now before the Communists do is an impossibility. If Ch'engtu has not yet fallen, it will do so any moment. (It has. Ed.) Very likely we will now have to wait until Communist China has been recognized by other nations, Great Britain and probably the United States. Perhaps when new international relations have been established it will be possible to get visas. So it still means waiting.

But God Called Us There!

In the face of so many obstacles is it still worthy trying? It seems to me sometimes we give up much more readily in the spiritual field than we do in others. The farmer continues year after year even though there are droughts and floods. He does not even move away when he knows tornadoes will come ever so often. Scientists make thousands of experiments, all of them seemingly failures, before the thing sought for is finally discovered. Biographies of Edison and Madam Currie make one realize the enormous amount of faith necessary in material realms. The apostle Paul did not give up. He went right on to Jerusalem in spite of friends' warnings when he knew that arrest and suffering awaited him there. Because of his steadfastness Paul was able to go to Rome and win souls for Christ there. I am no apostle Paul, and my strength is small and my faith often very weak. I do tremble when I think of what may be in store for those who stay on, and yet if God called us there, should we hold back? The Bible nowhere gives us to understand that God calls us only in times of peace and not in times of danger. It is up to Him to see us through.

The Doors Wide Open

Moreover, the work in China is a great work. Especially now the doors are wide open to the gospel. If you have read the letters which our missionaries have written, you know what glowing accounts they give and yet the workers are so few, the majority being women and there are no young people when there is so much work to do with young Chinese people.

Should the doors close absolutely, then even waiting must be used for the glory of God. But not until we have tried all that is humanly possible to get there are we warranted in saying that it is God's will that we stay here.

Nevertheless

Nevertheless, whatever happens, we must never forget that there is a group of missionaries still carrying on behind the "Bamboo curtain." The Chinese Christian church is going on. The Christians in our own field are still spreading the gospel. God's work has not stopped.

Let us all shoulder our cross anew and follow Him who bore his cross ahead of us and let us do it with joy that His prayer which he prayed on the eve of His crucifixion may be answered in us, "That my joy may be fulfilled in them."

A Nurse Says

We Are Wanted Here

by Elisabeth Goertz

YOU WILL want to know how we spend Christmas here in China. Last year we had a very lively time with programs and special meetings, entertaining of friends, and student parties—just like we would have at home. We had big meetings; we also had interesting visits and oh, the lovely gifts which our Chinese friends brought us. I counted eight baskets of oranges, these were the size of a peck, which made it about one bushel. I was certainly provided with lots of Vitamin C for a while.

Elisabeth Goertz

That's My Work

Now what will Christmas be like this year? Many questions arise as we look into the near future. The new regime is nearing daily. We cannot know what conditions will be like. We do not know what will happen to us then. We hear all kinds of reports from different parts of the occupied areas. In all places there is some difficulty of one kind or another but not too difficult. Meetings can be held, if not in public, then in homes. Hospital work goes on, and that's my work.

A Woman Rushed Into the Meeting

So my place is here and my work is here in the center of His will. Just a week ago we had three babies born in our clinic in one night. In the morning I was very, very tired. I just cannot work as long or hard as I used to. Today (Sunday, November 20th) we were just grouping our singers in church for a special song when a woman rushed into the meeting and told me to please come quickly to a mother about a mile away (in the country). So I did not sing in the choir. I rushed into the clinic and got our bag ready. We started out. Our Chinese nurse's helper went on a rickshaw, and I rode my bicycle. We helped the mother and at exactly 12 o'clock noon the baby was born, mother and little one both safe! This was a very poor home—our usual price is U.S. $1.25, but this family could pay only half. See how poor these people are in our district! See how we have chances to help the very needy? Such calls as these make me feel we are wanted here.

Some of the Chinese are asking us if we are leaving before the change comes. I point to heaven and tell them I pray to God and He tells me to trust Him, not to be afraid, but to stay on and serve here.

With M.C.C. in Occupied China

A new relief and welfare project was opened in Shanghai on October 26 where Dallas Voran and Franklin Beahm are located. The center is situated among the poorer and lower-class people of the city. Here a group of fifty boys and girls whose parents are too poor to send them to school, are given elementary reading and writing lessons, vocational skills, and character training. Nine Chinese men and women have been appointed to serve as a board of directors to comply with legal requirements. As the work becomes better established, additional boys and girls will be invited to participate. A number of Christian Chinese helpers are employed to assist in the work. It is felt that this work affords an opportunity to serve an under-privileged class of people in China, not only the individual boys and girls who are enrolled, but the entire community; and not only in a material and physical way, but also with a Christian emphasis and message.

Orphanage Continues Despite Looting

The Hengyang orphanage in China, which the M.C.C. has operated for the past number of years has gone through difficult times in recent months. Already in May, 1949, the situation became such that the 200 orphans were evacuated to a rural location, Hung Lo Miao. There the work was continued unmolested until August when the fighting again overtook them, and this time their supplies of food, clothing, medicines, etc., were looted. In spite of the trials and difficulties, they have continued and are hoping to return to the former Hengyang location soon. The Shanghai M.C.C. office is now again able to communicate with the orphange and is sending urgently needed supplies of clothing, blankets and other items. Since American personnel were not able to work in this area of China during this period, the workers in charge of the orphanage have been James and Grace Liu and Theodore Ku, Chinese Mennonites who have been very helpful in the M.C.C. program in China.

Agricultural Trainee Program Planned

A program whereby Mennonite youths from Europe may come to the United States for a period of agricultural work and observation has been approved by the Department of State. In this plan, twenty-five rural young people (men between the ages of 18 and 25) will be given opportunity to share through direct experience the rural life in Mennonite communities in the United States, learning not only the agricultural methods but also becoming acquainted with the church life of American Mennonites. These youths will be selected by our workers in Europe, then assigned to specific Mennonite farm homes where they will work for a year, just as foreign exchange students spend a year in study. Modest earnings will apply against the ocean passage expense. It is expected that values similar to those experienced in the foreign-student exchange program will also be realized in this interchange of farm youth.

only by a ladder brought in from outside. He advises us to put some things up there too, and we may. We are not so "looting-conscious" as our Chinese friends are, nor have we two ever gone through such a crisis, althought we, too, have lost belongings before in the Hopei field during war days. We pray and hope that the turn-over will be without much or no fighting here in the city. We commend ourselves to the prayers of our loved-ones.

Even a Feeling of Adventure

We have been advised to be supplied with a few weeks' or even months' store of foodstuffs. We have canned some meat and have some extra flour on hand as well as lard, sweet potatoes, oranges, eggs, coal, and wood. We have water in the well back of the house. There may be a while when foodstuffs are not brought to the market or we are not permitted to go out for a while. There is even a feeling of adventure connected with this present strange and novel situation when we take refuge in the many very good promises of the WORD. Some fear tends to creep in too. How much Psalm 46 and Psalm 139 aer used these days and weeks, and that wonderful verse in Psalm 34:7: "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear Him, and delivereth them." The Chinese has it that God will set guards on four sides of the people.

We are only a few blocks away from the Premier's headquarters. He is the former model-governor of Shansi Province, Yen Hsi Shan. One of our Chinese coworkers, Mr. K'ung, has been formerly a County Magistrate under Yen Hsi Shan in Shansi. His private secretary has his rooms across the street from Number 12 where our chapel is located.

We've had a good dedication service for the Number 12 Compound on Ssu Dao Kai, on "Fourth Street," last Sunday afternoon, November 27, 1949. The message by the Chinese Bishop Sung of the Angelican Mission was to the point and in real Szechwan language. He said among other things that we were here dedicating not merely a small chapel, but an entire yard of 25 oroms, and that we pray that the Spirit of God will fill the entire place, from the gate on to the kettle-washing place, meaning "clear to the back." They say here even for "the meeting is closed," sha kwoa, meaning it is over or finished. I have just asked a Chinese friend and he says it does not mean the cleansing of the kettle but sha has the meaning of end, and kwoa is the word for completed action. But it sounds so interesting when spoken at the close of meetings, as is done here, and sounds like "cleaning kettle" to us from the outside provinces.

We had a few letters from our home-folks in two months, but had to wait long for them; now we expect only a last plane out on which these letters go, but there may possibly be other planes, we hope.

Jottings

—First Church, Lehigh, Kansas: The "Young Mennonite Matrons" held their second annual benefit in November. Over three hundred dollars were raised, half of which goes to missions and half to the local church. A furnace is being installed in the parsonage. Many willing hands have donated labor. Dolls have been dressed, shirts and comforters made, and beef canned as our relief and mission projects for November and December.—M. E. Goering, Corr.

—Salem-Zion Church, Freeman, South Dakota: A program of classical sacred Christmas music was presented December 18 by a mixed choir of 40 voices under the direction of Miss Elvera Voth. Rev. Mast and Rev. Miller read appropriate Christmas messages between the choir numbers. The junior choir, directed by Reuben Goertz, sang three numbers.—Mrs. A. Schwartz, Corr.

—Hoffnungsau Church, Inman, Kansas: Two of our young men, John Martens and Abe Alvin Dyck, are in voluntary service at present. They are at Brook Lane Farm in Hagerstown, Maryland, and will serve a three months term. On December 18 the Men's Chorus, under the direction of John Gaeddert, presented the Christmas story in song. They were assisted by the junior high school class in portraying the scenes. Again the women of the three sewing circles enjoyed the baking of Christmas cookies which were sent to missionaries of the states, mountain workers, and to various local places. Some caroling was also done and the senior group made food baskets for missionaries on furlough or retired. One of the senior Sunday school classes filled fifteen baskets to help the "Big Brothers" in the surrounding towns bring a little Christmas cheer to the needy. —Mrs. Albert Ediger, Corr.

—Hebron Church, Buhler, Kansas: The children's Christmas program was held the evening of December 24. We have mid-week Bible study classes that are well attended. The three children's classes are studying the material used for the vacation Bible school. One class studies How your Bible grew by Roy L. Smith. The older group is studying the Sunday school lesson in advance in the German language.—Mrs. Sam Regier, Corr.

—Salem Church, Freeman, South Dakota: Five young people were baptized and received into the church on November 20. Mid-week classes are being held with our pastor, Willard Claassen, as teacher. The aim of the class is to train for more effective teachers. Seven hundred pounds of new and used clothing were sent to the M.C.C. center at Newton, and thirteen cans of lard were sent for relief also. The annual church business meeting was held on December 2.—Corr.

—Bethel Mission Church, Winnipeg, Canada: The month of December was a full one in our church with various Christmas programs each Sunday. These were a Vesper Service by the Bible College, December 4; a cantata, "The World's Redeemer," by the church choir, December 11; a musical Christmas program by the community choir in the afternoon and the Sunday school program in the evening, December 18; the regular church services, December 25. Watch Night services were observed on the 30th and the Universal Week of Prayer during the first week of the new year. Various organizations were in charge of each evening's program.—Corr.

—Garden Township Church, Halstead, Kansas: Victor Graber was installed as our pastor on December 18, with Waldo Harder from Elbing officiating. The parsonage at Hesston is now completed and the Graber family is residing there. Carl Tanis of the Sudan Interior Mission showed pictures of Africa on the evenings of December 11, 12, and 13. The annual business meeting of the church was held on December 29. A representative of the Northern Bible Society was with us on January 8.—Mrs. Ferd Neufeld, Corr.

—Bergtal Church, Pawnee Rock, Kansas: Three members were received into the church on November 27 and Holy Communion was observed. John E. Kaufman attended the annual meeting of the Board of the General Conference at Mountain Lake, Minnesota, being a member of the Unity Committee and requested to attend the Home Mission Board session. The Kaufmans showed colored slides of a part of their work in South America, that of Brazil, on the evening of December 4. The Christian Endeavor rendered a musical Christmas program, "The Angels' Song," on December 11. Also an election of officers was held. On December 18 a short dedication service of the parsonage was held at 3 o'clock.—Mrs. John K. Friesen, Corr.

with tracts and the spoken gospel message, as well as with picture and song.

At Prayer and Truck Meetings

We have been much encouraged and know that our labor is not in vain in the Lord when we see the people who have been added to the church. They are faithful in witnessing, both at the weekly testimony meetings, and at prayer and truck meetings. It comes to me as it did in Hopei, that here in this country we can see the Book of Acts coming to life as people turn from darkness to His marvelous light. The educated people, for the most part, do not hold on to the old Buddhist and Taoist forms, but the worship of ancestors is still very strong, and nowhere else have I seen so much burning of ceremonial paper and candles. Only one per cent of the people in China are Christian, but here in Chengtu it is less than that. It puts a great responsibility on all of us, Chinese and foreign, who love the Lord, to heed His command and go out and preach in His name.

As Full of Questions and Doubts . . .

My work has been especially with students and means teaching some English, and having Bible classes in English and Chinese in our own place and going out into different schools with the good news of the gospel. Much of this work is seed-sowing, and these students are as full of questions and doubts as students anywhere. It is a joy that some of them took part in our instruction classes (we start another one on November 28) and at the end gave clear testimony that they were saved. Some of them are enthusiastic helpers in the work of our little church, and some,

Agape - Something that Lives

The story of a Youth Center among the Waldensians of Italy

When Italian Protestant youth leaders were discussing a possible name for the new center they were planning to build in the mountains, one suggested that they name it after Waldo, the founder of the Waldensians, the leading Italian Protestant Church.

That name would have meant much to these young people because Waldo, a merchant of Lyon, France, initiated in 1177 a movement in western France and northern Italy of simple living in the spirt of the Sermon on the Mount. These laymen called themselves the "poor in spirit," for they lived in "apostolic poverty" and went about preaching repentance and the need for return to the Bible as the sole rule of belief and action.

Another youth suggested they call the camp "Arnaud" in honor of the preacher-general who led the Waldensians in defensive battle during the bitter persecutions when Roman Catholic armies came to wipe out this heretical group. This name, too, would have significance, for the youth center would be located in the mountains where the Waldensians hid during persecution and where a large portion of the few Italian Protestants still live today.

The discussion of youth leaders at Florence, Italy, occurring two years ago, became more lively when Pastor Tullio Vinay, leader of the whole Italian Protestant youth movement, rose to the floor and said, "No, these men are dead, but the love of Christ lives always. Let us call it Agape—the New Testament Greek word for love."

The idea was discussed thoroughly and the other leaders became quite interested. Vinay went on to explain that agape in the New Testament implied genuine community and sharing and that the early Christians called their communion meals—Agape. This love feast served as a bond of fellowship and a means of support to the needy.

"We need to recapture that sense of community for our time," said Pastor Vinay. "If the church of today does not discover the community life of the early Christians, it cannot evangelize in the modern world."

This challenge to youth to develop a center where love and sharing were realized caught fire. In the two summers that have passed since then, agape (love) has already been visible in the early work of constructing the buildings. Italian youth have joined together in sacrifice for its creation. And last summer's development of an international work-camp in which youth of American and many European nations joined shows that Agape is becoming a center for community and deeper understanding among youth of many different nations and denominations. It has also been the object of modern sharing in material goods, combining the self-help of Italian Protestants with aid from many churches abroad.

Agape is becoming an inspiration and challenge to Christian youth everywhere.

Its first value, of course, has been for Italian youth. It has offered new hope for some of the disillusioned Italian youth and their parents for whom Agape offers a concrete message and appeal to constructive action.

One Italian youth leader, Georgio Girardet, explained the situation of the Italian youth among which they must work. These youth were brought up under a fascist system, he said. They were taught not to listen to their parents, but rather to the State.

Many youth were jolted from their cock-sureness by the war, which was most confusing to their sense of values. Some fought with the Germans and later with the Allies. Many were prisoners abroad. The youth at home in Italy knew the difficulties of war—the hunger and the suffering.

"They saw too much," Georgio said. "They saw big things fall. They also saw the baseness of humanity."

A number of youth went into the mountains and took part in the resistance movement against the Germans. After the war they were the heroes of the moment. They had big hopes that something better would come for their country.

But they are disappointed. People are speaking of another war. The promised reforms in their country have not been made. Even the support of democratic America has been naively put behind the conservative powers in Italy, this Italian youth leader said.

Youth are struggling for a new world. Youth at the age of sixteen speak of anguish—the anguish of Job. They are inclined to live for each moment, to have no established values, to doubt everything but themselves.

In that kind of situation Agape has offered something real to disillusioned youth. They wouldn't be won by talk about Christianity but they could be won by action. Here at Agape was a chance to work for something worthwhile. It was not just ideas. Youth have come out of their solitude, despair and blind search for pleasure to enjoy a new high level of fellowship. The spirit of community has caught them.

As a result they have devoted themselves wholeheartedly to the realization of the Agape Youth Center by raising money and donating thousands of hours of voluntary labor in construction work.

Youth have spoken to Protestant churches all over the country to raise money. They have given all kinds of musical and dramatic programs and bazaars for Agape.

At one place where a youth explained Agape, an old man stood up afterwards and said, "Now I know what Agape means for my children and grandchildren." He opened his billfold and emptied all that he had on the table—3,500 lire. (Equivalent at uar to about $4.40.)

At another place, a peasant arose after the talk and said, "I'll give a sausage for Agape." Another said he would give a sack of grain, and collect grain from other peasants.

In one family, the mother gave English lessons to raise money for the cause. The boy sold his bicycle and turned over the money for Agape, and the father bought gasoline for the project.

In the work itself, youth gave thousands of hours of voluntary labor, digging rocks out of the mountains, carrying them on their backs. But they liked it. There was a spirit and a purpose there. Youth of Methodist, Baptist and other Protestant churches have joined the Waldensians in this new venture.

Peasants in Praly, the nearby village, were skeptical about this fantastic project in the beginning but near the end of the first summer they were convinced that it was O.K. During the past summer, the people from the village cut sixty trees from their woods and gave them to Agape.

It was only after the Italians had themselves sacrificed to the utmost that Rev. Tullio Vinay asked for help from abroad. And during the past summer this aid came in a variety of forms from many sources.

Flour and other food supplies from Church World Service and the Mennonite Service Committee contributed to the kitchen. Presbyterians sent $10,000 through Church World Service and the World Council of Churches. Swedish churches sent $1,250; Canadian churches $2,000; and Swiss churches in Canton Vaud sent 15,000 Swiss francs (nearly $4,000). When the Swiss gift arrived, someone commented that this is a return gift for what the Waldensians gave the Swiss many years ago. The Waldensian farmers had sold the wool from their sheep and used the money gained in that one year to finance the printing of the Bible in French for France and French-speaking Switzerland.

Agape has given a new purpose and sense of fellowship to youth and has provided an opportunity for sharing by Christians in different parts of the ecumenical family.

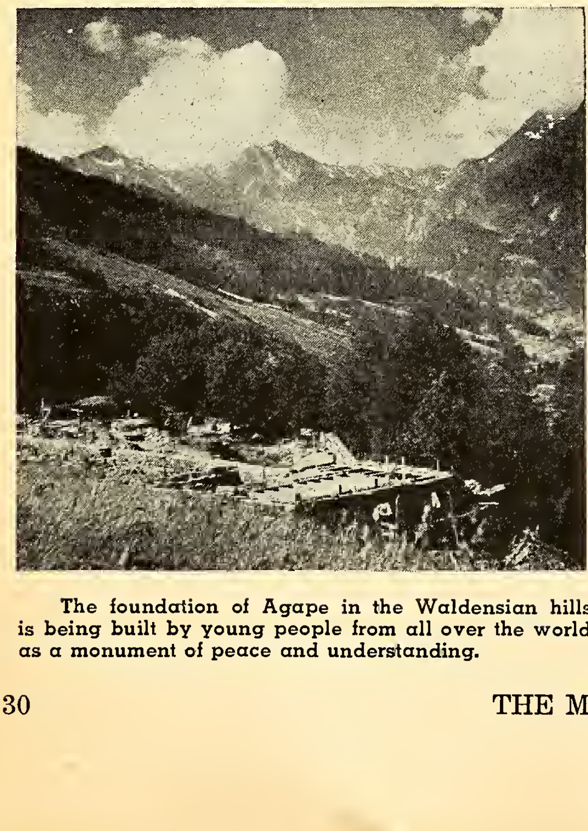
But most exciting from the point of view of American youth is the fact that this center of Christian community was the site of one of the international workcamps sponsored last summer by the Youth Department of the World Council of Churches, and that future ones will be held there.

Last summer over 400 youth from nine countries worked at Agape. They came from Holland, Austria, Italy, United States, England, France, Denmark, Switzerland, Hungary and Spain.

They slept in a former school in nearby farmhouses. In the morning they washed up and brushed their teeth at the public village water fountain. After breakfast and devotions they went off to work. Some dug and hauled stones, some wheeled cement for the professional masons, some prepared meals, and a regular crew was kept busy on the lift or elevator which hauled sand and supplies up the mountain from Praly to Agape. There is as yet no road. The self-propelling lift operates by the weight of a huge box of water going down the cable and pulling the partly filled box of sand up the mountain. So important was the lift that a special night shift had to keep going to provide supplies for the day.

QUI SI FA
AGAPE
O SI MUORE

An Italian and an American boy unload stone. On the stone are the words: "We will make Agape or die."



The foundation of Agape in the Waldensian hills is being built by young people from all over the world as a monument of peace and understanding.

It wasn't always easy for the Italians to talk with Americans and other nationalities, but each found he could go a long way with gestures and the maximum use of the few words he knew of another language.

In cases where they understood each other, the young people discussed while they worked. Sometimes French or German was the common language, college youth and working youth associated and worked together on the same level.

Following the evening meal Pastor Vinay would lead in devotions. Even the professional workers, who were mostly Roman Catholic, stayed willingly for the Bible reading and prayer. They joined whole-heartedly in the whole life of the camp. With the Protestant youth last summer there were also several Italian Catholic youth and a Jewish student from America.

A visitor to the camp usually joined in the work. Bishop Stephen Neile of the World Council of Churches spent his vacation there working with the youth.

There was not much time for play, but singing was quite popular. One could hear the sound of melodious Italian voices resounding from the bedrooms at night.

On Sundays the youth worshipped in the local Waldensian church. This historic building is the only one that survived one of the raids in the early persecutions when most churches were burned. It was saved from burning in the last war by the heroic efforts of the pastor's wife who carried enough water to strategic places to keep the fire from spreading to the church.

In this beautiful Waldensian valley so replete with fascinating history, youth of the world can work together in a common cause and learn from one another. Pastor Vinay has offered the center for special use for conferences for the Youth department of the World Council of Churches during a certain period in the year—when the buildings are completed. Youth can there search together the meaning of community.

Even the structure of the building will express the

by H. J. Brown

You and I were touched by the power of the gospel and were brought out of sin, darkness, and misery, into a happy and glorious life of light and joy, through Jesus Christ our Lord. India has 350 million souls, China 450 million, Japan 70 million, Africa 140 million, then add South America and the islands of the sea. They all are God's creation, but lost in sin and superstition. They grope in sin and darkness seeking after God. Not knowing Him, they fall down before idols and thus worship wood and stone. Some greatly torture their bodies, hoping thus for a way out of sin, misery, and final death. Formerly we were no better than they. In His grace and mercy Jesus saved us. However Jesus also died for these hundreds of millions of lost people. In His sight they are just as precious. But "How then shall they call on Him in whom they have not believed? And how shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher?"

The Great Opportunities

From Japan comes the call for more Bibles and New Testaments as never before. Notwithstanding the many national workers, there is a call for many additional missionaries. The Chinese people never before so heartily turned to Christ and asked for the "Jesus Way" of life. Young and old come to Him in faith. Students by the hundreds in colleges and in universities accept Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour. In an orphanage school of grade-and high-school students, out of 230 students 135 repented and were saved during one week of evangelism. India in her new freedom is more than ever seeking the freedom of the soul from the bondage of fearful superstition, misery, sin, and eternal torture of the evil one. From Africa come renewed calls showing the heart and soul yearnings for the true life, that is only found in Christ the Saviour.

The Way To Apply Ourselves

In case you hear Christ calling you, reply: "Here am I, send me!" Mission work in the full sense is hard and difficult. It requires sacrificing. However it also brings great joy and rich rewards. There is no bed of ease on the mission field. Christ demands the strong and the best: but with a specific call, "Go," should we venture out. Then and then only can we claim the promise of Christ Himself: "And lo I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

But what about those of us, who do not have this definite call, and whose circumstances here at home do not permit going out to the foreign mission field? The answer is simple and very clear: Stay home, work, and pray! Without this backing on the home base, the mission work abroad cannot succeed. We must all share the burden of the missionary. There are many ways of raising funds too. Tithing is only one way. God's acre on our farm, God's hens and God's cows are all practical. I have heard of God's pigs too; but they have less appeal to me. Stirling Avenue Mennonite Church of Kitchener, Ontario has young people's group, that sow and plant for God's work, which they support with fervent prayers.

Surely we have a great work to do in foreign mission. We need to find our place and then buckle down and do it with all the strength in us, with our hearts, for the salvation of teeming millions, and the glory and honor of God in Christ Jesus our Lord.

AGAPE—SOMETHING THAT . . . . Cont'd from p. 30 basic idea. The main building, the exterior of which was finished last summer, is to have a dining hall where people sit in small groups and yet are part of the whole, symbolizing the desire to give an individual a chance for self-expression in a small group and at the same time to make him a part of the whole without being lost in the mass. At the head of the room is to be the communion table and also the cross to show that the head and source of real community is Christ. Through the large window at the end of the hall there will be a splendid view of God's creation in that scenic mountain area.

Encouragement of individuality without being anti-social, and the development of a sense of community without being lost in the mass—these are the keys to living in the modern world that Agape presents.

The search for the communal love of the New Testament may well be the goal for Christian youth in every land.—Courtesy of "Youth" Evangelical and Reformed paper

Communications Always Open

Chengtu now has only one small line of air communication with the outside. My last letter from home was dated October 1. How fortunate that we can commit each other to God, knowing that communications with Him are always open. There is definite tension, but we have peace of heart. We have food, fuel and clothing and the consciousness that we are in the place God has for us.

You could try sending an airmail to me, in care of Rev. Wm. C. Voth, Lutheran World Federation, 33 Granville Road, Kowloon, Hongkong, and he will forward it if he can. Whether you hear from us or not, keep on praying that God may have His way in the lives of many here, and that we may be spiritually adequate. Paul wasn't backward about asking for prayer, and we need it too.

CHINA. Tibet, the world's highest country, once again finds its classic isolation threatened.

The reason is simple. Tibet legally is a dependency of China, which is coming under Communist control and shows signs of becoming an ally of Soviet Russia. — Christian Science Monitor

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON.—A former bronco-buster and one-time body-guard to General Douglas MacArthur in Japan will soon return to that country as a missionary for the Free Methodist Church.

SEOUL, KOREA. Dr. Frank C. Laubach of New York, world missionary-at-large, has set about the task of teaching some of Korea's 10,000 illiterates and near-illiterates to read and write.

He claims it is the 193rd language in which he has attacked illiteracy.

Dr. Laubach came at the invitation of the Korean Government and missionaries of a number of denominations. In his first five days' work he taught eight Korean women over 60 to read simple tales aloud before a class of students.

The Laubach method is very simple, using ingeniously-drawn pictures. The illiterate looks at a picture, says what it represents, and finds that the picture, or some part of it is drawn to look like the Korean symbol for the sound he has just uttered. Dr. Laubach said an illiterate needs to look at a picture only once to learn the sound he should read for that shape again.

CHICAGO. Recognition of the Accrediting Association of Bible Institutes and Bible Colleges by the United States Department of Higher Education and the Veteran's Administration was announced at the organization's third annual convention at Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, in October. AMSTERDAM—The birth of a sovereign Indonesian state, which Queen Juliana termed "one of the most deeply moving events of the age," was heralded here on Dec. 27 with the soft scratch of pens on six ponderously worded documents.

It took only 35 minutes of speeches and formalities in the marble-walled Hall of Citizens of the Royal Palace here to end a 340-year Dutch reign over the vast arc of islands and bring into being a nation of 75,000,000 people.—Christian Science Monitor

ROCK ISLAND, ILLINOIS — Bishop Stephen C. Neill, associate general secretary of the World Council of Churches, gave the keynote addresses to the 600 future ministers at the Second Triennial Inter-seminary Conference held at Augustana College. Bishop Neill is one of the leading evangelists in the Church of England. Editorials

IT WAS LENIN, one of the fathers of Russia's godless regime who said, in referring to the condition of the success of the movement he was fostering, "This cannot be realized on the giving of spare evenings; it demands the whole of life." Lenin knew human nature and geared his objectives accordingly. In many areas the church has yet to learn this lesson. How often do we sit back satisfied when young people come to church twice on Sunday—or even once. If we would follow the same young people through the week, in many cases we would find that they are wholly dedicated and their lives quite solidly built around something else—basketball, the "gang," or the girl- or boy-friend. In each case the particular association practically dictates the whole schedule and conduct of the individual—even how much time to spend at church. People both young and old inevitably gravitate toward something or someone to which they can give their wholehearted devotion, and too often it is not the church. Young people do not respect the church because the church doesn't act like the church ought to. The church itself is too largely composed of people who have built their lives around something that is quite outside the church. If church members and ministers would reveal by their own lives the tremendous satisfaction, the incomparable blessedness, that comes from a life centered in and ordered by God as revealed in the Lord Jesus Christ we would make a real beginning in enlisting our youth. The world cannot help looking up when it sees individuals or groups inwardly integrated by an all-consuming passion; people are made that way. But how great our blindness when we no longer realize that we were made that way in order that God alone may be that all-consuming passion! How great our blindness when we try to attract youth to a way of life that demands everything, by individual lives and organizations that are split up into dozens of 'little' loyalties with their conflicting codes of conduct that veritably betray the whole-souled demands of the the gospel.

Blessed is that church which does not let the children outgrow it.—THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

A MAJOR SHIFT HAS TAKEN place in our conference program in the last year or so. In contributions as well as budget proposals the shift is in the decreasing Relief concern. The budget for Relief has been slashed over $100,000 as compared with last year. Foreign Missions is once more presenting the highest budget. While it is probably true that we are "reconverting" too rapidly, it nevertheless remains true that the Church's spiritual ministry must predominate in the long run. On the otherhand, drawing a sharp line between Relief and Missions may be disastrous for it has become abundantly plain to us that Relief workers often have a unique opportunity to witness while our missionaries often find it necessary to administer material help. Furthermore, should this shift reflect the temptation to return to the status quo—that is preaching a gospel that does not come to grips with all man's sins as we have done too long—then it is a promise of disaster. This may be corroborated in the decrease in giving to the Peace Committee. (In percentage of budget received in 1949 among the major boards and committees, the Emergency Relief Board and the Peace Committee were at the bottom!) As the war recedes in the historical perspective we have the temptation of pushing the war victims and the issues of war to the periphery of our attention. If that process continues it makes little difference how much we step up missions; we will still be building up a structure that will come down with a resounding crash under the judgments of God. Let us not forget that the various concerns, as expressed through the organization of the Conference into boards and committees, are vitally interrelated and interdependent. When one suffers, then all suffer. If we don't keep unconditional love at the heart of the gospel we preach the world over, precious souls will be sent into a Christless eternity by hatred before we have an opportunity to reach them with the gospel.—J.J.E.

THE FOLLOWING LINES, written by J. G. Lucas, appeared in the New York World-Telegram. "War is ugliness; war is death; war is destruction; war is heartbreak and sorrow." He, however, goes on to say that he doesn't hate war for it also has another side to it. "You can't forget that in war you found the only Christian brotherhood you ever knew. You don't forget that in war you found complete selflessness. You don't forget learning in war that a man could love the other fellow more than himself, if only for a minute, an hour, a day. You don't forget that in war you saw men who loved life give their lives for you."

The failure of this young man to find a brotherhood and the challenge of a self-giving life before the war and after the war indicates a failure on the part of the Church. The brotherhood in Christ ought to give greater joy than a brotherhood in war. The Christian warfare is as vital, demanding, and challenging as the carnal warfare. The call for sacrifice, self-giving, love of others to set men free from the bondage of ignorance, poverty, and spiritual blindness hold a challenge to love and selflessness greater than the challenge of striking down an 'enemy.' Yet this young man writes that he has not known this brotherhood, love of others, and self-giving since the war.

Voluntary Service is the first attempt to give men and women an opportunity to, in a measure, experience this type of living. That it offers a satisfying experience is seen in the number who continue beyond their period of commitment and the number who return for a second and third term of service. Let us, therefore, support it and encourage young people to enter.—Orlo Kaufman in Camp Landon Notes.

Young People's Union Council Makes Plans

by Esko Loewen, Youth Editor

TWENTY-four representatives of the youth of the General Conference gathered at Mountain Lake, Minnesota from November 26 to 29 for the annual Council meeting. These annual meetings are very stimulating because to them come representatives from each of the districts of the Conference as well as representatives from the colleges. During their days together, they put in hours of study, discussion, thought, prayer and fellowship out of which come the plans for the year ahead.

The annual meeting held at Mountain Lake stands out as one of the most significant Council meetings of recent years.

Meeting Held in a Church Community

First of all, this was the first Council meeting held in recent years in a church community. Previously, these meetings were always held on college campuses or at the Seminary in Chicago. These meetings were always valuable and stimulating, but there proved to be quite a difference between them and one held in the center of one of our church communities. Also, this was the first time that the sessions lasted almost four days. Previously only two days were held open for this purpose. The extra time and the opportunity to worship on Sunday with folk of the community all added to the worth of the meetings.

The people of the Mountain Lake community proved to be very fine hosts. As delegates arrived, they were met at the train and chauffered to the church where cards were already made out assigning them to a home. They were promptly taken to the house where they were to be guests and made acquainted with their host and hostess. At mealtime there would always be someone at the church ready to take guests to their homes for fellowship and a meal. This made it possible to get more generally acquainted in the community and to leave Mountain Lake feeling personally acquainted. Everyone of the delegates greatly appreciated this.

Face New Prospects and New Plans

The Council faced new prospects and plans at this meeting and came away supporting a new program to be followed by the Young People's Union. First, the Executive Committee reported to the Council what the Y.P.U. had done during the past year. The president, Kenneth Bauman, spent a month in Canada visiting churches, camps, and schools and brought back a report of his experiences. He came back convinced that Y.P.U. officers need to plan to make such trips and keep before the churches the work of the young people. He was enthusiastic about his experiences in Canada. Likewise, Myrtle Wasser, secretary-treasurer, visited retreats in the States. She was at Camp Mack in Indiana, Men-O-Lan in Pennsylvania, and at the new camp in Kansas.

Myrtle also reported on her week spent at Little Eden camp in northern Michigan. This is an (Old) Mennonite camp at which the Mennonite Youth Fellowship, the (Old) Mennonite Young Peoples organization, held a work-shop for a week to which Myrtle went. Her report was very inspiring so far as the work and aims of the M.Y.F. are concerned as well as the means which they are using to gain their aims. Her report opened the subject of the future development of the Y.P.U.

Evaluate the Y.P.U.

In an evaluation discussion, it was brought out that to date the Y.P.U. is primarily a project sponsoring organization. It is weak in providing for local needs and in making contact with local groups. To more adequately serve local groups was the great concern of the Y.P.U. at this Council Meeting.

It is true that the Y.P.U. has this fall started issuing program materials and plans to continue this service. This helps in providing for local groups and fills a gap which has long existed. It is not enough, however, to simply print program materials. So, further plans were made.

A Three-fold Fellowship Emphasis

After long discussion, the Council favored a three-fold fellowship emphasis by which local organizations can function and by which the Y.P.U. as such may function. These three areas would include (1) Christian Faith and Life. In this area goes worship, Bible study, prayer and devotion, and doctrine. If a local group had this division, officers in charge of Christian Faith and Life would be responsible for carrying out the program in this area. (2) Christian Fellowship. The social and recreational activities of the local group would be in this department. Friendliness and goodwill to other groups to other races, and to new members would be in the sphere of Christian Fellowship. The officers in charge of this department would be responsible for this side of the local group's activity. (3) Christian Service. Missions, relief, service projects, stewardship, visitation, and evangelism would be the responsibility of the officers in charge of Christian Service. (To next page.)

This three-fold division, it is felt, covers the full scope of youth activity, their social and recreational life, their worship and study, their work and service. For this reason, the organization of this program was felt to be of special significance.

A pamphlet describing this emphasis is being published. Future program materials will give emphasis to such organization.

A retreat for young people which will be a workshop dealing with work with youth in the local church is planned for next August. It is to be just before General Conference at Freeman, South Dakota and will be held in the Minnesota-South Dakota area.

The following specific recommendation and business is the action taken at the Council meeting.

Recommendations

1. We recommend that each local church work toward having an organization which is particularly provided for the youth, approximately between the ages of 12 and 30. At the same time we recommend a continued emphasis upon the family-night program.

2. We urge new or existing youth groups to set aside some time to examine how they might become more of a "fellowship." rather than just a meeting group. To be a "fellowship" means young people having a responsibility for knitting together all of the young people of the church, all of the youth activities of the church. To be knit together as a fellowship means that the young people of the church become a genuine circle of friends. It means a close working together in worship, study, service and recreation. We believe that only if the church has such a fellowship among its young people can Christian influence be stronger than the secular, worldly influences present in many of our surroundings.

3. Specifically, we recommend three areas of emphasis for a balanced youth program in the local congregation: (a) Christian Faith and Life; (b) Christian Fellowship; (c) Christian Service. These could form the basis for committees in the local church and in the Y.P.U. executive committee or they could serve as a basis for evaluating the existing programs.

4. To help the local groups to evaluate their program and to set new goals toward such a fellowship, we urge the publication of a leaflet with this objective. This should be sent to all the churches with enough for each young person.

5. In answer to requests for helps in organizing local youth fellowships, we recommend that the Y.P.U. Executive Committee issue a manual of suggestions in the line with the above.

6. For new groups who want to work toward such a fellowship we recommend the name, Youth Fellowship.

7. We urge the district officers of the Y.P.U. to consider ways of promoting stronger or new local youth societies and fellowships.

8. We encourage the Y.P.U. Executive Committee to help prepare program materials which can be used by (1) such fellowships of youth and, (2) in meetings at C.E. or 'family nights' planned for the church as a whole.

9. We recommend that the Y.P.U. General Assembly of 1950 set aside approximately half of its time to discuss and present ways of strengthening

"Youth Sunday"

FIRE Prevention Week,' 'Conservation Week,' 'Children's Day,' 'Mother's Day,' and hundreds of other special days compose our calendar. Someone who would want to have fun should make up a calendar listing as many of the special days, weeks, and months as he can. And among them would be the first in February — "Youth Sunday."

The special days, weeks, and months in a way clutter up our calendar, true, but at the same time they serve a function. Who would want a calendar without Christmas and Easter? The traditions gathered around these days make of them something very special and valuable. And how about Pentecost and Thanksgiving and Harvest Home and New Year's day?

Without special days set aside, we fail to remember special things we should remember. Mother's day has a value as does Children's day. And if these have a value, would our calendar be too cluttered if we included a Youth day?

In many churches, an effective ministry is carried out in behalf of the children and the middle aged. The youth and young people and the old people sometimes are among the more neglected groups. Take youth, for instance. Up to high school age, the Sunday school's activities keep the interest of the children. There is always something more to experience in the next class, the next year.

Then with the oncoming of adolescence and high school, the church's program begins to lose its attraction and there is a lull until marriage and children renew old ties with the church.

A special youth Sunday should help to call to mind the church's relationship to youth. For morning worship, a talented youth may assist; the special choral music could be provided by youth. In the evening, a luncheon and an evening program centering on youth could be given. Make it special. Make the youth count for something in the life of the church.—E.L.

Y.P.U. Calendar Published

AN artistic and beautiful Prayer Calendar to be hung on the wall has been printed by the Young People's Union and copies have been mailed out to all the churches. Over 10,000 copies of the calendar have been printed. The purpose of the calendar is to set before youth the work of the church and enlist their prayers for the work of the church. Each month has a special theme. For instance January emphasizes the family; Febuary is youth month, March is Conference Publications month; April is Home Missions month; May is Institutions month remembering particularly hospitals and homes for the aged; June is Voluntary Service month, July is Retreat month; August is Conference month; September is Education month; October is Foreign Missions month; November is Relief and M.C.C. month; and, December brings to mind the home church.

By having the calendar on the wall and glancing at it frequently the work of the church will frequently be remembered in prayer and thought during each day of the year.

the local youth program and that each congregation send at least one young person (under 30 years of age) who would serve as the Y.P.U. delegate and perhaps as a church delegate.

10. A Y.P.U. Retreat shall be held in connection with the 1950 General Conference in the Freeman, S. D., area. This retreat shall be a workshop to give help to the work of the Youth Fellowship in local churches.

11. We recommend that the presidents of the districts assume the responsibility for seeing that some person in the district compile an accurate mailing list of the local churches to be revised annually.

12. We recommend that the Y.P.U. Council suggest the purchase of a file for program materials for the local groups through the form of a recommendation to the local groups. Recommendation is to be prepared by Y.P.U. Executive Committee.

13. Missionary Education Fund: We recommend that (1) we continue the support of Iris Melecio and Jake Friesen; (2) that we investigate with Jake the place of his medical training; (3) that we arrange for a Paraguayan to study at Canadian Mennonite Bible College; (4) that we investigate further the case of Herman Tan Hao An.

14. We recommend that $500 be set aside for another calendar next year, with final decision regarding this to be left up to the Executive Committee.

15. We recommend that $500 be set aside for program materials.

17. Recommended that the Executive Committee contact the Foreign Mission Board and agree on a project to be suggested to the districts.

18. Recommended that the matter of the Y.P.U. fiscal year be left to the discretion of the Executive Committee.

19. Recommended that we endorse and promote the United Evangelistic Advance.

20. Recommended that we give thanks to the Mountain Lake community for their generous hospitality and cooperation.

Christmas Bundles Distributed in Europe

Very recently the workers in Europe have been busy distributing Christmas Bundles, to help needy children. This year it was possible to have nearly all the bundles arrive at the destinations by Christmas time. Of one distribution, Norma Jost writes: "Our only regret is that you could not share the giving of this year's Christmas Bundles. It was like a drama—human, living, and filled with practical Christian love. In Frankfurt the bundles were given to refugee children who live in the bunkers or air-raid shelters. Many were from the East, others were people who had been living in cellars or in the ruins of the city and were forced to move when the rubble caved in . . . The children have come in—about forty of them—mothers with tiny babies, then the little children, and behind them the older boys and girls. In the soft light they look much like other children, perhaps a bit more pale, not as well dressed . . . One of the M.C.C. workers tells the children about the gifts they are about to receive, that children across the sea have sent them. The children wait patiently for their names to be called until all forty have passed the table . . . They run to find their parents or down the dark hallway to their rooms . . . Over and over they exclaim how wonderful these things are."

Reports from the various units indicate that there has been increased activity in clothing distributions as the season of colder weather has come. All reports emphasize the fact that there definitely continues to be a need for clothing, bedding, shoes and other items, particularly among those classes of people who are economically at a disadvantage, such as widows with families, convalescants, war prisoners, refugees, students, old people, orphans, etc.

Some food is also dispensed, although in most places the "hunger months," the period of most acute food need, occurs later in the winter. Those leading the relief program abroad confirm repeatedly that every gift of food clothing, money or other materials, can be effectively used in alleviating genuine need "In the Name of Christ."

Another Service Group Enrolled

The sixth Voluntary Service orientation class began on Nov. 18 and continued for one month. Those enrolled: Charles Allison, Kansas City, Kansas; Helen Fehr, Blumenhof, Saskatchewan; Herbert Hess, Litiz, Pennsylanvia; Maynard Miller, Springs, Pennsylvania; Vernon, Nisley, Hutchinson, Kansas; Calvin Redekop, Mountain Lake, Minnesota; Richard Yoder, Midland, Michigan. It was just one year ago that the first group of one-year volunteers were accepted for the special program of training and service.

Sample copies of a new Voluntary Service folder have been sent to pastors of Mennonite congregations. Additional copies are available upon request from the Akron office.

An Opening for Volunteers

Three young men continue to serve at the National Training School for Boys, Washington, D.C., helping to rehabilitate the lives of juvenile federal offenders with whom they work. There will be openings in this work for other qualified volunteers, as the terms of some of the present members expire on March 1.

A 1950 calendar describing the youth program at Ronneburg, Germany (where a V.S. group worked in the summer of 1948) is available for twenty-five cents. Former service unit members and exchange students will be especially interested. Direct orders to the M.C.C., Akron, Penna.

Handbook to the Mennonite Hymnary

"A Mighty Fortress is Our God" is a great hymn widely known and widely used. It is translated in about 200 languages. It was used as the conference hymn of the Fourth Mennonite World Conference. It has been used in many great gatherings of the Church the world over. In 1925 when Christians from all parts of the world gathered at Stockholm, "A Mighty Fortress" was used as the Conference hymn, each singing in his own tongue.

The thrilling story, briefly put, behind each hymn in the Hymnary, can be read in the Handbook to the Hymnary.

From the Heart to the Heart

Possession -- Then Profession

WHAT we believe is tremendously important. The Word of God is full of passages anchored to words like "trust," "believe," and "faith." But the Bible makes it equally plain that, having trusted Christ, and received salvation in Him, we should permit the Spirit of God to work out in us the tremendous things which we have believed.

Seen in this light, orthopraxy, which has to do with the practice of right doctrine, is virtually as important as orthodoxy, which has to do with right thinking or belief.

Deluding Ourselves

Such is the burden of James' message when he says, "Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only," concluding, as the American Standard Version translates it, "not deluding your own selves." Surely we are deceived if we think it is enough simply to speak orthodox beliefs. God says that if we profess right doctrine but fail to live it, we are deluding ourselves.

It is possible to hold in your hands the whole treasure of righteous instruction without ever making it your own. Indeed, it was such a condition which blighted the spiritual life of the Old Testament Hebrews. As Paul later wrote in Romans 2:13: "Not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified." Although the Jews had possession of the commandments of God, with freedom to read and memorize the scrolls of the law, they were not justified merely by having the law; they were justified only by keeping it.

Today believers have the knowledge of the gospel of grace, but it is not enough for us merely to possess the New Testament revelation. We must bear evidence of having experienced New Testament regeneration. There must be a life as well as a word. This is God's absolute requisite.

God Wants Heart Observance

It is easy for us to sing our praises to God. It is comparatively easy for us to stand and make a pronouncement of our orthodoxy in some creedal form, But God wants more than lip acknowledgement. He wants heart observance. Remember the words of Isaiah is quoted by Jesus in Matthew 15:8: "This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth and honoreth me with their lips; but their heart is far from me. But in vain do they worship me." Note those final words: "in vain do they worship me."

If there is some controversy between us and God, if there is some area of life that we know God wants to be different than it is, our worship is useless. Though we sing with the voice of the archangel, though we speak with the eloquence of an Apollos, it will be to no purpose.

No words could be more sober or terrible than those of Jesus when He said, "Not everyone that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but the that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Jesus says that in that solemn hour, in spite of the "many wonderful works" they have done in His name, He will be forced to say, "I never knew you."

Among the men who will say "Lord, Lord" will be many who have had a great profession. They will have even done some things that, to their own satisfaction, at least, proved their relationship to the Lord; but still He will have to reply, "I never knew you."

The Devil Can Counterfeit

Let us not be deceived. It is not just what we say; it is not even entirely what we do, because the devil can counterfeit the work of God in certain of its details. The question each of us must ask himself is, Is my heart right toward Him?

As Christian people begin the work of the year in churches, in schools and in many other worthwhile lines of service we will do well to search our own hearts to make sure that with us it is not profession, but possession. As individuals and groups, let us first make sure that we are surrendered wholly and completely to Christ, that our lives have been touched with coals from the altar of God. As we do this—as we put possession first—profession will surely follow.

Wound But Once

"The clock of life is wound but once,
And no man has the power
To tell just when the hands will stop,
At late or early hour.

NOW is the only time you own,
Work, pray, give with a will.
Place no faith in tomorrow—for
The clock may then be still."

In India: Native Leadership Increases

by Martha Burkhalter

WE praise God for the privilege of preaching and teaching unmolested, the precious Word of God here in India. Our evangelists and Bible women have just come back from a month's evangelistic tour in some villages, a distance away from here. They report eager listeners, some of whom remained almost constantly with them, expressing a desire to accept Christ as their Saviour. The workers sold many Hindi hymn books, portions of Gospels, stories of the conversion of Christians, and gave out tracts, which people took gladly.

The Underpaid Servants

In a village eight miles south from there is a group of eight or ten who have expressed a desire to become Christians and to accept baptism. They are Ghassiyas or low-castes and not very precious in the sight of men, but how precious in the sight of God! "Whosoever believeth in Him should not perish," includes them. Those in America who have given the drama "The Conversion of Garib," will be glad to know that these people are Garib's relatives. This caste always lives on the edge of the village, never in the midst of the high castes. They are the under-paid servants of the village and never own land. Garib and his family of boys have proved what Christ can do in changed lives. They have become leaders in our church.

> Although there are some things in our church here at Janjgir which sometimes cause us sorrow such as jealousies for positions . . . yet we can say that the general attitude (of the natives) for taking more responsibility and an eagerness to stand on their own feet is evident.

Organization Under Native Leadership Continues

A Seva Samaj (sevice committee) has recently been organized in our church here in Janjgir. Philip Lader, our new pastor is the leader. Dharmoo, a crippled boy and Garib's nephew is the secretary. They hold nightly prayer meetings in the different homes. They visit the sick and pray with them; they comfort the sorrowing where death has entered. Through their efforts a number of Chamars (the leather caste) have recently expressed a desire to become Christians. We have not had any conversions among the Chamars for a long time. So we are very glad for this revival among them. Philip Lader's father Sukhi Bhai, was a Chamar and was the first convert from among them here in Janjgir. Most of our early converts were Chamars. Although they are a low-caste and considered outcastes by the Brahmins, they are a proud people and very hard to win. Those who become Christians are often severely persecuted by their caste fellows. The village across the road from the mission compound is composed mostly of Chamars. We sometimes get discouraged that we have been able to win so few among them to Christ. We are praying earnestly that this awakening among them may bring many into the Church of Christ.

Although there are some things in our church here at Janjgir which sometimes cause us sorrow such as jealousies and quarreling for positions, or disrespect for higher authority and sometimes adultery, yet we can say that the general attitude of the natives for taking more responsibility and an eagerness to stand on their own feet is evident.

An Evangelistic Committee

An evangelistic committee has been chosen recently by the church council to work in cooperation with the evangelistic missionary in charge of the district. This is a step forward and shows a growth in spiritual life. It is what the Indian government prefers to see—a self-propogating church rather than more evangelistic missionaries from abroad. At least that is the way one official expressed it to the National Christian Council. This is also the goal and

A Native Indian Pastor's Message

by Henry Somaya

> "The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree."
> —Psalm 92:12

WHO is righteous? He who by faith has accepted the cleansing of the precious blood of Jesus Christ. His desire is upward, his expectation is from God alone. We make the mistake of thinking that when we have enough and more to eat, when we are well clothed and housed, then our need of God and of the church is not urgent.

Friends, let us not make this mistake; some day God through His Spirit may whisper in our ears, "Fool!" Settle today the issue that will include you forever among the righteous.

Then you will desire to show forth the fruits of righteousness in your life. "The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree."

You have often seen a palm tree. What are its characteristics? The palm tree is upright, stately and taller than other trees. It is deeply rooted. So is the righteous man; rooted and grounded in Jesus Christ, he grows always reaching upward.

Its One Purpose

The palm tree has no branches. Its one purpose to stretch upward is unhindered. The righteous man allows no conflicting interests or proud achievements to divert his trust from God, fame, education, riches, comfort, good reputation—all good in themselves nevertheless will not divide his attention from being primarily on his God.

The palm has no knots. A righteous man is delivered from quirks and snarls of character that cause dissension and incompatability. His integrated life is not marred.

The palm tree emits a sweet refreshing sap. The wayfarer is restored as he drinks the fresh juice. The righteous man's life is as a sweet smelling savour. The quality of his living makes for peace and understanding.

Highly Useful

The palm is highly useful. From its fronds people make mats. In the Orient one of the most needed and used articles, people sit on these mats to do their work; on them they rest at night. To shield their homes from rain or wind they are commonly used. What a true picture of the unassuming humble service of the righteous. Jesus Christ towers as a princely palm, and God's promise to the righteous is that he shall flourish as a palm tree.—A message delivered at Bethel Church, Jagdeesphur, India, summarized and translated by Helen E. Nickel.

WORK
The folks who belong to The Church but won't do anything

SIMPLY NO SUBSTITUTE

by Charles A. Wells

Great faith cannot make a church strong unless people in the church are willing to put their faith into action. A parish leader with great faith might say, "We will raise two hundred thousand dollars to build a new edifice that men may worship here in greater beauty and comfort." People may give the money, the building be erected, and yet if they do not also give themselves in loving service, the great new building is soon half empty and without spiritual force. There is simply no substitute for giving ourselves, that the church might minister as Jesus ministered, to the youth, to the lonely, to the impoverished and spiritually needy. Writing a check for the parish budget, attending worship on pretty Sundays is not enough. A church cannot be great without great tasks and those tasks cannot be accomplished without many who will work as well as pray.

The Washington Scene

REVIEW AND PROSPECT

The general character of federal legislation pertaining to United States foreign relations has much to do with the future peace, or lack of it, in the world as a whole. The first session of the eighty-first Congress took some significant steps in international affairs, which may or may not lead to peace.

Treaties Ratified

Two international treaties were ratified during this session of Congress: (1) the North Atlantic Treaty by which twelve nations agreed to consider an armed attack on one as an attack upon all, and (2) the International Wheat Agreement by which the signers agreed to buy and sell, within the next four years, 450 million bushels of wheat each year with a fixed price range. The maximum of this range is $1.80 per bushel while the minimum is $1.50 the first year and decreases to $1.20 the fourth year. About half of our wheat export will likely be sold under this agreement.

Treaty Not Ratified

A very important international treaty has not been ratified by our Senate. It is the United Nations Convention on Genocide which would outlaw mass murder such as practiced by the Nazis and others in the past. The form of the treaty was approved by the United Nation's Assembly and is now before each member nation for ratification. As was done in the case of other proposed treaties, Congressional hearings will be held to weigh the merits of the Convention, likely in January.

Relief and Aid Laws Passed

Congress passed a number of laws giving aid to various peoples around the world. Sixteen million dollars was authorized to aid Palestinian refugees, made homeless by the division of that unhappy land between Arabs and Jews. Another law continued, until June 30, 1950, at least, the United States support of the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund (UNICEF). Much of the work of UNICEF has been in Palestine. Still a third law authorized the use of funds paid by Finland on her World War I debt for exchange of students and educational materials. A fourth law made available four million dollars for Chinese students stranded in this country.

Economic and Military Aid

Over five billion dollars were appropriated for aid to Marshall Plan countries; forty-five million dollars were voted for the Greek-Turkish Arms-Aid program, while almost a billion dollars were appropriated to the Army for occupation costs, including much relief, in occupied countries. An additional billion and a third dollars were authorized for military aid to help the Atlantic Pact signatories, as well as Greece, Turkey, Iran, Korea, the Philippines, and China. The law giving this latter authority is known as the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949.

Reciprocal Trade

The Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act was extended for another three years. Many observers feel the policy

MENNONITE MEN FOR CHRIST MEN

JAPAN is the largest literate non-Christian country speaking one language in which the foundations for Christianity need to be laid. In order to provide a portion of the Scripture for one half of the people of Japan, it would be necessary to make 30,000,000 pieces of literature available," Eric M. North, General Secretary in charge of work abroad for the American Bible Society, stated while reporting to the Advisory Council of that organization on his recent visit to Japan.

Where it is possible to have a suitable type of printing done abroad in lands such as Germany and Japan, the Society provides the material and pays the labor charges. In this way it is possible to assist them economically as well as to make available a supply of the scriptures

South America

W. Stanley Rycroft, Executive Secretary of the Committee on Co-operation in Latin America presented the situation existing in those countries and emphasized the importance of furnishing the Bible and portions to the people. He called attention to the fact that the conditions existing in some sections are very similar to those existing in Russia prior to the revolution.

The Blind

The making available of the Bible and portions of Scripture to the blind abroad as well as in America, is being carried on in increased volume. The Bible in Braille consists of twenty volumns, occupying over five feet of shelf space, and it costs as much as $8.00 a volume to prepare. The copies are made available at less than cost to those who are in need of this type of literature.

For those who cannot read Braille, the Society has recorded the Bible on 169 talking-book records in order that they may hear the message.

Supported by 47 Denominations

The Society has the active support of 47 denominational groups and representatives meet annually to discuss plans for spreading the work of God. It is a wonderful and yet a humbling experience to see the spirit of love, sincerity, and co-operation which is so manifested in these meetings which were held in New York, November 29 and 30.

The Mennonite Quota

The Mennonites have been asked to contribute approximately $15,000 through the churches as their share in carrying out the program. The laymen of the General Conference have the privilege of raising our share, which should be done as quickly as possible and forwarded to the General Conference Headquarters designated for the Laymens Fund, American Bible Society.—Walter H. Temple.

German and Austrian Women Active in Self-help Program

AKRON, PENNSYLVANIA — A report from the Sewing Room at Neustadt, Germany indicates that this aspect of the relief project is serving a useful purpose. During the eighteen months of operation, 630 women have spent a total of 33,020 hours in sewing, or about 54 hours each. During November and December they made warm underclothing for a hundred people, and a hundred coats for girls between six and ten. For the Weiler Children's Home they have knitted a sweater for each child for Christmas. The shoemaker has repaired nearly two thousand pairs of shoes. Neustadt is only one of the centers maintaining sewing room facilities. Similar work is done at Heilbronn Kaiserslautern, Berlin, and Vienna.

New Frankfurt Center to Open

Preparing the new relief center at Frankfurt, Germany for occupancy has recently been the work of David Block and Voluntary Service workers, Melvin Headrick and Paul Suderman. The building has been somewhat damaged during the war and has been vacant for some time, making it necessary to refinish all of the rooms. The ordinary labor is done by these M.C.C. workers while German electricians, plumbers, etc., do their part. When completed, the building will serve as another of the centers in Europe from which a service of rehabilitation goes forth.

To Study Refugee Hard Core

One of the central concerns in the present refugee migration program is the "Hard Core," or group of people from the Russian Mennonite refugees who are not able to migrate to any country because of physical disability or age; or in some cases a family cannot migrate because one member is disqualified. It has not been determined definitely where these people may be cared for permanently. The problem is being taken up with the International Refugee Organization, which has a similar problem in the Hard Core of refugees from various other religious groups and nationalities.

News from Espelkamp, Germany

The men of this reconstruction unit decided to spend Thanksgiving Day in their regular work, so that the refugees might move into their homes sooner. In the evening they invited some German friends to share in a special meeting of singing and prayer.

The readiness of the young men to undertake any of the various building operations stands in sharp contrast to the German custom of having professional specialists for each detail in construction. However in spite of the different practice in building, the work of the Mennonite builders, and particularly their Christian emphasis, is deeply appreciated by the people.

"SHOWER OF SHEETS"

One of the very much-needed items for relief is bedding, particularly sheets. How restful and soothing to the tired body are clean white sheets or warm sheet blankets! But many of our European friends have neither. Thus our workers emphasize the need for sheets for distribution to needy families, as well as in M.C.C. children's homes, community centers, refugees camps and other places.

As an expression of gratitude for our manifold blessings, it is suggested that each member of our church may want to give a special New Year gift of a sheet, blanket or equivalent in muslin. Such a "shower of sheets" would fill a real need.

Plans Laid for Palestine Program

The needs existing in the Palestine Arab refugee camps in Syria have led to plans for opening a service project there. Shipments of clothing, food and blankets are in process of being made up and two workers will be transferred from Europe. Titus Lehman, who has been serving in the Palestine area under the organized program of the American Friends Service Committee, will be available to direct the M.C.C. work after his connection with that organization terminates in January.

Ground Breaking for Reedley Hospital

The building program at Kings View Homes, the M.C.C. mental hospital in California, was initiated on November 20 with the Ground-Breaking services. Participating in this occasion were P. C. Hiebert, Chairman of the M.C.C.; Frank F. Tallman, Director of the California State Department of Mental Hygiene; Arthur Jost, manager of the M.C.C. office in California; and others. The interest shown toward this developing project has been very encouraging.

Eight young men, constituting a Voluntary Service unit, are now engaged in work relating to the construction program there. At present they are excavating for the disposal system, and assisting in the stock-piling of the needed building supplies.

He stated that even though this was his first Christmas away from home and enjoying 90-degree temperature, ice-tea and watermelons, he still had something in common with us because of the celebration of the birth of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.—Corr.

However we at present are still hoping for many more evangelistic missionaries to come out to India. There are still 'the regions beyond' to win for Christ. For 250 miles to the north of Korba there are no churches. The evangelistic missionaries must go there to blaze the trail. We hope and pray that the Waltners may soon be able to return. (They leave on January 26. Ed.)

We were glad to have Miss Aganetha Fast visit us and tell us about our work in China. We were also happy to have Dr. Talbot and Dr. Bauman of Los Angeles visit our Bible School. Dr. Yoder, a former president of Goshen College was also a welcome visitor recently.

A Personal Note

I am still teaching Epistles of the New Testament and Church History in our Bible School. This is my greatest joy—to help train young men and women to win India for Christ.

I wish to thank all who have sent Christmas greetings, Christmas gifts and who have sent prayers to the throne of grace for us. May God bless each giver to missions.

GERMAN MENNONITE LEADER AT BLUFFTON

Ernst Crous will teach in Bluffton from the beginning of the second semester until the spring quarter opens at Bethel. He and his wife were brought to America by the Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges. He is vice-chairman of the German Mennonite Conference and was the German Mennonite delegate to the World Conference at Amsterdam. He and Mrs. Crous will be available for public lectures in the Ohio areas during the time that he is at Bluffton. He taught at Goshen College during the first semester.

The decision of J. N. Smucker to resign from the pastorate of the First Mennonite Church is not only a loss to the church, but also to the college. Students were inspired by his sermons and enjoyed contacts with him.

Miss Erma Stearns, Bluffton College graduate in the class of 1919, will have charge of the library until the close of the academic year. She has been teaching at Upper Sandusky, Ohio, since her graduation from college.

The music department presented a student recital in Ramseyer Chapel Wednesday evening, January 11.

President Ramseyer attended a meeting of the Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges in Cincinnati during the week of January 9, and also the meeting of the Association of American Colleges.

The Student Christian Association is sponsoring the opening of a kitchen in each dormitory to be used by the students for social purposes and for preparation of meals for the ill.

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

The second semester began on Tuesday, January 3. The beginning of the winter term was marked by an increased enrollment of 16 students. The new students represent the following provinces: Manitoba, 10; Saskatchewan, 5; and Ontario, 1. On Friday evening, January 6, a reception-social was held during which they were introduced.

A new course has been introduced into the College curriculum. A number of students have worked in mental hospitals under Vountary Service and a need for a study in abnormal psychology was expressed. This course in abnormal psychology is being taught for the first time this semester. It has been introduced with the aim in mind to give all those who are particularly interested in such work, a better background in this field of study.

BETHEL COLLEGE ANNUAL BIBLE WEEK AND MINISTERS CONFERENCE MARCH 12 to 17, MEMORIAL HALL

The annual Bethel College Bible Week, with Melvin M. Cammack of the National College for Christian Workers, Kansas City, Missouri, as the speaker, promises to be interesting and stimulating. The week will open Sunday night, March 12 and continue through Friday, March 17.

Cammack will speak during afternoons and evenings. He has had many years of service as pastor of churches, as instructor in Christian worker and missionary schools, and as a youth leader. He is a member of the Board of Ministerial Training and Qualifications, and chairman of the nominations committee of the Kansas Methodist Conference. He has had extensive theological training, including graduate work at Cambridge University, England.

At last year's meeting, the Western District Ministers Conference encouraged its program committee and the College to cooperate in arranging for a three-day study conference in the spring. In response to this recommendation Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of Bible Week this year have again been set aside for this purpose. Dr. Cammack will present a series of expository studies on Galatians to the Ministers Conference during these days.

The Bible Week program will include an afternoon series of lectures on "The Problem of Mental Health and Illness and the Church."

Robert W. Tully, director of physcial education and recreation, attended a Recreation Laboratory meeting of the Church of the Brethren for the Eastern Region. Tully, who is a minister of the above denomination, served as a recreation source-leader during the days of the meeting, December 27th to 31st. Mr. Tully is chairman of the interracial committee of the ministerial alliance of Newton.

"One Foot in Heaven" is the title of the play which will be presented by the Junior Class of Bethel College, February 10 and 11. The play is based on the well known book of the same title written by Hartzell Spence.

BETHEL COLLEGE WILL OFFER A SHORT-TERM COURSE entitled "Bible Teaching In Church," February 27 to March 11. Methods and materials for teaching in the Sunday School and Vacation Bible Schools. Credit may be earned in the Evangelical Teacher Training Program. This course is of interest to those teaching children's classes as well as those teaching adults.

CONFERENCE STEWARDSHIP THERMOMETER

At the beginning of this new year we thank all of you who have during 1949 made contributions for conference work and we invite you to take a look at the following information which shows the receipts for the various boards and committees:

Board of Committee	Budget	Receipts to 12-31-49	Per cent of Budget Received
Emergency Relief	$293,250	$129,189	44
Foreign Missions	260,000	230,801	89
Home Missions	60,800	51,823	85
Biblical Seminary	56,000	55,254	99
Peace Committee	35,000	6,525	19
Board of Education	17,250	14,022	80
Board of Publication	10,666	7,629	72
General Treasury	10,350*	7,561	73
Young Peoples Union	4,000	3,583	90
Womens Missionary Association	2,825	1,764	60
Board of Mutual Aid	1,125†	1,384	123
Laymens Bible Fund	1,000	67‡	7
Doctrine and Conduct Committee	500	741	148
	$752,760	$510,343	68

We can easily see that the Relief Board was unable to support relief work as it had planned. The Foreign Mission Board "got by" till December 31. As this article goes to press, the first quarter's share of the budget and salaries has already been paid. We must, during each quarter, receive enough for the next quarter's needs. Will our people remember that this board needs our full support in prayers and gifts?

The Home Mission Board members are "scratching their heads" while they are nearing the bottom of their funds. Some of the other boards find themselves in a similar situation.

All board members feel charged with the responsibility placed upon them by the conference. However, even in the face of continuing urgent needs in all areas of the work, practically all boards cut their budgets for the year 1950 (See the December 13 issue of THE MENNONITE for details).

With God's help we can meet the needs during the coming year. We are, one and all, responsible for our conference work. May we all work together; "seeing we have received this ministry, as we have received mercy, we faint not." (II Cor. 4:1).

Conference Column

We come thanking the Lord for leading the Young People in their recent Council Meeting. We must now turn our faces to the task of preparing for the Young People's Retreat and General Assembly at General Conference in Freeman, South Dakota. But before we go too far, let us be assured of God's presence with us.

It was while Moses was leading the children of Israel into the Promised Land that the Lord refused to go with the people. For the people had sinned and thus were disobedient to God. Moses, however, did not barge ahead with his plans for further progress but was first assured of God's presence when he prayed, "If thy presence go not with me, carry us not up hence."

May this prayer be offered by every young person. First, in behalf of himself; and second, in behalf of our youth work. For "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; they shall walk, and not faint."

Sincerely in Him,
Kenneth Bauman, President
General Conference Young Peoples Union

Editorials

M.C.C. STANDS AT THE FORK IN THE ROAD. The article in this issue entitled "This Year—the Spiritual Equivalent" points this up. The situation which M.C.C. faces is much like that of missions in pre-war Japan which called forth the following comment by John R. Mott: "If we do not do more we have done too much already." While the need for material aid continues as repeated appeals indicate, Peachey points out that the economic recovery of Germany has far surpassed the urgent spiritual recovery. For this reason our European representatives are deeply concerned about entering the doors that have been opened in the hearts of needy Europeans by deeds of mercy which have saved their bodies—entering those doors with the message of mercy that will save their souls. A European pastor has said, "You have shown us; now you must tell us." Is it too much to say that all of our relief work has prepared us for this very hour? And now, what happens in the churches? The bottom seems to be dropping out of our relief giving. One even hears of ministers who openly discourage relief-giving. If we do this how will we dare to face the judgment seat of Christ when he will say to us, "I was naked and ye clothed me not; I was hungry and ye fed me not." We have a tremendous evangelistic responsibility in Europe. That responsibility we all acknowledge. The question that remains is how that obligation will be met. Withdrawing a program that has literally prepared the soil for the gospel and sending representatives of a host of Mennonite conferences or even interdenominational groups who are in no position to follow through with a unified message on the ground work that has been laid—can that be the leading of the Holy Spirit in this situation? We decide on this question as much in our prayer closets and during relief offerings as do our conference representatives on the Mennonite Central Committee. In any case let us ponder well the fact that we have given our gifts to Europe "in the Name of Christ." The name of Christ stands for undiminishing concern for the last, the least, and the lost. Let us not betray our Saviour by withdrawing now.

> We must be conscious of evil and the necessity of an uncompromising alignment with the Christian spirit and ethic. We must speak up against sin. I believe that more often our fault is on the side of being too quiet and passive. —Irvin Horst, (See MENNONITE YOUTH page 62.)

MANY CRITICS OF THE CHURCH stand at a distance and deplore the waste of emotional energy that goes on during its services on Sunday and week nights. Yet if one would investigate the lives of such critics, one would probably find that they are enthusiastic members of veterans' organizations, lodges, or service clubs all of which have their own "services" and sometimes much more elaborate rituals than the church. Man is so created that if he is normal, he inherently seeks some kind of association with others which inevitably expresses itself emotionally and ritually. But in this area as in every other area there is a basic group loyalty that judges every other group loyalty. That is loyalty to the Church of Jesus Christ. The Church is the Body of Christ. Every human being is intended to be a member of that body. When an individual joins all sorts of organizations to the neglect of the Church, he not only mis-directs what is highest in himself but also endangers all group living which is only possible through a love for others—one of the fundamental ideals around which the Church is built and which stands or falls with the Church.

TODAY'S MORNING PAPER (January 17) carries the news of the conversion of a movie actress, Colleen Townsend, who plans to quit the movies, and, as the newspaper put it, "dedicate her life to Christianity." It was further stated that she intends to enter theological school in fall in preparation for working with orphans. Whoever is responsible for this invasion of Hollywood with the Gospel of Christ is to be commended wholeheartedly. The saving gospel is intended for the 'ups-and-ins' as well as the down-and-outers. Furthermore, is not this the real solution in cleaning up the offerings of filmdom? One could almost wish that people like Miss Townsend would stay on the inside and unite with other like-minded people, and pray and work for a wholesale moral housecleaning in Hollywood by way of the sound conversion of the people who produce the pictures.—J.J.E.

John Wesley, the founder of Methodism, lived in an age of hard drinking, when almost no one recognized the evils of drink. He was a pioneer of the temperance reform. In 1773 he said: "It is amazing that the preparing or selling of this poison should be permitted in any civilized state. Is it wise to barter men's lives for money? What remedy is there for this sore evil . . . .? By prohibiting forever, by making a full end of that bane of health, that destroyer of strength, of life, and virtue, distilling."

Out of a population of 160,000,000 in Africa, there are 800 different languages. This is one of the reasons why the missionaries there have a difficult task.

HOW TO USE TOBACCO

The Christian Advocate says that some time ago a tobacco company sent packages of cigarettes to some high school boys with this explanation: "We are sending you a package of our finest cigarettes. We hope you will use them to your satisfaction and want more."

One of the boys used the cigarettes, and wrote back: "I received the package of cigarettes, and used them to my satisfaction. I steeped them in a quart of water, and sprayed our bug-infected rosebushes. Every bug died. These cigarettes are sure a good poison. I want more next spring if any bugs survive."

From the Heart to the Heart

Follow Thou Me

by Walter Gering

THIS is the challenge which comes to all of us: "Follow THOU me." Peter must learn a fundamental lesson ere he goes out into the service for his Lord. Already he had learned but he must learn once more. He must learn the lesson of personal responsibility irrespective of the faithfulness or lack of faithfulness on the part of others.

How natural it was for him to speak as he did. We are all inclined to respond in that way. He had just been told of the task which was to be his in days to come. At his side stood John, the beloved disciple of the Lord; not a word was spoken to him concerning his tasks. Even before he realized what he was saying Peter burst out with the words: "Lord, and what shall this man do? If I am to feed thy sheep even at the cost of death, what shall this man do?"

How perfectly human that was. How often the spirit of that response to a divine commission has manifested itself within the ranks of even modern disciples of our Lord. We have committed ourselves to Him and we want to do our part for Him. But we want to be sure that those about us will be doing their share also; they too should shoulder a part of the responsibility. If not, why should we bear the brunt of the battle for His cause?

How simple, yet how heart searching was the reply of the Lord. "What is that to thee? Follow THOU me." Therein lies the lesson for Peter— for us all. Faithfulness on our part is not to be measured in terms of the degree of faithfulness on the part of others. Service for Him is a personal responsibility for which we and we alone must give an account. Though the disciples should prove faithless and even deny him, Peter must be true to Him and His cause. He must toil until the close of day and on into the night.

Today there comes a similar challenge to those of us who have yielded our lives unto the Lord. In these days of moral corruption many are giving themselves to the lusts of the world and the flesh, swept along by the mighty tide of the present hour. There are those who have yielded themselves to the ways of the world; to dishonest, practices, greed, pride, selfishness. There are those who have been overcome by bitterness, hatred and cruel cry of extermination and revenge. Others have denied the faith of their fathers purchased at a tremendous price and handed down as a priceless heritage. To us comes the same challenge as of old: What is that to thee—what if others on your side are faithless and unworthy of the name of Christ—what is that to thee? Follow THOU me.—Reprinted from The Coop Messenger, Moundridge, Kansas.

Clasped hands win more victories than clenched fists.

Twenty-five Years

A Minister in Two Continents

by A. J. Neuenschwander

ON FEBRUARY 12, 1925, David Koop, was ordained as minister of the gospel, in Russia. From the turmoil in Russia during the aftermath of World War I until they were settled in their home near Curitiba, the Koops experienced many anxious moments. Yet the Lord guided Brother Koop and his wife and they gladly give Him all the praise and honour.

During the pioneering days in Brazil the minister had to work hard for the daily bread of the growing family like everyone else. While the writer was a guest in the home last May, the 85th birthday of his mother who lives with her son, was observed.

Although Koop did not have the advantage of much special training, the Lord granted to him leadership ability. Ever since the organization of the General Conference Mennonites in Brazil, he has served as chairman of the conference and also served on the planning committee for the All-Mennonite South American conferences which are made up of the ministers and deacons.

In the summer of 1948 he and Jacob Isaak represented the General Conference Mennonites in Brazil and Paraguay at the Fourth World-Mennonite Conference, held in Goshen, Indiana and Newton, Kansas. Before returning to their homeland, the two leaders visited many Mennonite communities in Canada and the United States.

Koop serves as elder of a congregation that has two places of worship, one in a suburb of Curitiba, and the other one about 8 miles out in the country. The congregation cooperated with the Mennonite Brethren congregation in erecting the church buildings and the two groups have joint worship services three Sundays per month. On the fourth Sunday each group has separate services. Brother Koop uses the expository method in preaching with a definite evangelistic emphasis and regards it as a great privilege to be permitted to expound the "unsearchable riches of Christ."

May the Lord grant many more years to them both as they serve Him.

From the Home Mission Front

Serving Our Brethren South of the Equator

by A. J. Neuenschwander

AT our last Home Mission Board meeting held in Mountain Lake, Minnesota, November 29 to December 1, 1949, the needs of our brethren in South America were carefully considered. Every member of the Board was present and the following assisted in the study of the problems: A. W. Friesen, John E. Kaufman, H. J. Andres, and William T. Snyder, of M.C.C. All these men had been in South America.

Secure Deed in Uruguay

Mr. Snyder gave us the good news that finally the deed for the land purchased by M.C.C. in Rio Negro, Uruguay, was to be delivered early in December. El Ambo, as the tract is known, will offer homes for many of our Mennonites in that country.

It was decided to have 1,600 copies of Der Bote sent again this year to those that had received this German paper last year. Two thousand copies of the 1950 Jahrbuch were ordered. Local ministers are to assist in the distribution.

The needs in Brazil had been met last year with the erection and dedication of the Mennonite church at Witmarsum, Santa Catarina. Support for workers is to continue as last year.

In Paraguay—Need More Acute

In Paraguay the needs are more acute, largely because of the influx of recent refugees. This means a need of more room in the schools and also more room for the worshippers. We sing:

I love thy kingdom, Lord,
The House of Thine abode,
The Church our blest Redeemer saved
With His own precious blood.

Our South American brethren have the same love and devotion that we have. We rejoice that in Philadelphia, Friesland, Chaco, our General Conference people are building a church of their own, after being there about 19 years. Until now they have always used the school house or some hall or worshipped with the Mennonite Brethren in their church, which was built about five years ago. At the present time there are so many worshippers that Sunday morning union services are impossible. For this reason the new building was a necessity.

The Friesland Colony, on the east side of the Parana River, is about 16 years old and thus far has not had a church building, but they also used the school building for worship purposes. This group felt the need of building a church and so have made plans and are sawing the wood for the structure.

Aid had been given earlier for the Philadelphia church, but more was needed. The sum of $4,300 was sent the other day for these two projects. The larger part was as gifts and the smaller part as loans.

Bible School and School Support

The Union Bible School, Philadelphia, and the four central schools, one for each Colony—Friesland, Fernheim, Volendam, and Neuland—received $750 for the coming year. Religious instruction is given in the central schools in addition to the academic subjects.

There are so many orphans in Paraguay because one or the other of the parents was verschleppt (lost) in Russia. Four hundred dollars was sent to the Executive Committee of Paraguay for them to distribute to the neediest ones. Members of the Executive Committee are: Ernst Harder, chairman, Hans Epp, A. A. Harder, Jacob Isaac, and Hans Rempel.

Perhaps some congregations and Sunday school classes, brotherhoods, or C. E. societies might wish to make contributions for these causes. When sending gifts to General Conference Headquarters, 722 Main Street, Newton, Kansas, designate South American Building Fund or Memorial Orphan Fund.

The prayer appeal for these fields is that they might keep their faith and devotion to the Lord clear and strong, and also pray for their material well being.

Progress

When Poor People Gave Till It Hurt

by C. P. Lohrenz

AFTER having seen most of the dorfs (villages) in Fernheim one again sees the difference between old and new colonists when one goes to Neuland Colony, the new colony still further inland which was started by the refugees.

The Chaco settler does not have to clear the huge forests that the Volendam settlers contend with. He also has a very cheap source of labor in the native Indian, which the colonies on the east side of the river do not have. However, these people struggle with grasshoppers, ants, drought, and above all the extreme isolation from the rest of the civilized world.

Much has been done to transfer the Chaco into a livable place. Last year was very difficult for the old colonists as well as on the new settlers. For ten months they had no rain and planting was late. When finally they got a stand the grasshoppers appeared and cleared most everything to the ground.

The new refugees were a tremendous drain on the old-timers. In giving them the hand of brotherly assistance the old settlers shared and gave until it hurt. Proportionately they probably did as much, or more, in the resettlement program than the North American Mennonites. Their giving has received little publicity and it is often felt that we from the North have settled the new refugees with our generous giving. Without the aid of the old colonists our financial outlay would have been much larger.

Poverty Among Old-timers Too

One sees poverty among the old timers as well as among the refugees. A Brazilian Mennonite who visited in Paraguay repeatedly said that two years ago before the coming of the new settlers, he had judged the economic status of the Fernheimers as follows: twenty-five per cent of them lived in favorable conditions. They had such home comforts as chairs with backs on them, furniture and the other equipment to make a home homey, and enough to eat well. Another twenty-five per cent had the necessities of life with few comforts, and that the remaining fifty per cent of the people definitely did not have enough to make life enjoyable.

The great distance from the markets, the complete isolation from the outside world, and the adverse climatic conditions causes one to wonder when all will ever be able to live on a satisfactory standard. It will certainly always be difficult. One thing is certain, this type of life develops in the people a ruggedness, an individuality, and a fierce loyalty to their colony that only a pioneering life can develop. One is mellowed as one shares the conviction of many colonists that the Lord has had a hand in bringing them to the Chaco. The Lord must certainly have a plan and there must be a future for these people.

ERNA FAST KEYNOTES BETHEL RELIEF DRIVE

Miss Erna Fast, a Bethel graduate and overseas M.C.C. worker, spoke in chapel in connection with the opening of the relief drive of Bethel College. Miss Fast, who is scheduled to do work with German leaders in a state teachers college in Germany, told the students about German youth. In evaluating the state of the young people of Germany today, she said, one must consider the following points: the thorough indoctrination of the young by the Nazis, the horrors of the war, the collapse of Germany in the war, and the adverse effect of the occupation forces on the Germans.

The annual relief drive of Bethel Family (students and staff) began with the chapel meeting during which Miss Fast spoke. A booth had been set up in the hall of the main building where contributions were received. On the side of this on a little platform sat Wolfgang Fieguth, a German exchange student who polished shoes all day receiving contributions to the relief drive in return. In a few hours the school bells rang twice indicating that $200 had been collected already. The objective is $1,000. This amount is to pay for the maintaining of the Bethel College Christian worker in a German state teacher college. Last year the Bethel family raised $1,350 for the support of relief work in Mainz University.

SEMINARY OCTET REPORTS

"And when they arrived, they gathered the church together and declared all that God had done with them . . ." Acts 14:27.

With this text Marvin Dirks opened the special prayer meeting in which the Seminary octet presented testimonies concerning their recent holiday trip through Kansas, Oklahoma, and Illinois, principally however in Oklahoma. Among the suggestions made to their fellow students by the octet members were the following: We must really learn to know and to love the people who make up our local congregations. We must avoid all spiritual pride because the Lord has permitted us to have a full education. While studying rigorously we must truly keep the faith. There are many problems of evangelism among people of a German speaking background as they seek to reach out in the larger English speaking communities. There is much common ground among our Mennonite people despite certain doctrinal conflicts. We must become humble, simple, God-fearing witnesses as we preach and teach and live the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Another very important item of news is the announcement by John T. Neufeld, business manager of the school, that we concluded the year 1949 with $55,250 of gifts. This was only $750 short of the budget of $56,000 set for this year. We express our appreciation to faithful stewards in our churches and for the promises of the Lord which have been confirmed through these good people.

The first vesper service for the year 1950 was held Sunday, January 15. The octet, which presented sixteen programs during their recent trip, had charge of the service. Members of this group are Mr. and Mrs. Levi Koehn, Erna Friesen, Bertha Fast, Elaine Waltner, Rudolph Marten, Paul Boschman, and O'Ray Graber

BLUFFTON TO PREPARE ELEMENTARY TEACHERS

Preliminary plans have been completed to begin preparation of elementary school teachers in the fall of 1950. Bluffton College has restricted its work in teacher training to the secondary-school field, for the last twenty-five years, with the exception of art and music. Due to the demand for elementary teachers and the demand for that type of training by our students, it was decided to again enter that field. A competent teacher has been employed and tentative approval has been given by the state authorities. While intended as a four year program, so long as the current teacher shortage exists certification can be secured on a shorter program.

The Ottawa and Rockford Presbyterian congregations have been supplied in recent weeks by Bluffton College faculty members.

President Ramseyer visited the Apostolic Church, Trenton, Ohio recently, speaking at the morning service.

The building fund has now reached a total of $203,000.00.

Two plays are to be given during the second semester by the speech department. "Antigone" is to be given February 23, 24; "Macbeth" is to be given during the commencement week activities.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

Louis L. Linscheid, instructor in industrial arts, was the chapel speaker on Wednesday. He spoke on the place of industrial arts in our schools. He traced the history of industrial arts, its relation to general education, and its practical uses for our rural communities.

Two college debate teams are participating in the Invitational Speech Tournament to be held at Sioux Falls College at Sioux Falls, South Dakota. Twenty-five schools will take part in the meet.

President E. J. Miller was in Kansas conducting special meetings in the Eden Church the first week in January. The Harold Gross family also spent a week in Kansas.

The January meeting of the Board of Directors was held on January 10.

Jottings

—First Church, Wadsworth, Ohio: The new year started with watch night services from nine to twelve on December 31, communion on January 1, and a new Bible study class on January 5. The congregational business meeting was held on the evening of January 9 with reports from various treasurers and an interesting report from Pastor Neuenschwander as to his activities since coming to our church. The election of offcers and delegates to the Middle District Conference followed.—George McBride, Corr.

—Grace Church, Pandora, Ohio: On December 18 a union choir of eighty voices from the churches of the community presented Handel's "Messiah" under the direction of Earl Lehman of Bluffton to a large audience at the St. Johns Church. An impressive worship service was led by our pastor, E. J. Bohn, on Christmas morning consisting of scripture passages interspersed with carols and several numbers of special music and a Christmas meditation. In the evening the children and some of our young people of the Sunday school gave an interesting program after which the various classes presented their white gift offering which amounted to $551.24. On New Year's night our young people who were home from college presented a New Year's candle light service, "Darkness and Light." On January 5 the Women's Missionary Society had an all day of sewing at the church with a program in the afternoon on "The Church in the Community."—Susan Steiner, Corr.

—Fairfield Church, Fairfield, Pennsylvania: Our congregation held its annual business meeting Sunday afternoon, January 8. The following officers were elected for the year. Chairman, H. Y. Musselman; Assistant Chairman, K. D. Bream; Trustee, B. E.; Benner; Secretary, Mrs. Ira Dunmire; Assistant Secretary, Ira Dunmire; Organist, Mrs. Cora Martin; Assistant Organist, H. Y. Musselman; Chorister, A. W. Roth; Sunday school Superintendent, J. R. Cogley; Secretary of Friendly Society, Mrs. Lloyd Benner; Assistant Secretary of Friendly Society, Mrs. H. Y. Musselman; Corresponding Secretary, Henry Burkhard.—Henry Burkhard, Corr.

—First Church, Fredonia, Kansas: Thanksgiving services were held November 18 to 20 with W. F. Unruh of North Newton, Kansas, in charge. His services and visits in the homes were much appreciated. On December 15 Clarence Seibel and Mary Kowlowsky were united in marriage at Ebenfeld Mennonite Brethren Church, Hillsboro, Kansas. Our Christmas program was well attended on Christmas night. The program was based on eight scenes of the Christmas story in flannelgraph. All day services were held on January 1 with basket lunch and presentation of gifts to Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Seibel, followed with the annual church election. Plans for a new church lawn were made.—Mrs. Sam. Harms, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Inman, Kansas: The 75th anniversary of the founding of our church was celebrated Sunday, January 8. In the morning services our thoughts were directed to the past. D. Friesen gave a thanksgiving message. Missionary John Thiessen told of our wonderful heritage for which many have been persecuted. In the afternoon our pastor, P. T. Neufeld, gave the history of our church. "The Spiritual Life of Our Church" was Missionary Thiessen's topic for the afternoon. In the evening John Enns spoke on the topic, "What the Church Means to Me." Then J. H. Ediger directed our thoughts to the future of our church. Musical numbers were given throughout the day by various groups, including a song by the thirteen who came from Russia. On January 9 our church canned 1,568 cans of meat for relief.—Corr.

—Bethel Church, Perkasie, Pennsylvania: Our church received five young people by baptism and confession of faith after a period of instruction at the fall communion. One adult was received by the right hand of fellowship. Our young people, led by our pastor, Ward W. Shelly, conducted services at the county jail and Tylersport Chapel during the fall. The usual week of services for World Week of Prayer was observed in our town by one service in each church with the six pastors exchanging pulpits. A fine spirit of Christian fellowship prevailed. The Christmas season was enjoyed in our churches, and unusually mild weather prevailed at that time.—Fannie E. Landis, Corr.

—First Church, Aberdeen, Idaho: On Christmas Day we had infant consecration before the regular services. In the evening the thirty-five voice choir sang a beautiful Christmas cantata. Sunday, January 1, was another full and blessed day. In the morning our newly elected deacon, John D. Becker, was installed and the new public address system and belfry amplifier were dedicated. In the evening we had rather impressive communion services together with the many students from the various schools who were home for the Christmas vacation. The fifteen minutes of chimes, Hammond organ music, or other sacred music over the belfry amplifier seems an appropiate call to worship.—Corr.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: The annual congregational business meeting was held on January 3. The Women's Missionary Society held an all-day quilting in the church basement January 4 with thirty members present. Among the items of business was the decision to support Barbara Dalton, a native girl of India, who is now married and has two children. Her husband is pursuing some Bible studies. In many years past this girl was supported by our junior Sunday school. A girls' radio quintet from Winesburg, Ohio, gave a gospel program in song, reading, and testimony on January 8 in our church.—Mrs. Ivan. Badertscher, Corr.

—Zion Church, Donnellson, Iowa: Eight new members were received into the church by baptism Sunday, December 18. At the Christmas morning service we observed holy communion. On Sunday morning, January 1, we were privileged to have the Men's Gospel Team Quartet from Bluffton College with Robert Ramseyer as speaker and their advisor, Howard Raid, with us for an inspiring service. Our church had union services this past week in observance of Universal Week of Prayer. The general theme of the week was "Witnessing for Christ and His Church." Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Krehbiel recently observed their 57th wedding anniversary.—Mrs. Milton Krebill, Corr.

—First Church of Christian, Moundridge, Kansas: After almost 46 years of service as pastor of our church, P. P. Wedel tendered his resignation at the Sunday morning services on January 1 to take effect on July 1, 1950. He also announced to the congregation that after retirement Mrs. Wedel and he will continue their residence at Moundridge and will help along in the Lord's work as opportunity, time, and health will permit, and that he does not intend to accept another pastorate. The junior choir rendered music at the Sunday school Christmas program and at the Christmas morning services. Communion services were observed on Christmas Day. Evangelistic services will be held each evening from February 5 to 10. Erland Waltner will be the speaker.—Mrs. Willis Voran, Corr.

—First Church, Reedley, California: We are happy to have the men's quartet from Bethel College present a program Sunday evening, January 8. Some of the men of the Voluntary Service Unit at the Kingsview Home attend our church services regularly and were in charge of one evening service duirng Prayer Week. —Mrs. R. Harder, Corr.

Comments by the Editor—"Voluntary Service and Missions"

ONE sometimes hears the comment that there is a conflict between Voluntary Service and Missions. By stressing Voluntary Service, you do so at the expense of Missions. Although, in a way this may seem true, there is very real reason to believe that such need not be the case.

There are several reasons for this. Before one comes to a conclusion, those reasons need to be considered.

First of all, the Mission program of our church has not had a more difficult time in obtaining personnel than they did a decade ago. Although there is need for more talent in the field, we have not heard that recruitment has become more difficult since Voluntary Service has called upon the talents of the youth of the church.

Second, to a certain point, Missions and Voluntary Service move along the same path together. Any mission, to gain entrance into the hearts of men, must be a service-performing agency. Therefore, health, education, and economic improvement all are part of a mission program. It is in these realms that Voluntary Service performs its task. They, too, seek to improve the status of people thus making real the testimony of the gospel to minister to both physical and spiritual needs.

Third, the testimony coming back from Voluntary Service units indicates that tomorrow's church leadership may well be in training in such units today. Youth who didn't have a care in the world and hardly a serious thought, after a trip to Europe and a season of work with European youth in service units, come home with a new realization of their own responsibilty and a sudden insight into the reality of the gospel as the answer to men's needs. The same experience is that of workers in hospitals, American slums, missions, and the many other places where service units have labored. Voluntary Service deeply affects the lives of youth participating in it.

Finally, Voluntary Service makes starkly real the things that have been spoken from the pulpit and printed in the pages of our Sunday school leaflets and church literature all these years. Suddenly youth have the opportunity of seeing the gospel work in dramatic situations of real life. All these years we have gone along with the Master agreeing to the truth of what He says. Now, in a slum, in a mental hospital, on a mission field, in the tragedy of Europe, youth are put with the opportunity of putting to work Christ's redeeming and forgiving love. No longer is the work of the gospel insulated by good people, a family, a comfortable church, a collection plate through which we do our work in far-flung places. Now, with a bunch of dirty urchins who occupy themselves with thoughts of how better to lie and steal, youth are put to work. Can they demonstrate God's will to a cantankerous lot of mental patients befuddled, dirty, irresponsible, and made as they are? Can youth prove to slum kids who don't know what human love is and who have spent their days being kicked around, that the Christian gospel is for them and can redeem them even in their squalor and sin? Can youth who haven't known a day of crazed fear in their life and don't know what hunger or cold or poverty is, bring comfort to youth in Europe who for a long decade have known nothing else than this?

Voluntary Service puts youth where the whole gospel of Christ can become a living reality right before their eyes. For youth who have experienced that, the work and ministry of the church becomes of supreme importance. Missions, then, should benefit from this new movement in our midst. E.L.

From the Mission Front

He Took Up The Challenge

by Helen Kornelson

LET ME tell you of a talented young man of our church. He is a fine Christian lad, consecrated and devoted to the Lord Jesus Christ. His parents used to belong to very low caste. The parents both became Christians, and their whole family of six children had the happy privilege of growing up in a Christian home and receiving a Christian training. This second youngest is very sensitive of nature and oh, so devoted to and concerned about his invalid mother. He is very talented, and also very conscientious in whatever he does. In two years he had worked himself into a Grade-A Pundit (language teacher), whereas it takes most people five to seven years. He did it mostly through strenuous labor. He was an excellent teacher and taught most thoroughly. Yet he was not altogether happy in this work. He felt very keenly that the Lord wanted to use him in a more needy field. All of last winter he earnestly sought the Lord's will. The verse of special comfort to him was II Chronicles 20:15: " . . . the battle is not yours, but the Lord's."

One morning he surprised me by telling me he was giving up his present work of teaching and was planning to enter a medical college. He is there now, and is most happy. He definitely feels that this is the Lord's will for him. Although we are sorry to have lost him as a Pundit, we are nevertheless happy for him. Our present need here is more medical help, and we thank God that this young man is taking up the challenging task to serve in the best capacity possible.

Pray for him that he may remain steadfast and immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord. He needs our prayers. Pray also for more such consecrated young people. The Indian church needs them. The world over needs them. Let us together serve the Lord as best we can. Satan will try to discourage us, but let us remember "When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him."—The Y. P. Messenger.

Voluntary Service Means Witnessing

by Irvin Horst

Dear VSer's:

NOW that I have had the opportunity to visit a number of the units, to speak with you and see you at your work, and after some prodding from the home office, I have consented to pass on a few of the ideas which came to me. I did have a few "meditations" after I left the units, in spite of the hot weather and the careening buses.

Subtract an Ocean Trip

1. The Similarity of V. S. to Relief Service. I did not visit a single unit where I was not reminded of many similarities to our Mennonite relief services as I saw them in Holland, Germany, and France. Subtract the trip across the ocean and a foreign culture and you have in V.S. basically what you have on the relief field: the abnormal, the crisis situation, innocent victims of circumstance, victims of violent evil. Even much of the overt routine is the same. I saw the girls at the Washington Industrial-Home School Annex putting children to bed, and that was the last thing I saw our workers do when I left Holland. Of course, there is still a greater similarity between the motivation and spirit of V. S. and that of relief. The conviction that the spiritual is basic, the implicit faith in the way of love, the refusal to discriminate, the endeavor to be sympathic and understanding—all this is the creed of Mennonite service whether it be V. S. or relief.

Islands of Christian Stability

2. The Paradox of Witnessing. I was personally inspired during my visits to see how our V.S. units are islands of Christian stability, character, and witness—and natural they are about it. I suspect that the same thing is happening in V.S. that took place on many of our Mennonite relief fields: the quiet, faithful devotion to good works has a great and effective witness that sometimes almost startles us. Possibly this happens because in loving service we sublimate our own selfish wills and God is able to use us effectively; more effectively than when we stand up and preach and have it all figured out how God can save the world. Not that we shouldn't preach, some of you have had occasion to speak about your faith, but I am convinced that the unobtrusive, sincere manner in which we serve in V.S. is one of the effective ways to give a Christian witness.

A Compulsion to Witness

But this is only one side of our concern about witnessing. We must also have some kind of awareness, a compulsion to witness for Christ. We must be conscious of evil and the necessity of an uncompromising alignment with the Christian spirit and ethic. We must speak up against sin. I believe that more often our fault is on the side of being too quiet and passive. We also need to be aggressive in experimenting with techniques of kindness with patients and in registering in a postive way a protest against insensitiveness and ethical indifference often on the part of attendants and staff.

Both Quiet and 'Loud'

One of the secrets of successful witnessing in V. S., it seems to me, then, is an understanding of this seeming paradox—of being both quiet and 'loud,' both humble and courageous, both doing and speaking. That is, we don't make the witness an end in itself; we submerge ourselves in good works so that God may use us in His own way and time as instruments of His peace and love. But let us speak when the Spirit moves. Possibly Mennonites have a distinctive manner of witnessing, which is very effective and which we need to discover.

3. Relationships with Attendants and Staff. I was greatly interested to observe how that in most cases our V.S. units have the respect and support of the project administration right to the very top. This is a good sign and certainly necessary for a successful period of service. However, I caught myself being pretty naive about this whole matter. Sometimes we are inclined to take over their ideas and follow their 'line.' Some of your administrators are earnest Christians and all of them need to be respected, but just because they are important does not mean that they are always senstive to sin. It is so easy to accept them as 'nice' people. When one gets around in the world, however, one soon discovers that "the people who are labeled nice are the ones most capable of crucifying the Divine Truth and the Eternal Love." Don't get me wrong—there is always a place for Christian

Relief Program Into New Phase

This Year — The Spiritual Equivalent

by Paul Peachey

TWO days ago for the first time I showed the colored slides of M.C.C. meat processing to a German audience without eliciting hungry gasps. Recently Norman Collisson, retiring chief of the E. C. A. mission to Germany, stated in a farewell article that Marshall Plan aid has now entered "second phase," the first having supplied "the average man with the essentials of life." Yes, the dramatic and heroic days for the relief worker are ended. But Collisson continued, "the more delicate and certainly the much more difficult objectives lie ahead." What is true in economic realm is even more true in the religious. A retiring O.M.G.U.S. (Occupation Military Government of the United States) official who had been concerned with the youth reorientation program stated that anyone now recognizes that economic recovery in Germany has far surpassed the moral and spiritual.

This does not mean that serious physical needs no longer exist such a housing shortage, refugees, and low-income groups, but it does mean that in the year ahead we will be striving hard to hammer out the spiritual equivalent of broetchen in Hamburg, shoe heels in Heibronn, brick walls in Espelkamp, and vaccines in Naples. A Protestant pastor recently remarked, "You have shown us; now you must say it." Our symbol and motto have continually proclaimed that "man does not live by bread alone" but working in an organization whose commission and aims are relief and not directly evangelism may have tended to erect a partition in our thinking between two thus arbitrarily separated areas in Christian service and witness. No, in Christ's own ministry these two areas were simultaneous and identical and though the way cannot now be foreseen either from the organizational end or from the field technique at the other end, ours is the task to find the way. If we have had an effective and valid ministry to supply bread to starving people so that they can regain strength to go forward with the real purpose of life, then certainly the Christian essence that validated this ministry has an even greater relevancy in helping people to again achieve lives with real meaning and purpose.

Because of the very nature of the case, technique will vary from plare to place and will have to be worked out as we proceed but everywhere the spiritual demand upon us as workers will become greater than ever. We cannot impart unless we possess. Jesus said as he stood before the searching soul of Nicodemus, "We speak that we do know and testify that we have seen."

"Oh, lead me, Lord, that I may lead
The wandering and the wavering feet;
O feed me, Lord, that I may feed
Thy hungering ones with manna sweet.

O fill me, with Thy fullness, Lord,
Until my very heart o'erflow
In kindling thought and glowing word,
Thy love to tell, Thy praise to show."

tactfulness, but the Christian is always dead set against evil—even in high places. Sometime I would like to hear a discussion on Chrstian diplomacy versus Christian forthrightness.

Inter-Mennonite Contacts

4. Group Living. Many of you have excellent living quarters in terms of group activities and fellowship. This ought to be one of the most valuable experiences of the summer. Many of us who have been in C.P.S. and relief service treasure the inter-Mennonite family contacts. We feel that such fellowship has not deprived us of anything but that rather we have all gained. Sometimes this can be a cause of tension. We Mennonites, it seems, have not learned how to disagree without letting our emotions produce feelings of resentment and hate. A person who has convictions is steadfast, sharing, but also humble.

5. Spiritual resources. We are living in an age when "the spirit is lost in the activism of externals." We depend on our own concepts and abilities, but human resources are very shallow indeed even if they are nominally Christian. So much of so-called Christianity means little to the world because it has no real, vital content. We have the form—organization, activity, etc.—but the content relates to our own individual experience with God and our consecration and renewal in order that we be filled with the Spirit and that the will of God may be done through us. Reading the Word of God, prayer, meditation, are so often not only the resources of our spiritual life but also the measure of our effectiveness. (Remember, God's "effectiveness" may be different from our own idea or those of others.) We cannot bring peace and love unless there is great divine peace and love in our own lives. How little we realize the possibilities of personal fellowship with God! Francis of Assisi was so filled with the love of God that even the animals and birds felt its influence. Some of you have related how the most warped and 'animal' of patients have responded to love. "God will have us perfectly subject unto Him, that, being inflamed with His love, we may transcend the narrow limits of human reason."

Not by word of mouth full often
Is the world convinced of truth
But the deed of loving service
From the heart brings fullest proof.

Yours sincerely, Irvin B. Horst

Beyond Our Own

WEST VIRGINIA—A Baptist clergyman in Kanawha County, West Virginia, has asked the members of his church to have their property taxes increased. Pointing out that his own personal property had been assessed at $500, he told the congregation that the books in his personal library alone were worth more than that. He had his own evaluation raised to about $3,000. His point is that tax levies are so low the local government has inadequate funds to operate schools. In the interest of citizenship he thinks church members should be willing to render unto Caesar what Caesar needs.—Gospel Herald

The (atom) bomb is described by the Armed Forces Chemical Journal as about the size of a softball. Its weight is given at about thirty pounds. Present production is not far from a bomb a week. One of the top United States atomic scientists, J. Robert Oppenheimer, estimates that all-out production could provide as many as 1,000 bombs in two years. Cost per bomb now is around $1,000,000.—U. S. News and World Report

Mrs. James M. Evans, secretary of World Missions of the United Council of Church Women, calls attention to the fact that the Council will observe its World Day of Prayer (observed annually on the first Friday in Lent) on Friday, February 24th, 1950, a date which comes in Brotherhood Week this year.

Councils of Church Women throughout the country have been active in the observance of Brotherhood Week each year and are again being urged by their leaders to participate in this observance.

NEW YORK CITY. How can Protestantism interest the golf-minded, auto-loving city dweller as well as the over-crowded penny pinched slum dweller?

These are a few of the problems which will be tackled by more than 400 church and mission leaders at the National Convocation on the City Church to be held at Columbus, Ohio, January 23 to 24, according to the Rev. Dr. Ross W. Sanderson, acting executive secretary of the Joint Commission on the Urban Church.

HILLSBORO, KANSAS. Anniversary services, on the occasion of the founding of the Mennonite Brethren Church in Russia in 1860 were held at the M.B. Church in Hillsboro and at Tabor College.

MISSION BRIEFS

NEWS FLASH FROM CHINA

From Chengtu, West China, where our missionaries are carrying on their work behind the 'bamboo curtain' comes the good news in the form of a wire as of January 13, 1950: "ALL WELL, HAPPY, WORK AS USUAL, PROGRESSING, CONTINUE PRAYERFUL SUPPORT. PHILIPPIANS 4:6, 7." It will be remembered that Chengtu, large West China city, and last mainland capital of the Nationalist Government, recently fell into the hands of the Chinese Communists. The wire was sent to W. C. Voth in Hongkong, who in turn forwarded the news. He also informs us that surface mail has been resumed between Hongkong and Chengtu.

Protest has been voiced by National Association of Evangelicals in Washington over the participation of United States navy planes in a Catholic celebration. A squadron of Naval Air Reserve planes was sent 100 miles from Willow Grove naval air station to New Columbus, Pennsylvania, to participate in a Roman Catholic procession to honor St. Theresa. Apparently the mission had authorization through the offices of Secretary of the Navy Francis P. Matthews, a Catholic. — Covenant Weekly

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA.—Los Angeles reports that the police bill due to liquor is eleven times all the license money the city receives. A recent report from San Jose shows that the police court and charity costs of the city are more than ten times all the revenue derived from alcoholic beverages.—The Clipsheet

WINONA LAKE, INDIANA. — An organ was played in the Free Methodist church, Winona Lake, Ind., for the first time in the denomination's history. Until a few years ago, no musical instrument was permitted in the church, but the General Conference lifted the ban in 1944, allowing local congregations to furnish instrumental music, if desired. —Watchman Examiner

AKRON PENNSYLVANIA. In a recent discussion with Richard Hertzler, who is secretary of the relief committee among the Mennonites in Germany, European M. C. C. Relief-director Walter Eicher was impressed with the fact that the German Mennonites still place much value in meats, fat, soap, flour, and Purina as relief materials. They feel that there will be a need for this assistance for some time to come, and expressed the wish that we would not think of discontinuing our service in this line. They could also use more clothing, and in fact, feel that they have a rather great need for more clothing. This information on the materials most useful in relief work, will be of interest to those supporting the work.

News From Gronau Refugee Camp

A recent report from Siefried Janzen describes the life at Gronau Camp during the period when Mennonite processing had been delayed because of the eligibility question. When processing came to a sudden halt, and the emigration hopes of many were shattered, the refugees nevertheless took the news in a spirit of resignation and prayer. Then followed weeks of suspense, anxiety, discouragement, and frustration as the matter was reviewed by officials.

When approval was finally given, there was much activity at Gronau. The office staff worked many hours overtime, to get the necessary papers prepared. However, the time was not too busy for prayer. The camp leaders proclaimed the news among the people and all joined in an hour of silence and prayer in gratitude for the deliverance wrought by the Lord.

Gronau accommodates approximately 700 refugees, although the number varies considerably as new groups arrive and others leave this processing center.

The Reader Says

Dear Editor:

We attend the Methodist Church, but occasionally as often as we can go up to the home church, First Mennonite of Colfax. It is 51 miles from here.

We have been subscribers to the MENNONITE ever since our marriage 49 years ago, and we've enjoyed it. My wife is a native of the Colfax country. I've been a settler of it since 1893 and have lived continually there excepting a few years here.

WHAT IS A WORK OF FAITH? There is much fuzzy thinking on this subject. How often have you hard someone say, "This is a work of faith, we have no board or church back of us, we are just depending on the Lord."? Such a statement implies that those who are sent out by a denominational board or church are not going out on faith or depending on the Lord. I believe those who make such statements have no intention of casting reflections on others, they just do not realize what they are doing.

There is a need to examine the question. What is a work of faith? Does a person have more faith if he goes out independently than if he is sent out by a church organization? Does a man who has no insurance on car, house, barn, etc., have faith in God while the man who has insurance of these things lacks faith? Is the farmer who plants his corn and cultivates it less dependent on God than the one who does not bother to cultivate? Do parents who let their children run wild have more faith in God than those who train them in Christian nurture? If this is all true, then the person who does not do anything but sits down and expects God to do everything has the most faith.

There are so many others who are living under similar circumstances and whose slim, ungrounded faith in man and God is like an unsupported wall swaying in the wind. It can stand only so long. And when it falls body and soul alike are torn into ugly little pieces that so often refuse to reassemble themselves.—Harold Buller "A Family in Need in Berlin," (see page 78).

The church or denominational board who endeavors to send out missionaries has to have a great deal of faith in God, for even though they set a salary figure they have no assurance that the money will come in so they can support those whom they have sent out. Some of our mission workers were without salaries for around a year during the depression days. That was a real trial of faith for our conference, our mission board, and the missionaries. Such a work is a cooperative venture of faith. The mission has to have faith in God, the board has to have faith in God, the conference has to have faith in God, and the churches have to have faith in God. Then the missionary who goes out under a board has to be dependent on Christ for the salvation of souls, for he certainly cannot save souls by his own human efforts.

So let us be careful about harboring mistaken ideas about what constitutes a work of faith. For any work that is truly of the Lord must be a work of faith.

ONE OF THE TECHNIQUES of Christian education, the religious motion picture, that is fast becoming universally popular has several knotty problems connected with it. One of the greatest is that of securing adequate talent to produce pictures that are not amateurish. Pastors and church leaders who have used any films at all know the difficulty of finding first-rate religious pictures. Several or even one second-rate picture can leave a bad taste and even diminish the possibilities of using this technique in a given church. For example, one producer makes quite a point in his advertisement of the fact that he uses only Christians as actors; only a casual review of the pictures showed that there was much to be desired. Christian Life in a feature article in its January issue calls attention to a producer of religious films who uses Hollywood actors anonymously. He believes that by getting actors and actresses to learn Bible verses and to play the parts he is witnessing in as much as he gets them to ponder the meaning of what they are saying and doing. If the secret of good acting is to 'live' the part you are playing, then it would seem that some impression on the actors is almost inevitable; thus this producer is giving a two-fold witness—to the actors and of course to his audiences in the churches through a first-rate presentation of the gospel through this technique.

THE NEXT TIME YOU MEET someone who says there are no more needs in Europe show him these quotations from Harold Buller's report (full report on page 78) of a typical visit to a needy home in Berlin. ". . . We stand in front of the door bearing the name plate of the family we want to see. But the same door also has two other names on more temporary plates added since the war . . . . For a surprised moment we just stand and stare! The sight we see wants to push us bodily back into the corridor . . . . Mother has been making torn bedsheets into underwear and remaking her own clothes for the children . . . . Besides the unhappy father who is ashamed to come home to the family he cannot support, there are others who need courage to live. Among them we see the aged grandparent who spends the long day in his lonely, unfriendly cellar room asking why death is so slow . . . . The small unemployment insurance which is taken up largely by rent, leaves them little more than cabbage and boiled potatoes for their diet . . . ." Anyone who discourages relief giving is contributing directly to sustaining such conditions.

PRAYER

Prayer is work, doest thou believe it?
Prayer is power, wilt thou receive it?
Prayer, the path the Saviour trod,
Prayer, the touch that links with God.
Make thy life a daily prayer,
He will answer—here and there.

From the Mission Front

Obstacles and Opportunities of Missions Today

Report of Foreign Missions Conference

by S. F. Pannabecker

AFRICA is the veto to all the world's peace plans." These were the words used by C. C. Adams, himself Negro and corresponding secretary of the Foreign Mission Board of the National Baptist Convention, after describing the mistreatment of Africa's natives numbering 150 million. Adams pressed for missionaries more thoroughly Christian and with more dynamic faith, also for cooperation of both Negro and white boards in sending out missionaries of both races. "For," said he, "no one can serve as fully as a missionary in Africa as a Negro missionary."

Represents All Major Mission Boards

Adams was one of the first speakers at the 56th annual meeting of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, a gathering of representatives of all the major mission boards of the United States and Canada. Over three hundred men and women met January 10 to 13 in the spacious quarters of "The Inn" at Buck Hill Falls in the heart of the Pocono Hills of eastern Pennsylvania. Slightly less than half the group were voting delegates and the others invited guests, members of secretarial staffs, representatives of associated organizations and missionaries. It presented probably the best informed body of foreign mission executives and workers that could be gathered to appraise the situation and consider steps for concerted action in reaching non-Christian lands with the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Catholicism Paves Way for Communism in Latin America

Latin America was described by Stanley Rycroft, executive secretary of the Committee on Cooperation in Latin America, as a tragic example of a perverted Roman Catholic culture where two-thirds of the people are ill-fed, ill-housed, illiterate and without moral training. Militarism, clericalism, and landlordism hand in hand are bringing conditions which pave the way for communism. 'Marianity' rather than Christianity marks this land which has heard His name but never known His life. Yet in the midst of political strife there is an interest in the missionary message with evidences of new life especially in West Indies, Puerto Rico, and Haiti.

"Each-one-teach-one" Campaigns

In an inspiring message Frank C. Laubach, world-wide promoter of the "Each-one-teach-one" literacy campaigns, held forth the possibility of winning over a billion non-Christian illiterates in the next five years. The program calls for an energetic evangelism effort whereby 12,000 missionaries would be trained for 120,000 churches having 12,000,000 Christians to teach and win 1,200,000,000 non-Christian illiterates. Reading of all languages except English, Laubach insists, can be taught in a matter of days by his method. "The Story of Jesus" is used following the study of a primer. Every government in the sixty-one countries in which he has worked has welcomed and none objected to the teaching of religion in literacy campaigns.

"They Made Light of It"

by Roland Goering

PEOPLE of the present day are in the habit of taking the important things of life too lightly and placing undue value upon the trivial things of life. The things that attract people are materialism, pleasure, excitement, and thrills at the expense of placing too little emphasis upon the spiritual things of life. Jesus illustrates this point in His parable of the Wedding Feast. "The kingdom of heaven," says He, "is like unto a certain king, which made a marriage for his son, and sent forth his servants to call them that were bidden to the wedding: and they would not come. Again, he sent forth other servants, saying, Tell them which are bidden, Behold, I have prepared my dinner: my oxen and my fatlings are killed, and all things are ready: come unto the marriage. But they made light of it, and went their ways one of his farm, another to his merchandise . . . ."

How often we follow the example of the guests which were invited to the wedding and make light of the things of real significance! How often we make light of the most important experiences and possibilities of life.

Make Light of The Teachings of Jesus

How often do we take the teachings of Jesus too lightly! We disregard that which we don't like and uphold only that which suits our desire. The teachings of Jesus, regardless of how difficult they may appear, dare not be taken lightly. Jesus concluded His Sermon on the Mount with these words: "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock . . ." At another time He concluded His counsel to a lawyer with these words: "This do and thou shalt live." The significance, then, lies not merely in the hearing of His doctrines and not merely in the acceptance of them, but in the doing of them. But today too many people make light of these teachings and do them only if they do not contradict too severely their own pleasure and desire. When the teachings of Jesus contradict that which they wish to do or that which they find they have already done, then they try to argue these teachings out of existence or try to reason, in a fallible way, why these teachings do not apply to our day. Prevalent among such teachings of Jesus are His teaching of love toward our enemies, His teaching on turning the other cheek, His teaching on taking up our cross, His teaching on becoming servants of all, and His teaching on divorce. Are these teachings not, like all the rest, meant for our day also? Did Jesus anywhere say that His commands were meant only for His contemporaries? Did He not rather say: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away"? Let us not make light of Jesus' teaching.

Make Light of the Invitation of Christ

Men do not only make light of the teachings of Jesus, they also make light of His invitation. The point of the parable of Jesus was that those that were invited by the king to attend the feast made light of the invitation and would not come. The invitation of Christ is still ringing out today. "Ho, everyone that thirsteth, let him come to the waters and drink." And again, "The spirit and the bride say, Come, and let him that heareth say, Come, and let him that is athirst come, and whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." How many have heeded the invitation of Christ? How many have accepted His invitation of Salvation? Christ invites men to come to Him but He does not coerce them to do so. Whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely. Let us not take the invitation of Christ too lightly. Let us also do our part in making this invitation known to others.

Make Excuses

Luke recording this same parable says that when the messengers were sent to them that were bidden saying: "Come for all things are now ready," then they all with one consent began to make excuse. Now I do not believe that these men got their heads together beforehand and decided among themselves to excuse themselves from the feast. But as one man did, so did the other. This is the nature of those who take the things of vital importance lightly. They have their excuses ready. As birds of the same species build their nests out of the same material and the same form, so men of like character make the same response with the same indifference to the same things. Now there was really nothing the matter with the things they were going to do. One was going to see the field he had purchased. The other was going to try his oxen, and the third was going to be loyal to his wife. These things may be good, but they had the wrong evaluation of things. They made light of the things that really mattered and put secondary things first.

Remain Indifferent

Now the real downfall of these men was not due to some unquestioned crime that they committed. It was not due to something they did, it was rather due to something they did not do. They remained indifferent and irresponsive. They did not respond to the invitation because they took it too lightly. Is this not the mistake of the largest per cent of people who do fail? On the one side there seems to be a little flock who meekly and earnestly receive Christ. On the other and opposite side there is also a small group who loudly and openly reject Christ. But in between these two groups and by far the largest group is the indifferent group which neither denounces nor accepts Christ. These are the irresponsive who make light of the invitation of Christ and consequently do not accept.

MUSICAL TREAT FOR CHICAGO MENNONITES

Missions and Relief Join Hands in Java

by Martin H. Schrag

A NEW chapter in international Mennonite cooperation is today being written with the opening of relief work on the island of Java. Swiss, American, Javanese, Chinese, Dutch, and French Mennonites are each making a contribution to this effort. Yes, and in a sense one could say the Japanese are also assisting, as the building which houses the unit was built by them during the war.

Although sponsored by the Mennonite Central Committee, all above mentioned countries are giving either in workers, funds, and/or supplies. European Mennonites have had their faces turned this way for the last hundred years having carried on the missionary work that has resulted in the Christian church here.

Domina Djajadihardja, one of the young leaders of the Mennonites of Java and Mennonite Pastor at Pati is seen in the pulpit of his church.

From Switzerland—The Missionary

From Switzerland has come missionary-preacher Daniel Amstutz. Serving as a missionary for twelve years on the island of Java, Domini Amstutz is especially equipped because of his knowledge of language and the people to make a valuable contribution. Congregations in Switzerland are vitally concerned with the developing program and different Gemende are raising funds to further the work.

The two Mennonite conferences on the island of Java, the Javanese and Chinese, who have been evangelized by the efforts of the Dutch Mennonite Mission Board, have paved the way for the work, are rendering invaluable consul and assisting in reaching the truly needy.

Dutch Give Funds and Supplies

The Dutch Mennonites have and are giving funds and supplies. Greatly interested in their mission field, they have given financial assistance to the local church and have sent blankets and other supplies. Further inquiries have been made as to what else could be done.

The French Brotherhood is likewise interested and have raised funds to help the work.

Four Americans Help

At present four Americans are part of the unit, but two will return to America shortly. Shipments of clothing, food, and medicines are now on hand to show concern for the suffering and to witness for Christ.

Interview Non-Mennonite D. P.'s For Possible Resettlement

AKRON, PENNSYLVANIA. Several workers in Europe have been assisting in interviewing the non-Mennonite refugees for whom the M.C.C. is securing sponsors in the United States. These people are interviewed to evaluate their motives as well as eligibility for migrating to America, and to ascertain whether they probably would be able to adjust to the new environment in a Mennonite community in America. Many of these are Lutheran or Russian Orthodox in religion, and come from the Ukraine, Poland, Latvia, and Estonia for the most part. Many interesting cases are observed—many in which the experiences of the war have left deep scars.

Several other workers serve in I.R.O. camps in counseling D.P.'s who are in process of securing documents for migrating to a new homeland. One of these workers, Eva Stauffer, interviewed 180 D.P. cases during a recent month. Of this number, about half were cases of deferment because of illness or other causes; another third were temporarily delayed in passage to their destination; the remaining one-sixth were cases whose application for migration had been rejected.

Shoes Reach Needy Children

The shoes contributed last spring by Mennonite children in the special children's project, met a real need as winter came in Europe this year. At Kiel, for instance, many children had only pieces of wood with straps for shoes. The school officials were contacted and arrangements made for a shoe distribution. In the two days of distribution nearly five hundred selected needy children were given shoes. Both pupils and teachers expressed sincere thanks for the gifts which were needed so urgently.

Voluntary-Service Openings

Request has been received for a service unit at Bethesda Hospital, which is a mental hospital operated by one of the Mennonite conference groups. A unit will be opened there as soon as personnel is available. Openings include work on wards, and maintenance. Persons interested in a year of service there should apply for enrollment in the Training School listed below.

A one-month Training School beginning March 3 will be conducted by the M.C.C. to train a group of one-year volunteers for service-unit work. There are openings in the following units: the community health, education and welfare project in Gulfport, Mississippi; an institution for underprivileged children in Washington, D. C.; a Mennonite mental hospital in Vineland, Ontario; and a State Mental Hospital at Topeka, Kansas. Applicants should direct inquiries to Voluntary Service, M.C.C., Akron, Pennsylvania.

RELIEF SHIPMENTS

During November and December the following shipments of material aid contributions from the United States and Canada, left port:

To Germany: 30 tons beans, 132 tons flour, 35 tons clothing, bedding, Christmas Bundles, etc.; 72 tons meat and other foods; to Paraguay: 1 printing press and equipment, 3 tons miscellaneous equipment; to Palestine: 11 tons clothing, bedding, shoes, soap, to the Philippines: 1 ton Christmas Bundles; to England: ¼ ton clothing; to France: 4 tons mixed foods; to Austria: 6 tons mixed foods.

Construction Begins at Reedley

Preliminary plans have been approved for the building program at Kings View Homes, the M.C.C. mental hospital at Reedley, California. Excavation for the sewage disposal system and the foundation is now being made. Eight Voluntary Service workers are helping in the building program and also in various duties related to the hospital farm. It is expected that final state approval on the total plan will be received in the near future.

Draft Extension Proposed

Recent word from Washington states that a bill has been introduced in the Senate to extend the Selective Service Act for three years. The bill is in the form of a simple amendment postponing the termination for three years. The M.C.C. Peace Section is following these developments with concern, and will endeavor to give testimony to our peace position as there is opportunity.

Discuss "Hard Core" Problem

In a recent contact with immigration officials at Ottawa, Brethren J. J. Thiessen, C. F. Klassen, and William T. Snyder discussed the problem of "hard-core" cases. (The term Hard Core refers to the residue of refugees who are unable for physical and other reasons to migrate to a new homeland.) Cases of active trachoma or tuberculosis, as well as cases of mental deficiency, cannot be admitted to Canada, and this is one of the difficult problems in the present refugee migration program. In some instances a family cannot emigrate because one member is ineligible for such physical or other disqualification.

Brook Lane Farm Admits Hundredth Patient

Brook Lane Farm has been serving increasing numbers of patients during recent months. On January 4 the hospital reached its full capacity of 23 patients. On the same day the hundredth patient was admitted. The hospital began admitting patients about a year ago. The proportion of patients from M.C.C. constituents groups has been rising, until at present about 50 per cent are of Mennonite, Amish Mennonite or Brethren in Christ groups.

Thirteen persons make up the staff, some of whom are short-term voluntary workers. Additional employed staff members are needed, including a farmer, a matron and a cook. Some short-term personnel can also be used from time to time.

SEMINARY HEARS MISSIONS CAUSE

The foreign missionary cause was strongly before us this week. The Orlando Waltner family arrived here Wednesday afternoon with the jeep and trailer which they will take with them to India. It was a joyous occasion after the months of delay and frustration. It is good to know that their call to India will not be rudely interrupted or broken by a fundamental change in government policy. At the prayer meeting both of the Waltners spoke briefly of their appreciation of the year at the Seminary which they characterized as the "high point of their furlough." They both mentioned the challenge of their new assignment in rural evangelism following their first term as directors of the Champa Leper Home.

Andrew R. Shelly now entering more fully into his work as field secretary for the Seminary stopped a few hours Monday morning, en route to Enid, Oklahoma. He is giving Bible lectures at the Oklahoma Bible Academy, Meno, Oklahoma. Following these lectures he will be visiting the churches in Oklahoma in the interest of the Seminary.

The first in a series of study sessions dealing with fundamental problems of Seminary education, the life of the General Conference, missionary enterprise, the work of the M.C.C. the recruiting of Christian workers, and other important concerns to our group, was held Monday evening, January 16.

John T. Neufeld, business manager of the Seminary, spent several days recently in Newton, Kansas, attending a meeting of the Evangelism Committee of the General Conference.

BLUFFTON GIVES NON-CREDIT MARRIAGE COURSE

The Student Christian Association is sponsoring a marriage course which will begin February 7 with A. M. Romig, pastor of the Market Street Presbyterian Church of Lima as the speaker. There will be eight lectures by different authorities in the field, given on successive Tuesday evenings. This is a noncredit course. Such course has been given in alternate years for a considerable period of time, Bluffton being one of the first schools to inaugurate such a program. The objective is to give such information as will help to build happy Christian homes.

At the request of the National Protestant Council, Howard Raid, professor of economics, has prepared a chapter for a new book on economics being sponsored by this organization. The book is Economic Theory and Practice in the Light of Basic Christian Principles. Raid's chapter will be the first in the book being on the field of economics and economic activity. The publication is financed by a grant secured from the American Economic and Business Council. It is to be published in time so that it can be used in the fall of 1950. It is intended as a textbook, primarily for use in church related colleges.

The anniversary book, written by various members of the faculty, will soon be ready to go on to the printers. It is to be ready for distribution by commencement time.

BETHEL STUDENTS DISCUSS CURRICULUM

Students were invited to air their views concerning the obligatory portion of the College curriculum at a convocation held recently. Obligatory courses, called core courses, constitute 76 hours of work out of the total of 180 required for the A.B. degree.

Karl Baehr, executive secretary of the American Christian Palestine Committee, will speak in Bethel College chapel at 8:00 P.M., Friday, February 3. He will also speak during the college chapel hour in the morning.

Mr. Baehr is well qualified to speak on his topic, "The United Nations and Israel," for he contributed much through his organization to the marshalling of American public opinion in favor of the successful partition plan for Palestine.

After graduating from Bethel College, Mr. Baehr attended the Chicago Theological Seminary from which he graduated with honors.

While in Chicago, he was active in many religious and civic affairs. During the 1946-47 season he was president of the West Side Ministers' and Rabbis' Association of Chicago.

Lester Hostetler, pastor of the Bethel College, Church, has received a year's leave of absence. Leaving on January 20, He and his wife will work at a Nachbarschaftsheim in Berlin, Germany. The work will serve to satisfy the needs for church association which exist in the broken communities of Berlin.

Table Conversation—A Mixture

The tower of Babel has its modern rival in the confusion of tongues that sometimes results as these different groups try to converse. Table conversation is a mixture of English, High-German, Malay, Pennsylvania German, and Plaat-Deutsch with an occasional word of Javanese thrown in. With the servants it is Malay and the sign language, with the village folk Javanese is the tongue, with the Chinese and Urban Javanese it is Malay; with some Dutch officials it is Dutch, and, within the unit it is English mixed with three brands of German.

It is good to be part of such an undertaking to give reality to the workability of different races and nationalities in a common effort with Christ as the Director of the work.

Teaching illiterates, writing simple literature for them, and the use of this in moral and religious training are three great doors open to the missionary.

The Latest From China

Main interest of the conference centered around the areas of greatest difficulty—those occupied by Communism and Islam. The two are similar in being dominant in highly significant areas and in offering the most obstinate opposition to Christian advance. Tracy K. Jones, Methodist missionary just returned from China, was able to give the clearest account of conditions in Communist China. He pointed out three characteristics noticeable. First, a new atmosphere is evident immediately upon "liberation" through the new ideas, through organization and strict discipline, and through control. Secondly, the new government rules with a delicate balance between moderation and ruthlessness whereby people are wooed with persuasion and threatened with fear. The disarming approach often wins but if not, the hesitant are kept on edge and allowed no peace of mind. Thirdly, tremendous energies are released as soldiers, students, and others take up the study and practice of Communist doctrine with a fervor unknown before. The whole presents a transformation which is humbling to the church and the greatest challenge in years.

Two thousand Protestant missionaries are said still to be in China. They are under strain and not free to travel, but continue work as possible. Administration and leadership must be, and is, in the hands of Chinese Christians. Honesty and frankness in presenting religious views and programs are essential and the strategy is to press for implementation of the new government's promises of religious freedom.

Islam on the Move

Islam is on the move. particularly in North Africa, as the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan comes increasingly under Egyptian influence. Arabic has become the new language of the Sudan and with it goes Moslem missionary effort. Funds for the erection of mosques in fourteen Sudan centers have been raised in Egypt and missionaries who have previously had little Moslem contact will feel its competition.

Work in both Communist and Moslem areas demands a new perspective. It must be long range work. Mass conversions cannot be expected. Personal contacts, testimony, and deeds replace preaching. Simple living and sympathetic understanding are essential. Theological training and study of communism must have a larger part in preparation of candidates; technical skill of some kind is desirable; but above all, as one speaker put it, "The thing our missionaries need is a good dose of religion." The presence of Christ in the heart of missionaries has always been fundamental but will be more so under the new conditions.

Not Culture But Christ

The devotional periods and the repeated emphasis on the spiritual nature of the work were deeply appreciated. It was reiterated as basic that what we are concerned with is not transferring Western culture but Christ. The lessons by James H. Quay on "Ye shall be my witnesses" (Greek-martyrs), and "Ye are the salt of the earth," "light of the world," touched the basic responsibilities of all who would be disciples of Christ.

MISSION BRIEF

Dear Christian friends:

I have received so many greetings and messages of love and sympathy during the Christmas season that it is not possible to me to write to every one to thank you all. I would like to take this opportunity to reach as many of you kind friends as I can. I feel I am not worth of all your kindness. I am very grateful to all of you also for all gifts of food and other tokens of your love. It warms my lonely heart.

Mrs. P. A. Penner

Two moving illustrations of testimony under Communist shadow touched the conference deeply. In the first, a Chinese pastor suffered a stroke during service while praying. The audience realized something happened as he slumped to the floor, but his lips continued to move and the words of prayer continued. Without interruption his two sons raised the pastor to his feet and supported him to the end of the prayer. Only then was he carried out and taken to the hospital.

Blood Transfusion for a Communist

The second concerned a missionary doctor whose hospital was adjacent to a Communist-operated hospital. A Communist officer who was in a critical condition in the latter hospital needed a blood transfusion but there seemed no donor present who would provide the blood. In desperation a note was sent to the missionary doctor inquiring whether there might be a suitable donor available. In a moment the missionary himself was beside the patient and giving his blood. The next day there arrived a gift of food and a note expressing deep contrition from those who had failed to see their own opportunity and thanks for the lesson. The gift was returned with the explanation that the blood was not his but was from American Christians, any of whom would have been glad to do the same thing because Christ had given His for us. It is safe to say that missionaries of this type will not be expelled from China.

To not the one who attended the Foreign Missions Conference for the first time it was worth while. First there was the inspiration of stirring messages and of Christian fellowship. Then, there was the recent and first hand information from mission fields with its insights into conditions and problems. Finally, there was the basis for cooperation in the spread of the gospel which comes through personal contacts and through discussion and planning regarding procedures, through hearing of the work of others and setting of standards and goals, and especially through the encouragement in knowing that others throughout the world are also seeking God's guidance in these tasks and giving themselves in devotion as witnesses to the risen Lord.

THREE-FOURTHS OF NATIONAL BUDGET FOR WAR

A very careful analyst has noted that about thirty-one billion dollars or three-fourths, of the proposed 1951 budget of the United States will be spent to pay the cost of past wars, current defenses, and possible future wars.

Seventeen Billion Outside Defense Department

About seventeen billion dollars will be spent for war items other than those in the Defense Department budget. Of this amount over four billion will be spent for foreign aid, including military assistance. The military analyst very interestingly includes non-military foreign aid as an expenditure to provide defense against future wars. About twelve of this seventeen billion dollars will be spent for veterans' payments and for interest on the national debt. About one billion of this seventeen will go for atomic development, the merchant marines, and other services closely related to the military.

Fourteen Billion for Defense Department

From thirteen and a half to fourteen billion dollars, depending upon whether the calculation is in terms of expense or appropriations, will be used by the Defense Department directly, in the 1951 fiscal year beginning July 1.

Almost Eight Billion for Defense Department Personnel

Of the Defense Department budget, almost eight billion dollars is for salaries and maintenance of personnel. Over four billion dollars will support 1,506,000 uniformed personnel, and over three billion dollars will support 725,000 civilian workers, with an average salary of more than forty-five hundred dollars. Over one-third of a billion dollars is for retired military personnel.

Division, Planes, Ships, Autos, Guns

The balance of the Defense Department budget goes for many things. There are ten Army and two Marine Corps divisions to equip. There are seventeen thousand planes and a fleet of over six hundred Navy ships of various sizes. There are almost five thousand automobiles. Almost one billion dollars will go for guns, tanks, and trucks.

Schools, Hospitals, Reserves, National Guard

About eight million dollars will be spent in Army schools for 164,000 students. There are the costs of forty-five Army and Navy hospitals (not including veterans' hospitals). One million men will be trained in the various National Guard and Reserve organizations.

I have tried to keep things in my own hands and have lost them all; but what I have given into God's hands, that I still possess.—Martin Luther.

Undesigned Agreements in the Bible

by Roderic Dunkerley

WHEN we read in the Gospel story that some of the Galilean fishermen were "mending their nets" (Mark 1:19 and Matthew 4:21), we naturally remember that in another incident "their net brake" because of the huge haul of fish. (Luke 5:6). And we inevitably wonder if it was because the nets had broken on the one occasion that they were being mended on the other. The fact that the incidents appear to be in the wrong order—Luke's story following his account of happenings at Capernaum, which Mark and Matthew place later in the story—cannot be regarded as a fatal objection because scrupulous care was not taken by the evangelists to preserve the exact order of events.

> There are many remarkable things about the Bible. One is that stories with the same settings, but with different writers, prove each other by their many points of unplanned agreement.

Just a hundred years ago, an interesting book was written by a Professor Blunt, entitled Undesigned Coincidences in the Writings both of the Old and New Testaments. It was evidently very popular for it went into many editions, and though much of it must now be deemed out-of-date, it is still readable and suggestive. Personally I am not quite happy about the word "coincidence" in this connection. As commonly used it means occurrences falling or fitting in together accidentally and without cause, whereas in the cases we are considering here, while the agreement may not have been intended or noticed by the writers, it may have had a very real cause in the simple fact that things happened in the way described. Some, but not all the examples I shall give, were mentioned by Blunt.

There are first of all several other cases of strange little coherences between the Gospels, where points fit in together like pieces of a jigsaw puzzle. In Mark 6:31 we read that Jesus took the disciples away to rest awhile, "for there were many coming and going, and they had no leisure so much as to eat." No reason is given why there was so much movement on the roads just then, but in John 6:4 we are informed that the passover was at hand which would, of course, account for it. Further, this accords well with Mark's later statement that the grass was green where the people sat for their desert repast (6:39), for, of course, the passover took place in the springtime before the summer heat had scorched the grass.

Next, we read in Matthew 26:68 that when Jesus was under arrest they mocked him, saying, "Prophesy unto us, thou Christ, who is he that struck thee?" It is only in Mark 14:65 and Luke 22:64 that it is made clear that first he was blindfolded, without which point the story is obscure. In the same chapter of Luke we have the striking words of Jesus, "I am in the midst of you as he that serveth," which form part of the rebuke he administered to them when even on that last occasion they disputed about precedence and who should have the best seat at table. (Luke 22:24-27).

There is an odd little point linking the Gospels to Paul. Writing to the Corinthians (I Corinthians 9:5) he says, "Have we not power to lead about a sister, a wife, as well as other apostles, and as the brethren of the Lord and Cephas?" Now Cephas is of course Peter (it is the Hebrew form of that name), and we know from the Gospels that he was a married man. (Mark 1:30, etc.). And here is an interesting case of self-consistency within Acts, between a speech of Paul's and the subsequent conduct of the governor Felix, though no hint is given of it being a case of cause and effect. In his defense before Felix, Paul referred to the fact that he had come back to Jerusalem after many years "to bring alms to my nation, and offerings." Was it not in view of this that Felix "hoped that money should have been given him of Paul" and that he ordered the centurion in charge of him that "he should forbid none of his acquaintance to minister or come unto him." Knowing there was money about, he was on the lookout for a bribe!

Turning now to the Old Testament, we find several points of this kind in the story of David. For example, we read that when he was in danger from Saul he took his father and mother to the king of Moab and asked that they might have refuge there. (I Samuel 22:3-4). No reason is given for his choice of Moab for this purpose, but from Ruth 4:17 we learn that David's grandfather was the son of Ruth the Moabitess, and we appear to have a clue to his feeling in the matter. Again, after the strange death of Uzzah, who wrongly touched the Ark, we are told that David had it taken aside "into the house of Obed-edom the Gittite." (II Samuel 6:6-10). Why was it right for him but not for Uzzah to deal with it? Apparently because Gath (the city of the Gittites) was one of the centers of the Kohathites, a Levitical family, whose function it was to bear the Ark upon their shoulders. (Joshua 21:24 and Numbers 7:9). And here also is a curious point. How was it that Ahithophel, the Gilonite, a trusted counselor of David, deserted him and joined in Absalom's rebellion? (II Samuel 15:12; 16:23). Was it because his son Eliam was the father of Bathsheba, and doubtless the friend of Uriah, whom David so wronged? (II Samuel 23:34; 11:3).

There are many agreements, of course, between the books of the prophets and the historical books of the Old Testament, but most of them are definite quotations or allusions.

Here, however, is one that appears quite undesigned. Isaiah was told to "go forth to meet Ahaz, at the end of the conduit of the upper pool" (Isaiah 7:3), at the time when Judah was threatened by invasion from Israel and Syria. No hint is given as to what Ahaz was doing there, but in II Chronicles 32: 3-5 we read that on a similar occasion thirty years later when Judah was again threatened with invasion, this time by Sennacherib, Hezekiah "took counsel with his princes and his mighty men to stop the waters of the fountains which were without the city." The reason for this action was thus stated, "Why should the kings of Assyria come and find much water?" This may well have been a recognized mode of defense in those days, and Ahaz may have been thus engaged when Isaiah went out to give him God's message that the invasion would come to nought.—Copyright, 1949

Dare We Become Weary?

by Robert Kreider

PAUL wrote to his fellow Christians from Galatia and admonished them with the words: "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." A bit later in his letter he adds: "And let us not be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not."

Our church has these centuries past laid stress on "doing good." In our generation that is translated into sending relief supplies, resettling refugees, teaching Sunday school class, attending Sunday evening worship, and hosts of other activities. But doing good can be physically tiring, spiritually wearisome, if the love of Christ, with all of His enabling energy, is not central in our hearts. The love of Christ with the accompanying deep spiritual understanding and compassion can move tons of relief supplies.

It is difficult, however, for us really to understand the plight of brother human beings in distant lands. It has been three months since we left Europe. European shores have faded into the distance and now Europe seems far, far away. And therein is something of the tragedy of our time . . . it is difficult to comprehend the need of others except those at our very doorstep.

I have never been hungry; how can I understand those who are still hungry?

I have never been down to my last tattered suit; how can I understand those who have only one many-times-mended suit to wear?

I have never been without a home; how can I understand those without a place which they can call their own?

I have never been without family or friends; how can I understand those who are completely alone in the world?

We cannot fully understand the plight of the hungry, the tattered, the homeless. The plaintive Negro spiritual utters the innermost cry of the dispossessed: "Nobody knows the trouble I've seen, nobody but Jesus."

And yet we must understand. We must have compassion. It is the Christian commission to love, even as our Father in Heaven loves us.

Dare we become weary? Not if the selfless love of Christ is in our hearts.

Sixty Schools A Month

by Lorraine Burkhalter

"I will go in the strength of the Lord God. I will make mention of thy righteousness, even of thine only." Psalm 72:16

What a joy it is to return to the schools once again with the Bible Memory Program. Many of the boys and girls have already started to memorize verses for the awards offered them. The highest award is a week at camp.

This past summer the East Tennessee Division of the Children's Bible Mission had thirteen weeks of camp for the boys and girls who memorized all 300 verses during the school year. The seed is sown through the memorization of the Word and during the chapel talks given in the schools once a month by the workers. But camp is our harvest time! The first year campers are taught about the disease of sin and the remedy, which is Jesus Christ. They are also taught how to pray and the structure of the Bible. The second, third, and fourth year campers are taught subjects to help them grow in the Christian life. Our hearts were thrilled as we saw the Holy Spirit working in the lives of these boys and girls. Souls were saved and Christians drawn closer to Christ, yielding their all to Him.

Last year my co-worker, Reba Miller and I started this work in Cocke County. We are now visiting 60 schools once a month and are reaching approximately 3,000 children every month.

A Family in Need in Berlin

The Need in Europe Continues

by Harold Buller

THE shop windows of Europe often display a large variety of goods needed by the folk of any normal, civilized country. But this does not mean that these goods are to be found in the homes of the people. When honest, reputable persons who truly want to be kept busy have not been able to find work for the better part of a year, and have no hope of finding any for months to come, they naturally cannot buy the things their families need.

Soul-killing Half-light

We thank God that it is quite possible to find many families who no longer need the help that kept them from starving to death in past years. But the American Christian's work is still far from finished in Europe. Many who may not literally be starving on street corners still need material aid, and that not only because they are hungry and cold. A look into one home, typical of countless others like it, will give us a picture of our tremendous responsibility to vast multitudes who still live in the soul-killing half-light of past terror, present want, and future uncertainty.

I have never been hungry; how can I understand those who are still hungry?
I have never been down to my last tattered suit; how can I understand those who have only one many-times-mended suit to wear?
I have never been without a home; how can I understand those without a place which they can call their own?
I have never been without family or friends; how can I understand those who are completely alone in the world?

We walk through the street entrance into the open but icily cemented court around which European apartment houses are often built. Our address indicates that the home we want to visit is in the back wing and several flights up. So, crossing the court, we enter the door to that section of the building. The door squeaks shut behind us and our first reaction is surprise that we are suddenly standing in the dark.

Impressed with Disrepair and Cleanliness

As our eyes become accustomed to the gloom we find the button that, when pressed, will give us three minutes of light before an automatic switch turns it off again. Starting up the steps, we soon realize that the lack of light is a result of having many of the hall windows closed up with heavy cardboard to keep out the wind and the rain. Then while we stop on a landing to let a sallow faced, one-legged war veteran—barely more than a boy—hobble down the steps on his crutches, we are overwhelmed at once by two impressions. One is that no repair work has been done in these halls for years. The floors are unpainted and without oil. The walls are covered only with flaky paint that has been cracked by damp winter crowding through broken windows into unheated houses. Fancifully carved wooden banisters and the plaster cupid faces along the ceilings, both of a better day, are coming apart in hapless little pieces. The other impression is that everything is thoroughly clean.

Two Other Names

Finally we stand in front of the door bearing the name plate of the family we want to see. But the same door also has two other names on more temporary plates added since the war. As we look around for information on what to do next, our eyes fall upon the one thing that stands out as gaudily today as the moment it was put there. The big, shiny, brass doorbell seems not to know that all around it days have been added into years and years into decay. It rings as proudly for three families now as it rang in normal times. Post-war instructions beside it tell us that for our family we ring twice.

Strangely Old in Spirit

Just as the door opens barely wide enough to let someone look out, our three-minute hall light is turned off and we hear the tremulous voice of a frightened woman asking who is there. After she understands that we intend no evil the door is opened entirely. We are ushered down the hallway to her two rooms by one whom we soon realize to be, though young, strangely old in spirit and extremely tired of life. She opens the door. For a surprised moment we just stand and stare! The sight we see wants to push us bodily back into the corridor. How can a family of five live in here when there is hardly enough space to turn around in! We file on in between a pathetic little stove and a small uncovered table, both in the kitchen, on our way to the bedroom beyond it. As we pass through this first room we see that the doors to the small cabinet cannot be closed because of the profusion of kitchen utensils crowded into it that seem to overflow onto the table and down to a floor cluttered with larger pails and boxes for lack of better storage space.

A Child Too Weak To Play

In the bedroom we see a thin, pasty colored little girl of five or six years sitting on a couch trying to amuse herself with a stubby pencil. Mother explains apologetically that years of undernourishment have left the child's ankles so weak that she needs high shoes for support in order to play with the older two who are outside in the street. Buying them is out of the question. Money is too scarce. The narrow, wooden clothes closet opposite the child has nails all the way around to make room for that which cannot find space inside. There is also one single bed separated from the couch by a narrow asile. The parents sleep on that while two children sleep on the couch. The third child sleeps on the floor away from the window whose panes are made up partly of glass, partly of torn celluloid plates and partly of heavy paper. There is just enough room left for a chair, a stool and a table two feet square.

Making Torn Bed Sheets Into Underwear

Finally we are all seated. For a long moment no one knows what to say. We dare not ask how things are going for we can well see. Even the subject of weather is improper because it suggests the unpleasant thought of dreaded winter. Well then, "Is not your husband at home?" Immediately we notice we have blindly thrust our words into the midst of a painful family boil. No, he is out looking for work as he has been daily for six months. Or maybe is digging through bombed buildings to see whether he can find something he can sell as scrap. And reluctantly the story begins to unfold. Inadequate food. The small unemployment insurance which is taken up largely by rent, leaves them little more than cabbage and boiled potatoes for their diet. Fats are too expensive. Meat costs too much. Milk for the children must be passed by. Clothing? Mother has been making from bedsheets into underwear and remaking her own clothes for the children. There is almost nothing that will do for winter. After all, it has been impossible for them to restock wardrobes since the beginning of the war.

Discouragement—The Unberable

But all this would be bearable—even death itself—if only Father were not so discouraged. He used to say they would make it somehow. But that was last spring when the leaves were coming out. Now he comes home and quarrels with his family. Then there are times when he does not even come home anymore. Or maybe he comes home drunk. Mother says she can understand that it must be hard on him to see himself unable to care for his children month after month. To protect himself from his own self-condemnation he becomes irritable, tries to blame others and to forget.

Church? The children have no clothing for Sunday school. God? Who is He? After all, He has never helped them. Furthermore He does not care whether or not they all starve and freeze.

Because We Did Not Come Sooner

We knew about the poverty in this family so we brought a few pieces of clothing. Maybe God does care! This is a new thought to Mother who weeps when she reads the label "In the name of Christ"! And then it strikes us that maybe this poor woman needed to have this unhappy thought of God's indifference so long simply because we did not come sooner. How would her husband have reacted if we would have been there to live God's love among men when his bitterness started to take root? That question remains unanswered.

We only know there are so many others who are living under similar circumstances and whose slim, ungrounded faith in man and God is like an unsupported wall swaying in the wind. It can stand only so long. And when it falls body and soul alike are torn into ugly little pieces that so often refuse to reassemble themselves.

Asking Why Death Is So Slow

Besides the unhappy father who is ashamed to come home to the family he cannot support, there are others who need courage to live. Among them we see the aged grandparent who spends the long day in his lonely, unfriendly cellar room asking why death is so slow. We see the university student, a product of repeated disappointment, who is preparing himself to be a leader in tomorrow's world. His personal attitude toward God will determine the type of world he will try to shape.

Anyone can see that when man starves food alone will restore his body. But it takes a deeper insight into the laws of God to know what the knowledge that God cares, can do to give stability to a strained and breaking life. We who are Christians have that knowledge and experience. As such we are charged with a responsibility that we carry, not because we have to, but because we desire to do so with thanksgiving unto God.

WHAT THEY SAY . . . . . about The Handbook to the Mennonite
Hymnary

"FRANKLY, AFTER READING THE FIRST part of the Handbook, I am delighted. I think that it shows a quality of work which is superior. The "Introduction" alone is worth the price of the book. During the past few years I have become rather "allergic" to hymnal handbooks, but this one is not in the same class with the majority of others which have appeared from time to time. I shall always find it a pleasure to recommend it to interested students of hymnology for careful perusal.

The Mennonite Church has just reason to be proud of its Hymnal and its Handbook to the Hymnary. The Hymnal is musically, devotionally and artistically a top-flight book, one which deserves wider use. The Handbook is a worthy companion for it."—Hymn Society of America, Silver Bay Association, Silver Bay, New York, George Litch Knight.

Beyond Our Own

LEWISTOWN, MONT.—A Hutterite colony here has offered all of its property for sale and is considering purchasing land elsewhere.

In making the announcement, Darius Hofer, the colony's chief, said the property comprises 10,000 acres, 3,000 of which are irrigated, livestock, and farm equipment.

The ranch which the colony inhabits was purchased in 1947 by Hutterites who originally migrated from Canada and were previously located near Mitchell, South Dakota.

There has been much controversy between the Hutterites and other Montana ranchers for several years. Objections to the Hutterite influx into the state have been raised by many Montanans because of the sect members' communistic-like existence and their unwillingness to assimilate into the community.

AFRICA.—Christians must meet the challenge presented by the Nationalist government's policy of racial segregation which has created a situation "not merely serious but crucial," the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of South Africa was told in its annual session by its Committee of Church and Nation. The committee pointed out that the government's apartheid (segregation) was bringing about "a gradual restriction of the liberty of non-Europeans." The report continued, "The migratory system has led to thousands of native people being confined in squalid quarters, disease-ridden, hungry, resentful, hopeless. Against this dark picture the doors to wider liberty are being slammed under the specious plea of trusteeship for the white man. Force of circumstances has created a racial group which as a whole is without franchise, land, the power to own property, to build houses or to have them built, or a place to build them. Education for children is relatively rare, and when secured is often inadequate." Concerning mixed marriages the report said that such marriages "are an evil because of the unhappy results which entail suffering for the children of these unions." — Gospel Herald

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA. Minneapolis Youth for Christ, largest in the world, has hit an all-time peak in its six-year history when two rallies on November 12 and 26 drew capacity crowds of 11,000 people to the great Municipal Auditorium in Minneapolis, where the rallies are held regularly every Saturday night.

Speaker at the November 12 rally was Stuart Hamblen, radio star of Hollywood, California, who was converted in the Billy Graham revival campaign held there recently.

The capacity crowd again was moved as it heard the testimony of Zamperini, young war hero and Olympic track star, who together with his wife was converted in the campaign.—United Evangelical Action

ECONOMIC SYSTEMS NOT GOD-GIVEN

Price $3.00

Few people stop to think about the antiquity of the institution of property. All too many accept our contemporary views of property as though they had always been the views of men in all ages. Actually, there has been a great variety of attitudes, many of them in sharp contrast to present day capitalistic views. Joseph F. Fletcher, professor of pastoral theology and social studies at the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Massachusetts, has done a splendid service in calling the attention of Christians to the changing views of property from Old Testament times to the more contemporary Christian views of today.

This is not a highly technical book written in a scholar's language, nor is it heavily footnoted to give a pedantic impression. It is written so that the common man can easily understand what is being said. There are eight chapters in the 221-page volume, dealing with the Old and New Testament concepts of property, the views of the early church, the church of the middle ages, the Protestant reformation point of view, the Anglican view, a chapter on the concept and significance of capitalism, and a concluding chapter on the theological perspective of property.

By way of taking issue with the author, it seems to this reviewer that he overlooked the views of property of the Anabaptists. One would gather from Fletcher's remarks that only Luther's and Calvin's views represented the Protestant views of the Reformation period. Those who are familiar with this period of church history, would rightly feel that this omission was open to question.

The ministers of the Mennonite church could well afford to buy and read this book, it would provide not only an enlarged view of an institution which all too few ever critically examine, but it would help them to understand more sympathetically the basic criticisms of property under capitalism by large numbers of their contemporaries. Christians should always remember that economic systems are man-made and not God-given and therefore are open to criticism and subject to change. This book clearly demonstrates this point.—J. W. Fretz.

Conference Column

FROM THE CONFERENCE SECRETARY

How can we maintain the assurance of God's presence and blessing in our Conference work? We need to ponder this question as we look toward the Conference Week (August 23-30) and the triennium before us. We dare not proceed unless we have the Lord's bidding and unless we meet the conditional promises of His blessing.

When the Psalmist David found this assurance, he said, "Thou wilt show me the path of life: in Thy presense is fullness of joy; at Thy right hand are pleasures for evermore." (Psalm 16:11).

What the Lord has been willing to do for individual souls yielded to His will and call, He is ready to do now for those bound by a common bond of faith and life. "Our fears, our hopes, our aims are one."

The fullness of God's presence and blessing is His will. To claim this blessing now is to live fruitfully, while anticipating the ultimate benediction in God's presence in glory. "Now unto Him who is able to keep you from falling and present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy."

Let us expect much in order that we may receive much.

Editorials

THERE IS A COMMON TEMPTATION to think that we have fulfilled our obligation to preach the gospel when we have spoken vigorously against or done something about one or the other of the many areas of life to which the gospel is inevitably relevant—such as, peace, temperance, physical suffering, or race relations. Calling attention to injustice, inequality, and need is but a part of the gospel. It is that part of the presentation of the message of Jesus Christ that is intended to prepare for the solution—faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, His Church, and His Kingdom. Calling attention to what is wrong and asking for a reversal in repentance does not automatically make the situation enduringly right. It is at that point that the redeeming gospel with its dynamic ability to cleanse the evil in the individual and his social relationships, must be brought to bear with all its saving vitality. Cleansed human relations come about only when the individual has an adequate base to work from namely a cleansed heart. The gospel has proven its ability to implant the love of God, the devotion to righteousness and justice, the concern for the welfare of others, the abhorrance of all that detracts from a cleansed relationship to God and others. Why have we neglected it so? One has the feeling that much of our failure to deal with the terrifying collective sins of our time comes as a result of concentration on pointing out what is wrong without pointing to Him who, alone, can make it right.

THE CHURCH BULLETIN of the Salem Mennonite Church, Freeman, South Dakota, of which Willard Claassen is pastor, carried two items worthy of attention. The first reflects the kind of honesty that helps congregations grow. The item read like this: "The offering for foreign missions last Sunday amounted to $567.42. One large gift accounts for the high figure." Some large figures may be falsely comforting. The other item on a different Sunday was associated with the announcement of a community mission rally in the interests of a non-denominational mission society. After commending the other agency for the fine work they are doing the statement in the bulletin went on to point out that the people should keep in mind, "When the offering plates go by," that our own foreign mission work was not receiving its budgetary needs. By calling attention to this we are not saying that every single penny of our giving to the Lord must go into Conference projects. We do say that just plain down-to-earth integrity and honesty demands that we meet our own commitments first—commitments we make when we join the General Conference as churches and as individuals. One is even inclined to feel that leaders of these independent missions would agree with us that any money they get, which should have gone to another mission which also seeks to win souls to Christ, really represents no gain for the work of Christ.

COMMENTING ON TRENDS in hymns and hymnbooks, a prominent editor of church music recently said, "There's a movement away from golden streets and golden crowns. And we're weeding out the gruesome ones that talk of blood and wounds." (Even "O Sacred Head Now Wounded?" I hope not!) This tendency can be tragic. If it is merely a matter of eliminating poor poetry and poor harmony from hymnals, it is one thing. If, however, this means giving less stress to the doctrines of immortality in a time when the world is already diseased with 'this-worldliness' and giving less stress to the doctrine of the atonement in an age when man is over-confidently self sufficient—if it means this, then surely great issues are at stake. As regards immortality, it is true that a large number of hymns stress this idea; furthermore it is encouraging to see more hymns concerned with all-round Christian living in the present. We must admit there has been a need for hymns that stress infusing the quality of eternal life into the here and now. But, it would seem a sound policy to increase the number of those having to do with this life rather than decrease the number of those having to do with immortality.—J.J.E.

SOME of my friends have died recently of cancer. Some of them were young and seemed to have before them promising and hopeful careers. Others were older and had served the kingdom well. Some died in lingering days of agony when it seemed they were deserving of a better fate.

I am much concerned about cancer, for it seems to be increasing as a great killer among us. The doctors are trying to find out what to do about it, but, as yet, they have not found the answer of their earnest inquiries.

Recently there was a Cancer Day in our town. Girls Scouts and some faithful women helpers stood on the street corners with little boxes. They reached them out for passers-by to put in pennies or dimes. Some passed by without putting any pennies in. Others put in a few. The total result was that some dollars were raised to discover the causes of cancer and to find out how to stop it.

On that same day we spent a lot of money working with the same elements which the doctors predict will eventually cure cancer. That is, with nuclear fission, the atomic elements.

But this group of workers did not collect money on street corners; rather, they reached into the coffers of our government and took it out by handfuls. We spent $2,000,000,000 to make the atomic bomb, and they tell us we are spending as much as $2,000,000,000 each year since to improve it and to manufacture it. The doctors tell us that if they had only one of the dozen billions we have spent for the atomic bomb they feel certain they could find the cure for cancer.

Billions for destruction! Pennies to find the way to health and life! For how much longer shall death be more important than life?—Gospel Messenger

From the Mission Front

The Struggle for Freedom in Latin America

by W. Stanley Rycroft

THE agelong struggle of man to be free grows in complexity with the increasing interdependence of groups and nations. Man always struggles to be free in spite of the dangers and constant disillusionments involved. The words "free" or "freedom" occur in most, if not all, of the national anthems in Latin America. Some of them—for instance, the Peruvian National Anthem, which begins with the words Somos libres"—seem to take it for granted that their people are free.

A great Mexican liberal* of a century ago, Dr. José Mariá Luis Mora, once said, "The word 'liberty,' which has been used so much to destroy what it really stands for, has been the pretext of all political revolutions; peoples have been profoundly moved when they heard it . . . but peoples have been frequently deceived if they have paid too much attention to forms of government, and have neglected the most important point in all free government: namely, the civil liberty of the citizen." (El Clero, la Educatión y la Libertad, p. 129.)

The soul of freedom is the freedom of the soul, and we believe that the Latin American soul will not be free until it surrenders itself to Jesus Christ.

When the writer was a missionary in Peru, he found that many of his Peruvian colleagues in the teaching profession admired greatly the freedom enjoyed by the British people. In Hyde Park, London, for example, on a rainy day. There is a policeman holding an umbrella over an orator who vehemently denounces the government and all its works. Compare that with Argentina today, where any teacher or professor or judge in a court of law is in danger of losing his job if he says anything unfavorable about the president or the government, and where all evangelical programs are off the air, presumably because the Roman Catholic hierarchy does not like the gospel being preached that way. Under a democratic government, the individual is free to disagree as well as to agree; under totalitarian rule, he is only free to agree.

Who Seeks Control

Compared with two or three years ago, we found on a recent visit to Latin America that two forces, militarism and clericalism, had become more of a menace than ever to the freedom of the Latin American people. Anyone who is familiar with Latin American history knows that militarism and clericalism have kept back the development of these countries for a long time. The independence movement did very little, if anything, to free the people in the fullest sense of the word. Over a hundred years ago, José Mariá Luis Mora, in the work already quoted, said, "When independence was achieved, the people were just as the Spanish had made them; namely, poor and ignorant, and that is the same as saying that they were ready to fall under the domination, or the oligarchy of the military and priestly classes. . . ."

The Roman Catholic Church helped put Peron into power in Argentina, and different measures taken, laws passed, and so on, are easily recognizable as the "pay off." Obligatory Roman Catholic instruction in schools was one of these. The church has undoubtedly used its influence to curb the freedom of the people. The Roman Catholic Church believes that it is destined to control the state in Argentina as in any country. Father Meinvielle, leading nationalist writer, said, "Without the church, the political government can do nothing, because only from the church does it receive lessons of wisdom."

Behind the present regime in Argentina is a nationalist philosophy with Hitlerian undertones and Franco Hispanidad overtones. In a remarkable article which appeared in Harper's magazine in 1945, George Doherty, a practicing Roman Catholic, made plain what was the philosophical and ideological pattern of the leaders of the Argentine revolution which later swept Peron into power. "For fifteen years these young men," he said, "tried simultaneously to bring about a nationalist revolution and to revive Argentine Catholicism spiritually." Then Doherty goes on to say that the philosophy of these Argentine nationalists rested on the assumption that the ordinay man, ignorant and uncultured, is incapable of assuming political responsibility. They held that all modern democracies are heretical and un-Christian, and that the Fascist-type society is Christian.

We have dwelt at some length on the situation in Argentina not only because of its importance as a leading South American country, but also because of its influence on other countries. In his book Battle for the Hemisphere, Edward Tomlinson states that the files of the State Department in Washington contain a copy of a document in which Peron is quoted as saying (in 1943) in a secret manifesto to army officers, "We shall eventually control South America. We shall begin by forming alliances . . .then these five united nations, Argentina, Chile, Bolivia, Paraguay, and Uruguay, will easily attract Brazil. When Brazil falls, the continent will be ours."

In the past two years, military coups have ousted liberal governments in Peru and Venezuela, and there are many who see in those situations the influence of Argentine militarism. At the end of August 1949, one Argentine senator accused the government in Congress of "being the inspirer of military coups that have occurred recently."

Peru is governed at the moment by a military junta which in October 1948 overthrew a coalition government in which the Apra was a political force. There is no congress and the junta rules by decrees, which are

by P. K. Regier

"Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel? May I not wash in them and be clean?" II Kings 5:12.

IN THE fifth chapter of II Kings we have one of the most delightful little stories of the Old Testament. It is the story of the captain of the Syrian host who is sent to the land of Israel to be cured of his leprosy. There are many interesting touches in the story. For one, the King of Syria sends a letter with Naaman to the King of Israel in which he says, "Here, I am sending you this man. Cure him of his leprosy."

But the King of Israel was suspicious. He rent his clothes and said, "What, am I a god to kill or make alive? He is just trying to find some quarrel so he may make war upon our little land and destroy us." But notice this—when Elisha told Naaman to go and wash in the Jordan, he was very angry. Virtually this is what he said, "I shall go and wash in the dirty waters of Jordan, when we have crystal clear rivers in Damascus? If I want to take a bath I can do that at home and I don't have to come all the way to Israel to do it." But you know how better judgment prevailed when his servant was bold enough to admonish him and he did go to the Jordan, washed himself, and was healed.

P. K. REGIER, newly appointed executive secretary of the General Conference.

For this devotional meditation let us keep in mind the words of the Syrian captain, "Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel? May I not wash in them and be clean?" Naaman wanted to substitute his own way of being healed rather than to accept the way of God, as he was advised to do by the prophet. For some unexplainable reason man is always trying to find a substitute for the real and the genuine. That is why quack doctors flourish and false prophets have such a large following. That is why so many sects and isms have sprung up around some fantastic religious idea.

Man is by nature a religious being. God has made him so. That means that he will worship something. He will either worship the true God, or he will worship a substitute. He just can't help himself, he will worship something.

This was already true of the ancient man. When Moses came down from Mount Sinai where God had given him the Ten Commandments, he found his own people worshipping a golden calf. They had substituted the god of Egypt for the true God of Israel. In Elijah's day they worshipped Baal, rather than Jehovah.

What about our modern times, does the modern man accept the true gospel of Jesus Christ, or does he try to find a substitute? Oh no, we would not worship Baal! We are too civilized for that! We would not even worship a golden calf, or would we?

And yet, if we have eyes to see, we must admit that in the midst of a Christian environment, modern man has found a substitute for the Gospel of Jesus Christ. There is today a revolt in religion. Creeds and dogmas are abandoned. Even God, the sovereign Ruler of the universe, is negated and dethroned. Many today are on the lookout for some alternative to religious faith, some substitute for the Gospel of Christ.

The point I wish to make is this. That alternative is ready at hand. A new religion has appeared on the field. A substitute for the Gospel is offering itself. It is the worship, not of God, but of man. This is the most serious rival which Christianity in this generation is facing. IT IS CALLED HUMANISM. But the name matters little. It is the thing, the attitude of mind, the way of life, with which we are deeply concerned.

In history there have been many brands of humanism. There is that of Protagoras five centuries before Christ, with this watchword, "Man is the measure of all things." In recent times there is that of Swinburne with his cheap sneer at Jesus as the "pale Galilean," and his slogan, "Glory to man in the highest, for he is the master of things!"

The humanism that confronts us today is a direct, declared rival of the Christian faith in that it puts man in the center of the picture. It summons man to work out his own plan of salvation and construct his own scheme of values. It pins its faith to science and education and human brains for the redeeming of the world, rather than to the grace of God and the divine atonement.

This humanism, or deification of man, finds many different expressions in our day. It seeks to explain

This humanism . . . seeks to explain away the supernatural in religion, reducing Christian belief to mere fantasy-thinking. It substitutes self-expression for Christ's demand for self surrender. It substitutes the instinct for the rule of God, and culture for the cross. . . . It is the root and core of a pleasure-mad world.

away the supernatural element in religion, reducing Christian belief to mere fantasy-thinking. It substitutes self-expression for Christ's demand for self-surrender. It substitutes the instinct for the rule of God, and culture for the Cross.

It is the root and core of a pleasure-mad world. Luther once said that anything becomes to us a god to which we give our first attention, our complete devotion, and our first aspirations. When you see a youth, or anyone for that matter, seeking plasure and entertainment as the first objective of life, at the expense of religious duty and faithfulness, you can be sure that he has found a substitute for the Christian gospel.

Humanism makes people become so immersed in secular things that they have no time for or interest in the gospel of Jesus Christ. Often you will find that people who have no interest in the church are very much interested in civic clubs, social clubs, and service clubs. All power to these clubs, for they are doing a fine piece of work. But when a man, who would not for anything in the world miss a banquet at a service club, regularly misses a banquet spread with the Manna of Heaven and the gospel of salvation, we have reasons to wonder whether he has not found a substitute for the real Christ of the church.

The rock on which our modern substitutes for the gospel go to pieces is the basic fact of sin. The great danger to the spiritual welfare of the soul lies in the fact that modern humanism holds that a man can have, and ought to have, absolute, unbridled freedom to do as he likes, and to drive his own way down any path of self-expression that he chooses. In this Huxley was right when he said that "a man's worst difficulties begin when he is able to do as he likes." It is a tragedy that so many people believe today that almost anything can be justified in the name of this new morality!

The trouble is that this new morality itself is a fallacy. In this age we need to have it indelibly written upon our minds that God's will, God's truth, God's throne, God's everlasting decisive difference between right and wrong—that difference for which Christ died—stand as fast and as binding as ever, and claim every decent soul's highest allegiance.

Do you not see why all these modern substitutes for the Gospel are so unsatisfying? They may be as clear as the waters of Babylon, but they have no cleansing power.

The task of the church, faced by the modern challenge, is surely abundantly clear. It is to proclaim a full evangel in all its width and sweep and power and splendor! It is to cease arguing the case for religion, and to concentrate instead on the heralding of the living God. It is to refuse to be deflected by as much as one degree from the great primary Commission, which is to hold up Christ, crucified, risen, exalted!

Surely, the church is facing great difficulties today. But still we can never forget that for the church possessing the passion of evangelism, this is an hour of unprecedented opportunity. Tens of thousands, disillusioned by the failure of all the alternatives for Christ, are now ready to hear of some more excellent way. Let us take courage in this that it is as true today as it was when the words were first spoken long ago, "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Me." Do you believe that?

Conference President to Editorship

Jesse N. Smucker

Brother Smucker brings to the task of the editorship a wealth of experience. In addition to the perspective and insight offered by the chairmanship of the General Conference for two terms and membership on the Seminary Board, he will serve with the advantage of some thirty-four years in the ministry and two years in relief work in the near east.

Brother Smucker has been pastor at the Oak Grove Church, Smithville, Ohio; Bethel College Church, North Newton, Kansas before coming to Bluffton, Ohio in 1942. He announced his resignation to the Bluffton congregation as being effective June 1. He succeeds Jacob J. Enz, acting editor, who plans to continue his graduate biblical studies.

MEN'S BROTHERHOOD HAS WORK NIGHT AT THE CHURCH

On November 2 the following 22 men appeared for a work night at the Bethel Mission Church, Winnipeg, Manitoba: John Unger, Peter Buhr, C. A. Friesen, Isaac Funk, Henry Martens, Henry Peters, Edward Enns, Henry Dueck, Menno Klassen, David Schroeder, H. H. Funk, Jacob Buhr, Benno Toews, Ben Braun, P. P. Reimer, George Brawn, Peter Schroeder, I. I. Friesen, Arnold Regier, Henry Funk, Erdman Buhr, Jacob Buhr.

Among the many jobs that were done was the cleaning and servicing of the heating equipment, sanding of the floor of the main room leading into the church, cleaning and putting on the storm windows, sanding and repairing some of the church pews, cleaning of closets, etc.

Refugee Problem Grows At Rate of 1,500 per Day

AKRON, PENNSYLVANIA. Critical general need has passed and in addition to the chronic need, only spot help will be required among the general population. With the refugees, however, it is a different story. The refugee problem has grown and is still growing with an alarming sum of 1,500 refugees being added to the millions of other refugees every day. If no change takes place in present military-government policies, this problem cannot be solved. If they could migrate to other lands, it would help a great deal; but without work and a place to live here on the continent, they have little other chance but to disintegrate morally and spiritually.

Our aim in this rehabilitation program, which also includes liaison and help to our European Mennonite brethren, promises to be one of the hardest and most demanding tasks we have faced up to the present time.

Transition

Gone are the days of people starving in the streets; but under cover there remains gnawing need, hunger, and cold among certain groups of people. In place of the vast material-aid have come the community centers, Voluntary Service, and spiritual rehabilitation work. Refugee work goes on. Material-aid to smaller needy groups continues. Children's homes continue. The door for spiritual rehabilitation is open.

A Continuing Witness

One sees the M.C.C. program of the future to be one of great responsibility for all concerned. The distribution of material aid and the efforts to interpret our reasons for being here have awakened interest and challenged many, and they are now turning to us for further help. These are people who wish to learn more of the meaning and application of a living effectual Gospel.

This challenge that M.C.C. has given to others to re-think their present values of moral and spiritual living has opened a new area of responsibility. We have a wonderful opportunity to aid in this field. Our community centers, work camps, Voluntary Service, and children's homes have been steps taken to attempt this.

The Spiritual Equivalent

In the year ahead we will be striving to hammer out the spiritual equivalent of the Broetchen in Hamburg, shoe heels in Heilbronn, brick walls in Espelkamp, and the vaccines in Naples. A Protestant pastor recently remarked, "You have shown us; now you must say it." If we have had an effective and valid ministry to supply bread to starving people so that they can regain strength, then certainly the Christian essence that validated this ministry has an even greater relevancy in helping people to again achieve lives with real meaning and purpose.

—from letters by Walter Eicher, Paul Peachy and others.

More Warm Clothing Needed

Things may look better in Germany, but a different picture is seen by those who conduct clothing distributions among the most needy people in the poorer section of a city. Recently at Frankfurt, in a clothing distribution the workers received more requests for warm clothing than they could fill. There seemed to be a never-ending cry for warm sweaters, coats, and jackets for everyone. What is considered warm in America is often not adequate there, for homes are not heated and therefore people must wear more clothing. The need for warm clothing will continue.

Mennonite Aid Notes

A number of Mennonites from Paraguay have been coming to Canada, sponsored by their respective relatives in Canada. The M.C.C. has helped these persons in completing arrangements for their passage to New York, and also in cooperation with the Canadian Mennonite Board of Colonization, has assisted them in transportation to their sponsors.

Walter A. Claassen and family of Whitewater, Kansas, sailed on January 12 for Uruguay, where he will serve as co-director of the refugee resettlement program. It is planned that he will be stationed at the El Ombu resettlement project while Arthur Jahnke, sharing in the directorship, will be located at the Montevideo office.

Service Among Migrants

Attention is being given to a need among migrant laborers in other places besides New York. For instance, in one area in California there are reportedly 100,000 migrants living on a very narrow margin economically. The field is open for Christian welfare work of the type that a Voluntary Service unit could perform. Anyone interested in this or other types of service projects, write to Voluntary Service Section, M.C.C., Akron, Penna.

SERVICE FOR PEACE "Worth While"

Very favorable reports have been received from those who have secured their copies of Service For Peace, the first official and complete account of the M.C.C. C.P.S. program. Thus far a substantial portion of the sales have been to ex-C.P.S. men The book is also of vital interest to every home—every young person—every church worker. Books are available at Mennonite bookstores, conference headquarters, or from the publisher, Mennonite Central Committee Price: $3.00 per copy. Ex-C.P.S. men should order from the M.C.C. office, Akron, Pa., to secure the special rate.

Peace Section Notes

Recent reports indicate that local draft boards have been warned of a possible call for recruits. With the present Selective Service law expiring as of July 1, some renewal of draft activity may take place. It appears also that militarist groups will press for enactment of some conscription or selective service extension measure. The Peace Section of the M.C.C. is keeping in touch with any developments relating to draft legislation. The National Service Board for Religious Objectors, with office in Washington, D. C., is also helpful in interpreting developments relating to our peace position.

J. Harold Sherk, secretary of the M.C.C. Peace Section, spent several weeks in visiting constituent church groups in the western parts of Canada and the United States.

so numerous no one can remember them all. The government has made, and continues to make, a purge of any employees who had any political affiliation with the Apra party. The power of the Roman church in Peru is greater than ever, and civil marriage and religious liberty are threatened once again.

The Red Herring

The struggle for freedom is being waged in different ways in the various countries. In some, it is against militarism and clericalism and the trend toward totalitarianism or strong-man government, in others against the old-style dictators, while in others where liberal gains have been made, it is against social and economic inequalities, ignorance, poverty, and disease.

Generally speaking, the liberals and those who struggle for democracy and freedom in their own countries are caught between the totalitarianism or repression of the right and the threatened penetration of the left.

What about communism in Latin America? The Communist epithet is used very losely in Latin America, as elsewhere. Almost anyone who has liberal views on labor or social reform is labeled Communist, and in many places Protestants are called Communists also. This is partly due to ignorance as to what communism is—and what Protestantism is, too—and partly to propaganda in the Roman Catholic pulpit, and emanating from Roman Catholic sources, in the press. This church sees in communism a deadly enemy, because it cuts at the roots of its wealth and privilege, though this is not the line it uses. It is easy to see how that church can get the blind, unquestioning allegiance of the wealthy, whose position is also theatened. An ex-president of a Latin American country recently told a friend that the liberals of Latin Ametrica tend to view communism as the only force standing up to the Roman Catholic Church, which they believe is the source of many of their evils.

In an article in Look magazine (October 4, 1949), Bishop Oxnam, writing on the theme "How the Protestants Fight Communism," shows how communism has been unable to take root in Protestant countries. He says, "Communists know that Protestantism creates an atmosphere in which tyranny cannot breathe" . . . "Protestatism fertilizes the good earth with freedom and democracy."

Said Rómulo Gallegos, liberal ex-president of Venezuela, "Satisfy the longing for justice and well-being that torments the popular soul, with practical, positive, concrete achievements and thus remove it from the seduction of Marxist promises." But these achievements require a culture with a moral and spiritual foundation.

For those who can read, Communist propaganda, with its messianic interpretation of history in terms of economic determinism, is always on hand. In a sense, there is a repetition of the situation in France just before the Revolution of 1789. The aim of the Revolutionaries was the destruction of the church as a political organization, and of its privileges and wealth accumulated by exploiting the superstition of the people. Writers such as Rabelais and Voltaire fought the church with ridicule and satire, but in so doing they also weakened or destroyed religion itself. The same danger exists in Latin America today.

Why of Communism

As a result of the void left by Roman Catholicism and its spiritual bankruptcy in Latin America, many who have broken off all contact with the church are turning to esoteric cults, to skepticism or materialism. As the Buenos Aires Conference said, "The intellectuals and the students boast of their skepticism, and the workers embrace materialist ideologies (including communism) with almost religious fervor." Writing in The Nation, Alvarez del Vayo said, "What is happening in China will one day happen in Latin America."

What have we to say to all this? Undoubtedly, the challenge of the hour is tremendous, if we could only see clearly the forces that are lined up in the struggle.

The United States is locked in a titanic ideological and political struggle with communism. There is danger in the way it condones or overlooks the totalitarianism and clerical fascism of the right on the assumption, we suppose, that it is not as threatening as the totalitarianism of the left. But in the struggle for freedom it is, and let us make no mistake about it. Ask any Protestant who has lived in Spain . . . ask anyone who has lived in any of the countries under military rule or strong-man dictatorship in Latin America.

The struggle for freedom in Latin America is part of the world-wide struggle between reactionary, authoritarian religion and the forces of liberalism. The Roman Catholic Church is attempting to retain or take unto itself temporal power and a privileged position, without any regard for the rights of those of other faiths. When this happens, freedom itself is in danger.

We believe that a strong Protestantism is the great need in Latin America. The Protestant church is growing there fast, but it is still only a minority.

Only a strong Protestant movement can create a force for righteousness, a force that will liberate the human spirit. The soul of freedom is the freedom of the soul, and we believe that the Latin American soul will not be free until it surrenders itself to Jesus Christ. It was he who said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." "Where the spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty."—Watchman-Examiner

SECRETARY JOHNSON PLEADS DRAFT EXTENSION

ON January 20, Defense Secretary Johnson read to the House Armed Services Committee four reasons why Selective Service should be continued after the present law expires on June 24, 1950.

Effect Abroad

First, said the Secretary, there is the "possible effect abroad of failure to extend the Act." He argued that continuation of Selective Service "gives notice to the world that we are determined to be strong and faithful to our obligations" such as the Atlantic Pact and Military Aid program. In the ensuing question period, some Committee members indicated that economic aid abroad is better than military aid.

Precious Savings in Time

"Second," Secretary Johnson continued, "there would be a precious savings in time if an emergency should require the return to inductions." Without Selective Service it would take seven months to be able to induct 300,000 men per month, but with it only three months would be required. A Committee member asked how there could be a savings in time if military camps were allowed to be closed as is now the case. Two leading Committee members argued that a strong Reserve would save just as much or more time than Selective Service.

Guarantee Strong Military Posture

Secretary Johnson's third argument was that Selective Service continuation "will guarantee a strong military posture." Without Selective Service there is the risk that enlistments will fall off. On this point Committee questioning was severe. Chairman Vinson asked why Selective Service is needed if the armed forces we now have are being reduced. Representative Kilday pointed out that the Army will not now take raw recruits, is now actually reducing forces below the approved budget, and still asks for Selective Service extension. He also showed that the Navy and Air Force take raw recruits and previously testified against Selective Service. Only the Army wants it. He further indicated that the selectees under the present law are practically all out of the Army and the Army is still reducing forces. Representative Johnson (not Secretary Johnson) asked if a better recruiting program would not be cheaper and at the same time stimulate enlistments as effectively as Selective Service. Representative Brooks said we want to get away from regimentation in peacetime. Secretary Johnson answered that Selective Service is not regimentation!

Maintenance of Strong Reserve Forces

The Secretary argued, in the fourth place, that a Selective Service law would help stimulate enlistments in the Reserve forces. Some Committee members asked if a strong recruitment program and a program of adequate pay would not also stimulate the necessary encompromise.

UMT by Back Door?

One Representative asked Secretary Johnson if draft extension meant that there would be a later request for universal military training. "Not during the three-year extension period," was his reply. The implication seemed to be that after the three-year period universal military training would be requested.

Stand-by Legislation

At the end of the session Representative Vinson asked if the Administration would agree to having the present law remain on the books with the provision there should be no inductions except by a joint resolution of Congress. The Secretary answered not by a joint resolution by Congress but that inductions should take place in case of an emergency declared by the President. Vinson jeeringly replied there is "always some kind of emergency." As he left, the Defense Secretary promised to confer with President Truman at luncheon to discover if the latter would approve this comromise.

Conscientious Objectors Provisions

The present law gives deferment to conscientious objectors adjudged sincere by their local boards. Johnson said no change in the present law would be asked as the Defense Department wanted no controversial items in the present law to be discussed in hearings or on the floor of Congress. The identical extension bills, H.R. 6,826 and S.2,861 of only six lines ask simply that section seventeen of the present Act be changed to make "second anniversary" read "fifth anniversary"—a simple three-year extension. Numerous other courses in the government have assured us of little if any possibility of present conscientious objector provisions being changed if Selective Service is extended.

GET SOMEBODY ELSE

The Lord had a job for me to do,
  But I had so much to do,
I said, "You get somebody else,
  Or wait till I get through."
I don't know how the Lord came out,
  But He seemed to get along,
But I felt kind o' sneakin' like—
  Knowed I'd done God wrong

One day I needed the Lord—
  Needed Him right away;
But He never answered me at all,
  And I could hear Him say,
Down in my accusin' heart:
  "Negro, I'se got too much to do;
You get somebody else,
  Or wait till I get through."

Now, when the Lord He have a job for me,
  I never tries to shirk;
I drops what I have on hand,
  And does the good Lord's work.
And my affairs—can run along,
  Or wait till I get through;
Nobody else can do the work
  That God marked out for you.

RUSTIN ADDRESSES BLUFFTON GROUP

Bayard Rustin, representing the American Friends Service Committee, gave three lectures in Bluffton Monday, January 30. Two of these were given in the college chapel and one in the First Mennonite Church. The meetings were sponsored by the Peace Club.

Harry Yoder visited Mennonite church communities in Iowa and Illinois, interviewing high school seniors. He also spoke in the church at Tiskilwa, Illinois, and called on the membership in the interest of the Founders Hall Building Fund.

Ernst Crous visiting Mennonite leader from Europe, spoke at the vesper service Sunday afternoon, January 29. He and Mrs. Crous will spend the month of February in Bluffton. Crous spoke on "Present Conditions of Church Life in Germany."

The music departments of Bluffton and Ohio Northern cooperated in sponsoring the presentation of "Don Pasquale" by the New Lyric Stage Opera Company in the Lehr Auditorium, Ohio Northern University. The presentation was given Friday evening, February 3.

BETHEL COLLEGE

The Hutchinson Symphony Orchestra, consisting of more than sixty players, gave a concert in Bethel College Memorial Hall, January 24. It was sponsored jointly by the student council and the public relations department.

While attending the annual meeting of the American Association of Colleges in Cincinnati President Kaufman also attended a meeting of the Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges. The foreign student exchange program and a summer trip to Europe for college students were discussed. Bethel College is allowed to send eight students and alumni on the summer tour. Another interesting report which he brought back was about a new Christian University to be established in Japan. The project was initiated by the National Protestant Council on Higher Education, and one of the instigators was Maurice Troyer, who is of Mennonite background. College professors are called upon to make donations for a library for this new Japanese university.

CANADIAN BIBLE COLLEGE BIBLE WEEK MARCH 13-17

The Canadian Mennonite Bible College announces its Bible Week for this year. It will be held from March 13 to 17. The visiting speakers for this occasion will be J. J. Nickel, Langham, Sask.; A. E. Kreider, Goshen, Indiana; and, John Thiessen, missionary from India.

A recent privilege that was enjoyed by two Bible colleges here in Winnipeg has been the exchange of messages from the two college presidents. On January 18th. Arnold J. Regier, president of C.M.B.C., spoke in the chapel service of our sister college, the Mennonite Brethren Bible College. Then, on January 24, H. H. Janzen, president of the M. B. B. C., gave a return message here in our chapel service. Plans have also been made for an exchange program of the student bodies as a whole to be held in the near future.

Recently many opportunities have offered themselves to the students to become better acquainted with the work of the M. C. C. David Schroeder, a M.C.C. representative for Western Canada, is giving a series of talks every Thursday during the chapel period on the various types of work that M.C.C. engages in. Other recent visitors to our college from the M.C.C. have been J. Harold Sherk, C. F. Klassen, and C. J. Rempel.

FREEMAN'S PIONEER HALL BY COMMUNITY COOPERATION

Work on Pioneer Hall, the new auditorium-gymnasium, is progressing steadily. Even in the severest weather crews of volunteer workers are busy almost daily. That this building is an outstanding example of community co-operation may be seen from the fact that up to January 1, 1950 there have been 2,099 days or 16,792 man hours of labor donated by men who work under the supervision of hired foremen and supervisors. The next major project will be the installation of the heating system. The members of the Women's Auxiliary have taken as their project the equipping of a completely modern kitchen for the dining hall in the basement. Much of the equipment is already on hand.

A check on last years' Junior College graduates shows that the majority of them are continuing their education. Among the schools chosen were Bethel, Tabor, General Beadle Teachers College, and South Dakota University.

BRETHREN LEADER SPEAKS TO SEMINARY

M. R. Zigler, for many years head of the Brethren Service Committee and now director of its European Peace Commission with headquarters in Geneva, Switzerland, spoke at the Bethany chapel services Friday morning. He indicated that after many years of frustration and defeat, the witness of the Christian peacemakers and especially that of the historic peace churches, is finally being given some attention. He indicated that he is still greatly committed to cooperative thinking and action among the three historic peace churches—Quakers, Mennonites, and Brethren—and is eager for some common thinking on these great issues which can be presented to other Christian groups. Zigler will soon embark on a busy speaking schedule from coast to coast which will take him till next June at which time he will return to Europe for another term of service.

The Seminary octet gave two programs on Sunday, January 29: at the Topeka Church, Topeka, Indiana, where Esko Loewen, a graduate of this school, is pastor, and the second in the First Church of Berne, Indiana, where Olin Krehbiel is pastor.

Jottings

—Herold Church, Bessie, Oklahoma: Since Brother T. H. Kliewer resigned as deacon because of ill health, Brother Otto Nickel was elected to take his place at a recent meeting. As Mr. Nickel was already serving on the executive board as trustee, a vacancy occurred and Brother Paul Horn was elected to act as trustee. We have had very little moisture lately; the weather has been quite varied. One afternoon the mercury climbed to around 80 degrees and the next morning everything was frozen stiff.—Mrs. H. B. Schmidt, Corr.

—Grace Church, Dallas, Oregon: Our annual business meeting was held in December when elections and arrangements for another year were made. On January 1 the men's quartet from Bethel College was in our midst. The program was enjoyed. Our congregation has taken part in a heifer drive for relief. On January 29 the six Oregon Mennonite churches had pulpit exchange. The two Ladies' Missionary Sewing Societies meet twice a month to sew for relief and bazaar. We have been in winter's cold grip for several weeks and the Sunday and week-day meetings are not too well attended.—Mrs. Frank J. Schmidt, Corr.

—First Church, Geary, Oklahoma: At our annual business meeting on the first of the year, Brother Otto Krehbiel was elected our new secretary. Brother O. P. Ruth has served in this position for forty years.—Corr.

—Newport Church, Newport, Washington: Communion services were observed January 8. The new church and Sunday school officers were installed at a joint service on Sunday, January 22. Because of snow and cold the installation had been postponed. P. P. Tschetter preached one sermon on January 12, but due to bad weather he had to leave the next day. Mr. and Mrs. Ben Woelk lost their house and all its contents through fire on January 15. The church members are helping them.—Mrs. H. D. Hiebert, Corr.

—Saron Church, Orienta, Oklahoma: Waldo Flickinger from the "Go Ye Mission" was with us from December 25 to 30, giving a series of messages on "God's Plan of Redemption." Marvin Dirks and the octet from the Seminary in Chicago were with us on Sunday morning, January 1. The program they gave was very much appreciated. On that evening Herman Buller Jr. gave a report on his work and some experiences as M.C.C. workers in Europe. He also showed some pictures. On the evening of January 6 Missionary Marie Regier told us of the China churches and their experiences. Andrew Shelly, who is conducting a Bible course at Oklahoma Bible Academy at Meno, was with us the evening of January 18. Alvin Regier and a quartet came with him and furnished music. Last Sunday, the Albert Jantzens from O.B.A. were with us. They brought the message in the morning and in the evening they showed some pictures of China as it had been when they were working there. Our pastor, H. P. Fast, was at Corn, Oklahoma, from January 18-22, giving a series of messages in the M.B. Bible School at that place.—Mrs. John H. Frantz, Corr.

—Glendale Church, Lynden, Washington: On December 29 our congregation enjoyed an inspiration musical program by the Bethel College male quartet under the direction of David Suderman. On January 22, P. P. Tschetter of the Grace Bible Institute delivered the morning and evening messages. Due to road conditions in Canada his speaking schedule there was canceled and this made it possible for him to conduct a series of meetings in our church the following week. The Men's Brotherhood is busy constructing Sunday school rooms in the building which was recently purchased for Sunday school purposes. Our pastor, Dan Toaves, is beginning a series of Sunday morning messages entitled "Natural, Carnal, and Spiritual Man."—Mrs. Clarence Schmidt, Corr.

—Deep Run Church, Bedminster, Pennsylvania: Many have received the Handbook to Mennonite Hymnary through our young people. Displaced persons finding homes in our midst are as follows: John Czyzyk with Enos Moyers, Chalfont; Mr. and Mrs. Edward Tupitis and two-year-old daughter Vizma with Norman Wismers, Hilltown; and Rosna and Vilga Galinskis with Ely Fretzes, Pleasant Valley. The Tupitis family and the Galinskis children are from Latvia, and the mother and another sister of the later children are working at our Home for the Aged at Frederick. Clarence Mood is recuperating nicely after a recent narrow escape in a tractor accident. Plans are being made for our annual congregational fellowship supper.—Corr.

—Hoffnungsau Church, Inman, Kansas: Our church dedication services were held on January 22. It was a beautiful day and an estimated crowd of 2,000 people attended the afternoon services. All seating space was occupied and a large number stood outside where a public address system was used. A fellowship meal was served at noon and also after the afternoon service. Dedication Day was followed by a series of three meetings conducted by Walter Gering. Child consecration took place Christmas Day. On January 2, we had our annual business meeting. January 15, Miss Erna Fast of Mountain Lake, Minnesota, told of her experiences as a relief worker. On January 29 our C. E. presented a program at the Buhler Church.—Mrs. Ben M. Ediger, Corr.

SONG FESTIVAL PLANS

Plans for the Mennonite Song Festival were made by the officers of that organization when they met on the Bethel College campus on January 22, 1950. As has been customary, the festival will be held at the Memorial Hall, North Newton, Kansas, May 7, 1950, both afternoon and evening. The afternoon program will be devoted to music from the different churches in the Western District Conference area, this being a men's, a ladies', or a mixed choir. If any of these churches have junior choir, it is hoped that they will also prepare to sing at this festival. For the evening all music lovers are invited to participate in a mass choir that will be responsible for the major part of the program. Rehearsals will be announced at a later date. Neither did the committee forget that everyone enjoys the singing of chorales and hymns; therefore, each program will include singing by the congregation.

—First Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: Erna Fast who has served two years in M.C.C. relief in Germany spoke in our church Tuesday evening, January 17. She also showed some slides. Cornelius Krahn of North Newton gave an illustrated lecture on Mennonite history for our C. E. program on January 15. Johnnie Bartel of our church and Myrta Klassen, member of the First Church in Newton, were married January 20. For the fifth Sunday evening our Mission Societies have planned a special program. A group of missionaries will speak and sing in their foreign languages. Marie J. Regier will be the main speaker. The women of our church have all day relief sewing every last Thursday of the month.—Mrs. Wm. Bartel, Corr.

Mennonite Youth

"A United Mennonite Youth in Christ"

Sponsored by the Young People's Union of the General Conference. Editor, Esko Loewen, Topeka, Indiana

An Open Letter to Youth

4614 Woodlawn Ave.
Chicago 15, Illinois
February 3, 1950

Dear Young People:

It seems that as soon as Christmas is over one begins to think of next summer. With that thought comes the question, "What am I going to do during the summer months?" And so we begin to think of the possibility of finding work, of going someplace on a trip, or perhaps of just staying home and helping with the work that needs to be done. In the last few years more and more young people and some that aren't so young have come to think of the summer in terms of an opportunity of working in the program known as Voluntary Service.

Surely most of you know what is included in the Voluntary Service program. Voluntary Service offers opportunities for young people to participate in projects of great variety. All of the fields of activity chosen are those where a need can be filled in Christian service. The various units provide tasks for people of all types of ability. Projects are located in Europe, Mexico, Canada, and in many areas in the United States.

If you are looking for a summer filled with the fellowship of young Christians, with the satisfaction of doing good, of rich experiences, of training in vital jobs, here's your chance. You can attend mental patients, work with old people, teach Bible school to Indian children or Negro children, help with Bible school and recreation in Chicago or New York City, serve with Canadian young people on their Youth Farm in Rosthern, Saskatchewan, be a part of Youth Team or a Peace Team that travels in our Mennonite communities, serve as migrant worker, or perform a host of other services that are waiting for you.

The General Conference Voluntary Service committee, as well as the M.C.C. is the organization that makes these opportunities possible for you. To have the best summer of your life think about Voluntary Service, pray about it, and then when the time comes, fill in the application forms.

We would be glad to have you write to us if you are interested in joining those who are ready and eager to give some time to Voluntary Service.

Sincerely,
Bertha Fast, Director
General Conference Voluntary Service

Personal Representative of Christ

by Pete Buller

NIGHT duty on the 11 P.M. to 7 A.M. shift—that is where I found myself upon joining the Summer Voluntary Service Unit at the State Village for Epileptics at Skillman, New Jersey. One night I noted on my cottage office desk an M.C.C. bulletin, and as I sat there the bold inscription on its front caught my eye—"In the Name of Christ." Before me was my night report. On the blank space after "Employee on Duty" I had written "P. Buller." A startling thought forced itself upon me. I dramatized it by crossing out my own name and writing instead, "Jesus Christ."

So that was it. I and every other young person who had entered Voluntay Service was the personal representative of Christ Himself. I thought of our eighteen-member unit. Together and individually we had the privileges of representing Christ to all those about us by our words and actions. Not only was it our privilege, it was also our duty as followers of Christ.

The Only One That Rings True

An incident which had occurred recently made me realize that our fellow employees saw in us something of the Spirit of the Master. One of the supervisors who claimed to be an atheist and a disbeliever in anything supernatural had told me quite frankly, "Of all the religious faiths there are, the only one I've seen that really rings true is the kind that your group of young people has."

To the patients it was our privilege to represent Christ. The effect of our witness even on the mind of a child was seen when I overheard one of the little fellows caution his playmate, "You should never curse a Mennonite, they are a religious people."

The greatest joy in serving Christ at Skillman was in representing Him in the fact of human need. It wasn't that we did such world-shaking things. Rather it was the joy of practicing simple Christianity and exercising love to a group of people who knew only neglect, abuse, and suffering.

A Curse and a Warning Kick

Old Tony was quite accustomed to being awakened at 3:00 A.M. by a curse and a warning kick in the side while the attendant yanked the soiled sheet from under him. Imagine his surprise one night when he was quietly but firmly awakened and told to rise for a minute while the attendant changed his sheet. And strangest of all, before the attendant left he tucked Tony back into bed, and wished him a cheery goodnight. Changing sheets for a 60-year-old man at 3:00 A.M. may not seem like Christian service, but the members of our unit who worked in Tony's cottage found it so. The smile that crept over Tony's face and the strange light that glowed in his eyes as I left him was ample reward for the privilege of representing Christ.

Torn Away From Mother

Then I thought of Clyde who had just recently come to Skillman. Torn away from his mother and home, his little heart spent its hours beating out great lumps of loneliness. "Mr. Buller," he confided in me one day, the tears rolling down his cheeks, "I prayed to God every day that my mother should come to see me, but she doesn't come." Of course I could not bring his mother; but, as I put my arms about him, I knew that if Christ had been there He would have taken Clyde in His arms and given him a mite of that mother's love.

Or I thought of the times when the stillness of the night had been broken by the cry of Sammy as he suffered the agony of an epileptic convulsion. There wasn't much I could do but let him take my hand and hold it tightly while his little body struggled to free itself from the grasp of epilepsy. But as I did so I realized that if Christ were there He would touch that same body and heal it.

The night was passing on and I knew that daybreak would find me rushing about the cottage preparing for breakfast the 42 boys who lived there. I took the ink-remover and soon blotted out the words "Jesus Christ" on the line entitled "Employee on duty." But as I wrote mine back in I could still see a trace of the other underneath.

Comments by the Editor-- "Think It Over, Maybe You Are the One"

CAN YOU PICTURE YOURSELF in the densest slum in America, amidst the noise, suspicion, fear, filth, and dirt of jam-packed East Harlem?

Had you ever thought of carrying a bunch of keys and locking the door behind you in Ward C of the East Wing of the mental hospital? And then, with one or two other attendants you take care of from fifty to two or three hundred mental patients of all descriptions?

Did it ever occur to you that you might be able to teach the Bible in Lame Deer, Montana among the Cheyenne Indians or in Arizona among the Hopis?

Or had you ever thought of leaving your comfortable world to live a summer among the shifting migrants who barely get enough for food and who become discouraged, engage in fights, get drunk, and only sink lower? Those shifting millions of our population who pick our onions, cherries, beans, carrots, celery, apples and much more of the food that sets before us on our clean tables—those are the migrants.

How would you like to work for a summer with a bunch of children from broken families who are derelicts without love or a home or any of the good things you know? Had you ever thought of making such children a little bit of joy and a bit of the stability you know?

How about you going to the Deep South where racial tension is severe and there in your best manner and your simple way try to share and help and build into others lives some of the Christian faith you know?

Or, had you ever thought of traveling from church to church, getting acquainted with our people, working with them, helping them in their church work, giving programs, using your talents wherever you could?

You see, there are hosts of possibilities for young people to serve the church. You don't get rich in money, but your spiritual treasury is filled. Think it over, maybe you are the one for Voluntary Service this summer. —EL

NEW YORK, — Mrs. Ralph J. Bunche, wife of the former U. N. acting mediator in the Palestine dispute, and Mrs. Ruth Bryan Rohde, one-time U. S. minister to Denmark, now a member of the U. S. delegation to the United Nations, yesterday helped launch a nationwide program to put a million American Protestant women on record for Christian unity throughout the world. At a meeting yesterday at the offices of the interdenominational United Council of Church Women, the group signed the "Ecumenical Register of Church Women" on which the million are to be enrolled. The project also called the "First Million," is sponsored by the United Council, an organization made up of women of every major Protestant denomination in state and local councils across the country.

CHICAGO — A county-by-county drive in 35 states to provide food for the needy abroad reached a nationwide climax January 30 at the Port of New Orleans with the National Dedication of the 1949 Christian Rural Overseas Program.

Highligting the dedication was a relief luncheon in honor of the contributions by Americans of food for the aged, ill, orphaned and destitute in 22 nations. The bulk commodities, given through the cooperative church program, are distributed abroad by church agencies.

Whether or not Sholem Asch undergoes baptism in water, in the opinion of most of the Yiddish writers he has already baptized himself in ink. Ever since he switched to Calvary as a literary theme, Asch has incurred the dislike of his former colleagues. Asch's latest venture into Galilee, the book Mary, is sure to produce an eruption in the Yiddish press. The first blast has already come from the pen of Benjamin Ressler, in the Day, who devotes three articles to the latest Aschininities.—Rabbi Samuel Silver, in The National Jewish Post

The American Sunday School Union is celebrating its 125 years of service. The Sunday school movement was initiated by Robert Raikes in Gloucester, England, in the year 1780. It was, however, in America that the Sunday school movement was to come to full flower. The American Sunday School Union paved the way for all evangelical denominations in the undertaking of Sunday school work.—Watchman-Examiner

SAN FRANCISCO—A New Year's resolution to banish "Bazaars, suppers, pledges, special offerings or benefits of any kind" from church financing was taken by the Park Presidio United church here.

The combined Methodist-Congregational church supports itself entirely from voluntary and anonymous contributions by its 400 members. Income is now $17,000 annually.

The plan began five years ago when the present pastor, the Rev. Robert W. Moon threw out the church's giving record books.

ALABAMA.—The Alabama State Supreme Court has ruled that the court is no place to settle religious disputes. It refused to step into lawsuits growing out of disagreements among members of two Alabama churches, in one case the Church of God of the New Testament and in the other case the Primitive Baptist Church. One judge in rendering his judgment said, "This court and no other court in Alabama can say who is right in doctrinal belief and I believe all of them (parties to the suit) ought to spend more time on their knees than in court.—Gospel Herald

BIBLE ATLASES FOR STUDENTS, TEACHERS, AND CHURCH LIBRARIES

In the study of Book of Acts, the Gospels, or historical portions of the Old Testament every teacher grapples with the problem of how best to present the geographical background. Teachers and church school officers should know that there are good Bible atlases at various prices. One is priced low enough to warrant the purchase of enough for each pupil to have one in his hand.

Atlas of Bible Lands, C. S. Hammond and Company, New York. This paper bound 32-page booklet has 32 maps and a number of photographs, some of which are colored, to illustrate people's customs, geography, architecture, etc. It lists at 50c with a discount of 20 per cent if purchased in groups.

Historical Atlas of the Holy Land, Rand McNally and Company, Chicago. Another paper covered booklet of 32 pages exclusively devoted to maps depicting different biblical periods. The group of maps is a selection from Hurbudrts' Bible Atlas Historical and Descriptive, described below. It lists at $1.00.

The Westminster Historical Atlas of the Bible: edited by George E. Wright and Floyd W. Filson, Westminster Press, Philadelphia, 7, 1945. This is definitely a teachers' atlas. Incorporating the very latest techniques in map making and the most recent archeological findings, this 114-page book not only presents maps and photographs of Palestine but also gives a table of biblical history, maps of early church history, and extensive printed matter which furnishes a most necessary supplementary background for intelligent Bible study. Listing at $3.50, it is probably the most dependable of the Bible atlases.

Bible Atlas, Historical and Descriptive: by J. L. Hurlburt, Rand McNally and Company, Chicago, 1910. Although one of the older atlases, this is the most complete of the group that is listed here. Its 168 pages include some ninety maps and a host of illustrations. The text or printed matter that accompanies these is very helpful in rounding out the geographical and historical background. It lists at $4.50.

Either or both of the latter two ought to be in every church library of serious Bible students.

THERE IS POSTIVELY NO REASON why Christians should get the atomic-age jitters which the front pages of our dailies have been reflecting. This is true for two reasons. First, the Christian has spiritual resources that lift him above such behavior. The Christian has a basic conviction that Christ's Kingdom "is not of this world." Furthermore, he has the conviction that ultimately the kingdoms of this world are to become the "Kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ." The conviction about the second coming of Christ guarantees us that God will finally prevail. In the light of this the Christian regards himself as a "stranger and a pilgrim;" he cannot regard himself as anything else in a world in which men deliberately and studiously and some even religiously, break the law of God. In such a situation the Christian will not be seriously disturbed if he be ridiculed, hurt, imprisoned, persecuted, or even martyred. He knows he belongs to another world that cannot be touched by these. Furthermore, and this is the second reason why the Christian dare not become jittery, his very willingness to take his stand for his convictions is a means of serving his age by giving his contemporaries a witness that will point them to Christ and his Kingdom. In this way the Christian fulfills his obligation to "Occupy till I come." (Luke 19:13).

Be at war with your vices; at peace with your neighbors.—Benjamin Franklin.

It is not enough for a gardener to love flowers; he must also hate weeds.

THIS MORNING's newspaper carried the story of a prayer meeting among some of the actors and actresses in Hollywood. The meeting as the article put it was called to provide a place for people of the entertainment world "who are searching for some spiritual life." Some may react by saying, "Well, they sure need it!" But is this not a terrific reflection on the churches, many of which are dark on prayer-meeting night or do not otherwise provide an opportunity for their membership to profit by extended seasons of meditation, petition, and intercession. This strikes at the very root of the present church's need—a re-awakening of church members. The Sunday morning service with less than half the hour devoted to worship and much less to prayer is obviously insufficient to provide the neecssary amount of group-communion with God, that is needed to present to the world outside a dynamic aggressively Christian front concerned not only about the collective sins of our time but also with the conversion of the individuals who make collective sins possible. If our strength is in Christ and if the Church is the body of Christ with the members of the Church making up the body of Christ then we should not "forsake the gathering together of ourselves as the manner of some is." (Heb. 10:25).

A HOME MISSION WORKER recently asked why there were no station wagons for Home Missions. He had purchased and worn out a car or two in the process of doing work assigned him by the Conference. He also called attention to the fact that we ought to be more concerned about the opportunities for mission work here at home at a time when the doors are wide open. We can well imagine what will happen to a full gospel message even in free America once another war should get started. Yet there seems to be a feeling abroad that Home Missions can wait. One fact needs to be underlined. The geographical location of an unsaved soul in no wise eases the lostness of the condition of that soul. Perhaps the time is closer than we think, when we ought to dispense with the organizational boundaries between Home and Foreign Missions. No one will deny that although thickly dotted with Christian institutions, America is essentially a pagan nation. Furthermore, communication is far too efficient in these days to hide this fact any longer from the nations we seek to win to Christ. While the responsibility to reach out to the ends of the earth with the saving message will ever remain, the strength of that witness will be exactly in proportion to the depth of the Christian witness in our homeland.

"The soul is soluble in alcohol," says the California Liquor Control News.

ACCORDING TO THE Reader's Digest of January 1950 an individual who did considerable research on the effect of smoking came to this conclusion: "When I began research for this article, I was smoking 40 cigarettes a day. As I got into the subject I found that number dropping. As I finish the article, I am smoking ten a day. I'd like to smoke more, but my investigation of the subject has convinced me that smoking is dangerous and, worse—stupid. Finally, I enjoy my ten cigarettes ever so much more than I did the 40." Why should he stop short of complete freedom? He would find that he would enjoy all life more if he dumped the ten he is still smoking to say nothing of a number of people around him who are involved in the slavery of his poisoning habit in that they have to put up with smoke-filled rooms and clothes that are perennially saturated with the odor.—J.J.E.

They say that folks drink because of their problems. You can't drown problems; they float like a cork even when they are as heavy as lead. There are only two things to do with problems: one is to solve them and the other is to live with them. Not one of us can SOLVE all of our problems but we can LIVE with them—courageously and intelligently. Too frequently the alcoholic tries to throw his burdens off on someone else instead of carrying them himself. Even Jesus had to bear the cross on which he died.

The Biblical Significance of Fellowship

by Leonard Metzger

WE hear much today about the need of bringing the peoples of the world together in some common understanding. With the recent advancements in the field of science and invention, we find our world becoming smaller, distance meaning nothing, and travel time decreasing. As we are brought into this close proximity, we are faced with the problem of living together. Are we prepared to live as we are brought closer together?

As we glance about us, we find various patterns employed to solve this problem. Sometimes we have followed the pattern of political strategy. Again we have assigned this problem to the field of economics. If we only had a proper economic relationship with the world, our problem would be solved. True, these and others are symptoms of our problem, but they are not the basic issues. The crux of our problem is spiritual.

The great need of our day is Christian fellowship—the type of fellowship that was found in the early church, of being "members one of another." A fellowship such as described in I John 1:3, "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us: and truly our fellowship is with the Father and with His Son Jesus Christ." A fellowship with the Father and with His Son Jesus Christ will result in true Christian fellowship, which will in turn bring a proper relationship with one another. Let us note a few things that happen when we come into this proper relationship with God and our fellow-men.

First of all as this experience brings us into a proper relationship with God it produces a fellowship with God which is the highest possible experience for the human soul. If our fellowship is with the Father then our joy is full. The poet, Tennyson, puts the experience in these words,

> Speak to him, thou, for he hears,
>   And spirit with spirit can meet;
> Closer is he than breathing,
>   And nearer than hands and feet.

When we have this fellowship, God becomes our Father and Jesus Christ becomes our Saviour. We are then able to walk in the light as He is in the light as I John 1:6 puts it, "But if we walk in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his son cleanseth us from all sin." This personal relationship with God forms the very basis of the structure of Christian fellowship.

This leads to a second thought that we need to bear in mind. Out of this personal relationship with God will come the fruitage of love. In John 15:9-17 we find a thought that ought to stir the Christian to thinking. "As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you; continue ye in my love." And again, "This is my commandment, that ye love one another, as I have loved you." This is the type of love that is produced in the life of an individual, when they recall the love of God toward them. It is the type of love that Jesus called for in the Sermon on the Mount, "I say, love your enemies." It is this type of love that alone will result in true Christian fellowship, a fellowship that flows freely from a heart of love.

> "If I truly love the One
>   All the loves are mine;
> Alien to my heart is none
>   And life grows divine."

Out of this proper relationship with God will come a concern for the welfare of the souls and lives of our fellowmen. There will no longer be passive members in the church, but we will take our place with others in leading the souls of men to Christ. The members of the church will have a concern and will have a part in the evangelistic program of the church. They will be so filled with the power of God that they cannot help sharing it with their fellowmen.

Proper relationship with God, love, and concern are the basis for true Christian fellowship. As we look into a world filled with sin and evil we have something, as Christians to counteract this situation. We have a spiritual solution to the problem of living in a world that is becoming smaller. "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us; and truly our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ." I John 1:3.

MINISTERIAL SCHOLARSHIPS FOR SUMMER OF 1950

The Interdenominational School for Rural Leaders will meet at Garrett Biblical Institute from June 19 to July 21 this year. Scholarships of $45.00 each are available which cover the cost of tuition and room for the five weeks. Candidates for the scholarships must be college graduates. Students may earn a maximum of eight quarter hours in the five week period. This year's faculty includes:

O. R. JOHNSON, head of the department of agricultural economics at the University of Missouri, in Columbia, who is offering the course: Agricultural Economics for the Rural Pastor.

WILLIAM SEWELL, head of the department of rural sociology at the University of Wisconsin, in Madison, is offering the course entitled: Rural Life in the United States.

ROCKWELL C. SMITH, director of the school for Rural Leaders, will again offer his course: The Program of the Rural Church.

In addition to these courses, the regular offerings of the Garrett Summer School will be available.

This is an unusual opportunity since our own Seminary is not in session during the summer. Quite a few of our younger ministers have availed themselves of this opportunity in recent years and speak very highly of their experience. If interested, write Ed. G. Kaufman, North Newton, Kansas.

From the Mission Front

In China: Baptisms and "Liberation" on Christmas

by Wilhelmina Kuyf

The following article, the first from our missionaries in occupied Chengtu, China, is made up of parts of a letter of Wilhelmina Kuyf to her family. It describes briefly the experiences of the missionaries as they work in a city which is being taken over by the Chinese Communists. As you will note, part of the article is written December 21, which was before "liberation"; the rest was written on January 7, after "liberation."

CHENGTU, CHINA, December 21, 1949. As you hear from the radio news, we are still not Communist, but we understand that the "liberating" army is very near. Since the start of the emergency or the whatever you want to call it, more than two weeks have passed. For several nights we heard trucks rumbling through the night, and we packed our bikes and some other things away, and stayed in. We had bought in food supplies. I began to wear my only other new pair of shoes, and my best new dress because it seemed the best way to take care of them. However, two weeks is a long time to wear a new, beautiful dress. Slowly conditions quieted, though the city is full of soldiers. They are of two armies, one of the Kuomintang regulars, and the other of a local general who has come from the province of Sikang. Perhaps I have it all mixed up, but anyway these two groups fought it out near the University, and a few bullets flew over that far.

Posters all Over

There are posters all over, listing 12 serious offenses, one of them is the unauthorized carrying of arms, another, the spreading of rumors.

In spite of the tension, we have had good attendance at church, and have been delighted to find so many Christians right on our street. Schools are mostly all closed because they have soldiers living in them, therefore I have English and Bible classes with almost the same group daily. The student work is very satisfying. I'm glad you pray for these young people too.

I took my bike out once last week and once this week, and not one bothered looking at me much, except the soldiers, who probably admired my "water buffalo spread" of handle bars.

It is now 11:30 P.M. and I can hear big guns booming and it makes me wonder if this letter will be held up. Poor people, some of them have lived in such fear for so long that they can hardly figure it out. Jesus' words, "Sheep without a shepherd," often come to my mind.

During this time, when we couldn't go out so much, and none of us went out at night, we had, at the request of the Chinese, a Bible study hour. We took the epistle to the Hebrews, because we thought that was about the right length (13 chapters) to finish. We ended last night, with much profit. It is a wonderful book. We are going to wait until after Christmas before starting another. Our folks feel we will have Christmas in peace, and they don't know about New Year. Time will tell. We thank God for each meeting we can have, and in the women's meeting one girl suggested we pray that this time next week we would have our regular meeting.

Our instruction for baptism class was irregular the second week but a few faithful ones stuck by. The result was that on Christmas Day we baptized 18 people making a total of 46 for the year here. The spiritual growth and depth of some of these new converts is amazing. Some of those who were not accepted for baptism are deeply disappointed, but know themselves to be saved, and will look forward to further instruction and baptism. Sometimes there are old habits that need to be overcome. Our standards here are higher than in some places at home. They and we need the constant prayers of home folks, that "having done all, they may stand."

We were "liberated" on Christmas Day, so quietly that we didn't know it. We were out at the west street at our Christmas program there. The liberating armies came in on Dec. 29 and 30 and there was naturally much excitement and celebration. Life seems to have settled into normal ruts very quickly, and we are happy that everything went off so peacefully. Church services were always well attended, and we are getting the feeling of being a close fellowship of believers.

On January 1, 1950, my heart was gladdened by 17 letters. It seems there is no airmail service out of Chengtu right now, but will try to get this started anyway.

Life in our new set-up here needs a separate letter and almost a book too. Some of the things you wouldn't believe. Thank God with us for what has been done in our group, and keep us all in your thoughts and prayers.

JESUS THE CARPENTER

CHARLES M. SHELDON

If I could hold within my hand
  The hammar Jesus swung,
Not all the gold in all the land,
Nor jewels countless as the sand,
  All in the balance flung,
Could weigh the value of that thing
Round which his fingers once did cling

If I could have the table Christ
  Once made in Nazareth,
Not all the pearls in all the sea,
Nor crowns of kings or kings to be
  As long as men have breath,
Could buy that thing of wood he made—
The Lord of lords who learned a trade.

Yea, but his hammer still is shown
  By honest hands that toil,
And round his table men sit down
And all are equals, with a crown
  Nor gold nor pearls can soil;
The shop of Nazareth was bare—
But Brotherhood was builded there.

A Missionary's Sunday in Hongkong

by W. C. Voth

HONGKONG, JANUARY 24.—"Never a Dull Moment" is surely true here. There are so many things to be done that I do not get around to all the things I would like very much to do. Saturday Paul Bartel asked me if I would come with them to the large refugee camp on Sunday afternoon. We spent all afternoon there.

There is a Mrs. Calvin Chao whose husband is a good evangelist and pastor. He is connected with the Inter-Varsity Fellowship here and is always busy. Mrs. Chao does much for these camps and preaches almost every Sunday afternoon besides her week-day evangelism. She is the one who introduced us. Paul Bartel held a Bible class with a lot of the refugees. Three of us missionary men and Mrs. Chao took turns preaching to the group out in the open. This was inside of the large Tung Hua Hospital yard. The yard is full of these people with beds under the trees everywhere. (I certainly wonder what happens when it rains.) We had about 150 who stood around us and listened very attentively. When Mrs. Chao asked how many of them wanted to accept Jesus and follow him, there were about 80 who raised their hands. We preached for over two hours and felt the Lord had blessed the meeting. The people were all well behaved and quiet. Besides these that stood around us there were a great number who were sitting on their beds near by.

Desperate Need of Missionaries in Japan

In the evening we heard a very interesting report by two Lutheran missionaries who had gone to Japan to look for a new mission field. I was very much interested since that is one of my assignments for our Board. They spent three months in Japan. Both of them were in the interior of China before. They said there is a great open field with still many country places and smaller centers where there had never been any mission work done. The missions in the past had almost all been in the larger cities and even those who had not been covered.

There were 1,200 missionaries in Japan before the war and now there are as yet only 800 at work. I was quite surprised about that. Even a city like Osaka had only one mission at work. They also had an interview with Dr. Kawaga. He had said, "Send us another thousand missionaries." "Now there are open doors everywhere in Japan, but we do not know how long that will be the case."

MISSION BRIEFS

On January 9 one of our missionaries, Miss Gladys Klassen, stationed at Jaghdeeshpur, C. P. India, was married to missionary Robert Kampars of Dehra Dun, U. P. India. Mr. Kampars is an independent missionary originally from Latvia. The wedding took place at Dehra Dun. Mrs. Kampars has severed her connections with our mission and will work with her husband in the United Provinces. We pray that God may bless them in their married life and in their missionary service.

They left Newton, Kansas, on January 17 in their Jeep station wagon together with the camp trailer, both of which they are taking to India with them.

After having been stationed at Champa during their first term of service, the Waltners will be stationed at Jaghdeeshpur when they arrive in India.

Let's Take the Family to Prayer Meeting

by Mrs. Ted E. Claassen

"I will make them joyful in my house of prayer—for mine house shall be called a house of prayer for all people." Isaiah 56:7.

AS a child, many of us were TAKEN to prayer meeting. NOW the child takes the parent; or, so it seems, as father and son, mother and daughter zealously wend their way to the regular mid-week service. Is there power, here, hitherto undiscovered, for the church of tomorrow?

About two years ago, we sensed the Lord's leading in the inauguration of a new idea in prayer meetings at First Mennonite.

Heretofore, we found ourselves in much the same situation as many kindred church groups. Oh yes, there was a regular mid-week Bible study and prayer service, conducted in both German and English. Stamped indelibly on our hearts is the picture of saints of God pouring out their souls in adoration and intercession. God alone knows the constraining force of this faithful group! But if numerical attendance was any indication, we were at low ebb spirtually. Young people rarely attended, parents with small children were excused, and members generally had forsaken the assembling of themselves together for prayer. Was there no hunger, or was the program inadequate?

There Was Concern

There was concern in the minds of pastor and leaders, in so much, that a special meeting was called of the major committees of the congregation. Those present felt deeply the need of a fuller program, whereby every adult, youth, and child would be inspired to a closer walk with the Lord. A special committee was appointed to submit a plan.

At the same time, the Spirit of God was stirring hearts. The Ministerial Alliance was sponsoring a series of meetings under the direction of a noted evangelist. Throughout Newton and its environs, homes were opened daily, where prayer was "wont to be made." Obstacles were removed as neighbors interceded for each other, as well as for the unsaved. In the evening services, under the convicting power of the Holy Spirit, children and youth accepted Christ as their personal Saviour, while a time of great heart-searching was experienced by Christians.

There Were New Dedications

As a result of these new dedications, a greater hunger for the things of God was manifest in our midst. With this added impetus, the special committee completed their plan. From "vacation land" had come a supplementary booklet coinciding with the need. The Family Prayer Meeting and Bible Class was the answer. A hearty response and a continual growth has marked its acceptance, with the attendance fluctuating between 175 and 200.

Parents and children gather for the short opening service, after which they separate into their several classes. Considerable time is allowed for prayer, wherein there is freedom because their is oneness of age and understanding. Pride, selfishness, and differences vanish as fellowship grows in the fear of the Lord. Precious it is to experience the believing prayers of little children, for "of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

Lessons are Prepared at Home

Lessons are prepared at home using the Word of God as the textbook, with a graded leaflet (Chapter by Chapter, Through the Bible Study—Genesis through Revelation, by Harlin J. Roper), containing questions and references to the scripture at hand. This creates interest and discussion, so that the closing bell is an unwelcome intruder.

With small children and youth in mind, the services begin early and close promptly, thereby keeping it an enjoyable experience for all.

This plan has met with such success, that others may be encouraged to inaugurate a comparable one. There is expansion, without destroying the blessings of the former plan. It may be significant that the entire group has the same assignment. The lessons are progressive, so that one hesitates to miss a single session. And last, but not least, it is a plan that appeals to our Mennonite family life.

A Sudden Awareness of Evaluation

It is cheering to note, in these days of complexity, a sudden awareness of evaluation. A study of the Word should give direction. Couple to this, prayers and supplications in the Spirit, with thanksgiving. May we not then expect men and women of great faith?

When Moses prayed, the fire was quenched.
When Hannah prayed, a son was given.
When Josiah prayed, judgment was postponed.
When Jonah prayed, deliverance came.
When Peter prayed, the Gentile was included in the Church.
When Paul and Silas prayed, a household was saved at midnight.
When early Christians prayed, there were added 3,000 souls.
Men today are praying, God the Father is being honored.
Lord, teach us to pray!

A student in a certain university enjoyed a great influence for good over the student body. The president called him into his office and asked him, "Harry, why is it you can have such a Christian influence over this entire school? I would give the world if I could have that influence. The student replied, "Well, that is what it cost me."—Texas Baptist Voice.

EASTERN DISTRICT

Observe Birthday of Denomination

by Ellis Graber

The 425th anniversary of the Zurich Meeting was observed by the Eastern District Conference with a special program arranged by the Historical and Publication Committee held in the Zion Mennonite Church, Souderton, Monday afternoon and evening, January 23.

The afternoon prgram featured two papers, "A Survey of Conditions Previous to the Zurich Meeting," and "The Zurich Meeting," presented by Wilmer Shelly and Freeman Swartz, respectively. At the evening service Charles D. Spotts, well-known writer and speaker, spoke on "The Future of the Church in the Light of the Zurich Meeting."

As the Lifting of a Curtain

For both those who had studied church history and those unacquainted with our heritage the afternoon meeting was as the lifting of a curtain to behold anew the rich heritage that is ours. We saw once again the conditions which gave rise to our faith, the corruptness and moral decay, the political and ecclesiastical entanglements, the rise of nationalism, and a host of other evils in the midst of which our Swiss Brethren stood firmly. The recapturing of the spirit of the early Christian church through the study of the Bible, bringing with it the doctrines of believers baptism, separation of Church and State, and non-swearing of oaths, was also stressed. The discussion following the presentations showed a renewed appreciation for our heritage. Perhaps somewhat neglected, and yet implicit rather than explicit, was the understanding that this faith of our fathers had led to a way of life in which thousands upon thousands died a martyr's death without resorting to violence, strictly adhering to the principle of biblical non-resistance.

The afternoon meeting closed with the question still not fully answered: "What can we do to be worthy of our great heritage?"

Charles D. Spotts seemed to answer that very question. He maintained that the future church needs to recapture some of the historic emphases of the Mennonites, particularly the separation of Church and State, and the doctrine of peace. Pertaining to the latter, especially striking was his contention that the church of the future must hold to the pacifist, nonviolent, non-resistant, biblical, Christ-like way of love in time of peace—right now in a war economy, and not only or primarily in time of war.

With Evangelistic Fervor Into All Areas

In contrast he mentioned areas in which the emphasis of Mennonites may have been somewhat weak. One of these is in the opening of the Bible to all peoples. "Not until all people know the Bible as the book of life can you rest," he said. A second area of neglect is that of moving out with our Christianity into social life, into every nook and corner of it. The implication was that sometimes Mennonites have been prone to go their own way in their own little world with seemingly little concern for what is happening outside of their immediate circle. Spotts contends that we need to move out with a real sincere evangelistic fervor to all of life. The conference gathering felt fortunate in having in their midst an "outsider" who with love and understanding would honestly tell us where we are strong and where weak.

Protest Vatican Ambassadorship

As if anticipating his message which had not yet been heard, the conference gathering in the afternoon session enthusiastically instructed the executive committee to telegraph President Truman expressing the hope that no one would be appointed to replace Myron C. Taylor as ambassador to the Vatican. Pastors were urged to encourage the people in their congregations to write to Washington D. C. to make their wishes known.

So the day ended with the conviction that truly our heritage is great; that surely we will not just want to preserve it, but that we will build upon it.

WHAT THEY SAY ..... about The Handbook to the Mennonite Hymnary

"The Handbook to the Mennonite Hymnary is an excellent volume that well repays members of other churches as well as your own to read and study. The summary in your introduction is very helpful in covering the broad range of hymnology.

"In the comment on the hymns and the writers it seems to me that you have given an excellent presentation, saying neither too much nor too little, and saying it well. The appreciation for hymns is often increased by knowledge of their origin, some characteristics of the writers, and associations connected with their use. I can foresee that our Moravian Brethren in Germany call Singstunde (a service of song) in which appropriate remarks culled from the Handbook will add to the joy of worship.

"Last week I showed the book to Bishop and Mrs. J. K. Pfohl, of the Moravian Church here. Mrs. Pfohl is an accomplished organist and has asked me to lend her the Handbook for study.

"I would like a copy of our archives, and enclose check for payment, hoping it will not inconvenience you to send it."—WACHOVIA HISTORICAL SOCIETY, Winston-Salem, North Carolina, Douglas L. Rights.

M. C. C. Launches Palestine Material Aid Project

Plans have been developing favorably for the Material Aid project in Palestine, to be centered in eight refugee-swollen villages located east and southeast of Tyre, Lebanon. The people to be served number over 12,000, about half of these being children below 15 years of age. All are Arab refugees from Palestine. It is planned that in early February the workers will begin with the program of distributing 13,200 pounds of clothing and bedding 2,200 pounds of mending materials, 1,500 pairs of shoes, and 60 cases of soap. These materials were shipped from the M.C.C. clothing centers in the United States, and are now in temporary storage provided by the League of Red Cross Societies, the agency with which the M.C.C. has arranged for this relief unit.

The objective in this relief effort is to help Arab refugees who are without adequate clothing and shelter. Many of these refugees have not yet received an issue of clothing from any relief agency, and are therefore in definite need. With only meager tents to provide shelter from the rain and cold weather, it is certain that this distribution of clothing and bedding will be timely. Workers in this Palestine relief project are to be Titus Lehman, serving as director, and G. R. and Sarah Gaeddert who are transferring from Europe.

Advance Note on Christmas Bundles

In past summers it has been difficult in some areas to secure winter clothing to pack in Goodwill Christmas Bundles. This advance information is therefore being released so that persons may secure certain items of clothing during this winter and early spring season. It is planned that the Christmas Bundles for 1950 are to have contents similar to those of recent years. Further announcement will be made later to give specific details on contents and packing.

Voluntary Service Notes

The "Polk Street House" was dedicated on Dec. 21 as a Christian Center for the young people participating in the Service Unit at Topeka State Hospital, Kansas. The House was made available for M.C.C. use by an interested individual. P. C. Hiebert and several local persons took part in the dedicatory service; also present were 18 Student Volunteers from Bethel College.

Applications are still being received for enrollment in the Voluntary Service orientation school scheduled for March 3 to 31. Persons interested in giving a year of service may apply.

A folder describing summer service opportunities is being published and will be available soon. Secure a copy from your pastor or from the M.C.C., Akron, Pennsylvania.

Jottings

—First Church, Beatrice, Nebraska: At a recent business meeting it was decided to start the construction of our new church about March first. Our pastor, Jacob T. Friesen, was re-elected for another three year term. The all-church choir is again rehearsing for a musical program to be given later in the spring. —Mrs. Abraham Jantzen, Corr.

—IDEAL MUTUAL AID: On March 13, 1947, a young Mennonite man was granted a loan of $1,000 to help him get started on the farm after his release from C.P.S. He was to repay this loan in three years. The loan was actually repaid in full one year before it was due. On January 20, 1950, the Board of Mutual Aid received a check of $300 from this individual to be used for the purpose of helping other young men in the way that he had been helped. This is indeed the Golden Rule in action. It is Mutual Aid working at its best.

—Allentown Church, Allentown, Pennsylvania: Our congregation participated in the Allentown Teaching Mission from January 19 through 26 with J. J. Plenert as our guest leader. The meetings included a program of self study, fellowship cultivation, and a plan for future enlargement. As part of this mission a city wide religious census was taken by thirty churches. Twenty-four people from our church made 500 calls. Eighty to ninety per cent of the city was covered by 1,400 canvassers, resulting in a responsibility list for our church of ninety-two people, composed of new contacts and inactive members.—Jean Shelly, Corr.

—Benjamin Ewert, widely known home mission worker of Canada, reports arriving home in Winnipeg. He was returning from the 75th anniversary of the Brudertal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas, his boyhood church home. He also visited relatives and friends in Kansas and Minnesota.

—First Church, Wadsworth, Ohio: A new high for Sunday school and church attendance was established January 29. The newly elected officers of both church and Sunday school were installed. The deacons decided on a series of evangelical services for Sunday evenings, running until Easter. Pastor Neuenschwander will bring the messages.—George McBride, Corr.

—Lorraine Avenue Church, Wichita, Kansas: Members of this church recently took eighty-five pounds of clothing, sixty-five pounds of soap grease, and ninety-eight pairs of repaired shoes to the Relief Center at North Newton, Kansas. Miss Marjorie Linscheid of North Newton spoke to the Friendship Circle at the last meeting telling of her experiences in Voluntary Service. Our congregation is grateful to our pastor, J. H. Langenwalter, who resigned last July, for serving us faithfully until February 19. Our new pastor, George S. Stoneback, will be installed Sunday, February 26 ta 7:30 P.M. Representatives and visitors from other churches will be very welcome.—Mrs. Waldo W. Leisy. Corr.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY — Thriving hardware business for sale in the community of Burns, Kansas. Write to Edwin Harms, Burns, Kansas, or J. W. Fretz, Board of Mutual Aid, North Newton, Kanas.

—Einsiedel Church, Hanston, Kansas: Our congregation purchased thirteen copies of the Handbook to the Mennonite Hymnary. Marie J. Rgeier, missionary from China, spoke here January 24. During the past year the Mission Society devoted one meeting to the study of our missionaries—their names, fields, problems and accomplishments. A box of German books was sent to Mexico. Seven comforters were tied and sent to relief in addition to 300 pounds of used clothing, much of which was first mended by the society. The Junior class with their teacher, Harry Albrecht, our pastor, John Lingenfelder, photographer, produced an original Christmas story entitled "It is More Blessed to Give." The script was written by the teacher. This production was reproduced and presented by Mr. Albrecht's wire recorder together with the fifteen colored slide pictures projected on the screen. This was followed by the showing of the film, "The Saviour is Born." Mrs. Wm. P. Schowalter, Corr.

—First Church, Nappanee, Indiana: "Seeing Christ with the Artists" was the theme of the evening program on January 15, 1950. The program made use of many of the new slides that have recently been acquired by the Christian Education Committee. An interesting and worthwhile service had been worked out, using of our young people. Orlin Frey, a senior at our seminary in Chicago and field secretary for the Middle District Conference Young People's Union, was our guest minister on the morning of January 22.

Topeka Church, Topeka, Indiana: Sunday evening, January 15, Peter Dyck of Saskatchewan, Canada, showed pictures and told of the work he and Mrs. Dyck did in helping Mennonite refugees to Paraguay. Lester Hostetler and wife of North Newton, Kansas, stopped en route east with their daughter and family, Pastor and Mrs. Loewen. Hostetler delivered the morning message on January 22. They will do a year's relief work in Berlin, Germany, under the M.C.C. Sunday evening, January 22, slides on our Mennonite heritage were shown.—Opal King, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Waka, Texas: On January 11, the annual business meeting was held. That same day the ladies gathered at the Herman Wiebe home to spend the day sewing for relief. At noon a covered dish dinner was enjoyed by both the men and the women. Records of the past year show better church and Sunday school attendance, an increase in membership—two by baptism and two by letter, a ladies aid was organized, C. E. was reorganized, material blessings were good and spiritual blessings were manifold. Such increases are indeed an encouragement to our small group.—Mrs. Herman Wiebe, Corr.

—First Church, Geary, Oklahoma: The year of 1949 ended with a watch-night service and the New Year, 1950, began in silence and meditation. The Lord has been gracious to us in the first month of this new year in giving us agreeable weather for the Sunday services. On Tuesday evening, January 3, we were blessed in having the Seminary Octet from Chicago in our midst. Miss Marie J. Regier, missionary to China, brought us the morning message on January 15. Our mid-week prayer services have been fairly well attended; we have been studying the Book of Amos during our study period in this year. We held our annual business meeting on the first of January. In one of the reports we heard that our church had made a net increase of 11 members during the year 1949. Our resident membership now stands at 67 and non-resident at 29, making a total of 96 members.

—Meadow Church, Colby, Kansas: On New Year's Eve the students home from the various schools gave an interesting program. On Sunday evening, January 2, Asher Dahl, a student at Park College, Chicago, related some of the experiences of a revival which took place on the campus and among the students. On January 8, Pastor and Mrs. W. H. Regier together with a mixed quartet drove to Vona, Colorado, to serve the church there on that day. On January 29 the Community C. E. had a special candlelight service to install the new C. E. officers for 1950.—Mrs. W. H. Regier, Corr.

—First Church, Paso Robles, California: The Lester Wuthrichs who are at present at Santa Barbara, California, attending Westmont College, told of their experiences in China. They have returned recently from China. The church held their annual business meeting January 22. All officers were reelected. The pastor, Ben Rahn, is teaching the Book of Romans in Bible study. Our church membership now stands at 88.—Mrs. Edwin Schroeder, Corr.

—Immanuel Church, Los Angeles, California: Glen Esch, the M.C.C. relief representative, was with us on Thursday, January 26. The Bethel College Quartet gave a program of sacred music on Monday, January 9. Catechetical instruction is being offered to believers in the Lord Jesus Christ as personal Saviour and who wish to follow the Lord in baptism. The class meets during the Sunday school hour with Pastor Alfred Regier as the instructor. Mr. and Mrs. Erwin Regier were married December 23 in the St. John Church, Pandora, Ohio. A reception was held in the Los Angeles Church on Friday, January 20, in their honor. Marvin Friesen has been employed as music director of the church. Richard Downs is in charge of the newly organized Sunday school orchestra.—Betty Kroeker, Corr.

BETHEL FOREIGN STUDENTS SERVE HIGH SCHOOL

Eleven foreign students, accompanied by J. Winfield Fretz, participated in the annual International Relations Conference at Clay Center High School last week. The two-day conference was thoroughly enjoyed by both the Bethel visitors and the high school students. According to a letter from Clay Center, the contribution made by J. Winfield Fretz and his students to better world understanding in the community was of inestimable value.

A three-college peace conference, sponsored by the Institute of International Relations, met on the Bethel College campus Saturday and Sunday, February 4 and 5.

Its theme was "Non-violent Techniques in Social Tension" and the speakers were Bayard Rustin, Negro secretary of the Fellowship of Reconciliation and a noted traveler, and Paul and Lois Harris, noted lecturers on international relations.

The Deep River Singers, famous Negro quartet, will appear February 17 for one of the Bethel College Memorial-Hall Series concerts. They will sing classics, forklore, and the ever-beloved Negro spirituals. The concert will be given in Memorial Hall, North Newton, at 8:00 P.M.

The Bethel College Graymaroons, within one week, defeated College of Emporia, McPherson College, and Friends University in basketball.

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

The ex-students of the Mennonite Collegiate Institute of Gretna, Manitoba held their annual re-union during week-end in Winnipeg and on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 29, the College doors were opened to them and the student body of C.M.B.C. enjoyed fellowship with them. A short program was rendered consisting of a few musical numbers and a discussion on the value of our own private Mennonite institutions of learning. Arnold J. Regier, president of C.M.B.C., also addressed the group.

Donnelly, pastor of the Young United Church of Winnipeg, was a guest speaker during chapel on January 31. He expressed his sincere interest in the work of the Canadian Mennonite Bible College as he had observed it here in the city from its beginning. He also addressed the students with a very inspirational message on "How to Live Life Abundantly."

On Friday evening, February 3, an exchange program was given at our sister college, the Mennonite Brethren Bible College. The program centered around the theme, "Witnessing for Christ." It consisted of several musical selections by the College Male Choir and Octette and a gospel dialogue, entitled, "The Witnesses." After the program a fellowship lunch was enjoyed together.

BRETHREN IN CHRIST LEADER ADDRESSES SEMINARY

Bishop E. J. Swalm, Duntroon, Ontario, moderator of the Brethren in Christ Church, was the chapel speaker on Friday, February 3. Bishop Swalm was in Chicago as one of the main speakers at Founders Week of Moody Bible Institute. He is widely known as an evangelist and leader of the non-resistant movement in the Brethren in Christ Church. He is chairman of the Conference of Historic Peace Churches of Canada which meets annually and which planned negotiations with the Canadian government during the second world war with reference to conscientious objectors. The address to the Seminary was entitled "The Conscientious Objector in Canada during the Second World War."

In addition to Founders' Week, considerable attention was given to the lectures by Paul D. Tillich, former German theological teacher who is now affiliated with Union Theological Seminary, New York. The substance of his messages were that today we are living in a time of despair; despair of the end and the despair of guilt. The Christian message, therefore, is a message of love which answers the despair of guilt by preaching the forgiveness of Jesus Christ and answers the despair of the end by the fact of the resurrection.

The Seminary Women's Fellowship met Friday evening, February 3, with Mrs. S. F. Pannabecker as hostess. Mrs. Harold White of Oak Park presented a Chinese play. Assisting hostesses were Lois Kreider and Frances Funk.

The all-school recreational party was held at the First Baptist Church gymnasium on Saturday, Feb. 4. A good time was had by all. The party featured badminton, volleyball, tumbling, baseball, Chinese checkers.

NATIONAL FIGURE TO SPEAK AT BLUFFTON

Secretay of Agriculture Charles F. Brannen will present the Brannan plan of farm price maintenance at the Rural Life Conference in Bluffton March 16-18. Someone will be secured to present the opposition to this plan. An attempt is being made to secure Senator Robert Taft to present his views on farm price supports.

J. N. Byler, director of relief personnel for the Mennonite Central Committee was the speaker for College Church Sunday evening, Feb. 5. He showed pictures of his recent tour of relief centers in Europe and Asia Minor. This was an open meeting participated in by people of the community.

Dr. and Mrs. Crous, visitors from Germany, spoke in three Mennonite churches in the West Liberty area Sunday, Feb. 5. They will appear in many other Mennonite churches in Ohio during their month at Bluffton.

The annual faculty reception for students was held Monday evening, Feb. 6, in the Musselman Library.

Freeman:
The Story of a Christian Junior College

by Rita Ann Graber

THE primary aim of Freeman Junior College is to serve its constituency. While it desires to preserve for the future the splendid ideals of a people, it by no means adheres to a narrow sectarianism. It believes that the ideal upon which all education must be based, if it is to be effective, is the ideal of Jesus. It believes that there should at all times be evident a wholesome Christian atmosphere on the campus.

The institution operates under a corporation consisting largely of members of the various Mennonite churches of South Dakota and surrounding states. This not only includes the General Conference churches, but also the various Mennonite branches such as the E.M.B.; K.M.B. and M.B. These are also represented in the student body, faculty, as well as on the board of trustees. While established primarily for the benefit of the young people of the Mennonite faith emphasizing the simple life, industry, the sanctity of the home, freedom of conscience, and Christian love as the guiding principle in all situations of life, the benefits and privileges of the College are nevertheless, heartily extended to the members of other denominations.

Enrollment and Courses

The present enrollment in Freeman Junior College is approximately 150. Freeman Junior College offers:

A junior college course with the Associate in Arts degree
A one- and two-year teacher-training courses of public instruction
An academy course
Two-year terminal-type college course
Two-year secretarial business course
General agricultural course
Farm mechanics and shop courses
Home making course
Pre-professional courses
Christian education courses

There are six buildings on the nine-acre campus. The plaque of Pioneer Hall was unveiled December 14, 1949 and by now the new auditorium-gymnasium is almost completed. Almost all the work was done by donated labor.

Chapel Services

Chapel services are held every morning during the school week and are designed to implement the daily schedule of educational concerns with religious motivation. The programs during this period are varied, including the visits of extramural speakers and music designed to inform and inspire. The Students' Association takes care of their business and programs during one chapel period a week. A chapel period a week is given over to the Y.M. and Y.W.C.A.'s to hold chapel among themselves and use the talent in their own group. The object of the Y.'s is to fulfill the meaning of its name "Young Men's and Women's Christian Association." Its deeper concern is to lift the Christian standards and create a deeper, meaningful Christian life among the students.

Student Organizations

The organization that has perhaps the greatest influence in the furtherance of the spiritual life of the student is the Christian Youth Volunteer Organization. The aims of this organization include the nourishing, cultivation, and deepening of the spiritual life of students. This organization aiso strives to awaken and lead others to a saving faith in Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour and to challenge the students to devote themselves, in united effort with human society, to extending the Kingdom of God throughout the world.

The members are Christians who have a desire to serve Christ and their fellow men in an active way. This year there are about 70 members.

This group meets monthly for a special program and worship service. Many of the activities are carried on outside of school. Programs are given bi-weekly in the Freeman and Marion Old People's Homes. Several times a month representatives of the C. Y. V. give programs in the churches of this community and other communities. Visitations are made to many of the sick, invalid, and aged of the community. Members of the C.Y.V. meet twice weekly for prayer meeting. The Christian Youth Volunteer Organization helps to prepare young people for leadership and full-time service.

The Importance of Music in Campus Life

Music has played a fundamentally important historical function in human life and culture. Freeman Junior College and Academy have always been serious promoters of music activities, both on and off campus, assuming a real leadership role in community activities in this respect.

The music department of Freeman Junior College is interested in the development of musicians who continue their music education toward a degree in this field. It also offers the opportunity to others, who do not wish to major in music, to study for its cultural value and thus to add to the development of personality and the happiness of living.

Both men's and women's ensembles appear at many school and community functions. The a cappella choir also gives many concerts in school and in the various churches. It again plans an extended tour in the spring of this year.

Speech, Physical Education and Student Publications

Both college and academy students are given opportunity for debate, oratory, extemporaneous and impromptu speaking, as well as other speech activities.

The college offers regular classes in physical education and development. It has rather a conservative athletic program which offers ample opportunity for interscholastic competition in softball, basketball, and track. Competition with other schools is made possible through the Inter-State Conference, which is made up of other church schools in this area.

Freeman Junior College has three publications throughout the school year. The Star is the Student Association's bi-weekly publication. The College Bulletin is published monthly and the Lark is the school annual.

The A Cappella Choir gives emphasis to the musical activity of the college.

These are but a few activities which help to make Freeman Junior College a progressive Christian school.

Comments by the Editor-- "Everyone a Minister"

YOU are a lay member of your church. Why the word 'lay' is used to describe you is hard to understand. We use the same word when we say a person doesn't do his job. Then we say you "lay down on your job." Saying "lay member of the church" has implications we don't like. We hope those implications don't describe you!

If you are called a "lay member" then there is another class of folk in the church who are called the "clergy." They are the ordained ministers who are authorized to officiate at the rites of the church, carry on the 'ministry' and do the pastoral work of the church. Lay members and clergy.

But, as a layman had you ever thought of yourself as a minister? Had you ever seen yourself as much of a minister as your pastor whom you call your minister? Had you ever seen your task as being one of the ministry?

If you will read Ephesians 4:11-12 (especially in the Revised Standard Version which is clearer), you will find that you, too, are a minister. For, according to Paul, the ministry is not a special gift given to one person in the church and not to another. The ministry is a task of the church and it is everyone's task. Paul lists special gifts as being: apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers. And these special gifts are "for the work of ministry."

The word 'minister' means 'to serve.' And every member of the church has the task of serving. By becoming a member of the church he accepts that task. We have dulled the richness of the word minister by changing it from its original form as a verb, making it a noun, designating one specific person in the church as the minister. Much richer is the original meaning of the word. Then your task of visiting the sick, giving comfort to the aged, reassuring the young, helping the needy and confused, doing voluntary service, teaching and the hosts of other tasks you do for the church, all those tasks represent your labors in the ministry "for building up the body of Christ" as Paul continues in these verses.

So, you see you are a minister, too! Because the early church of Paul's day saw themselves as ministers each and everyone of them, they had dynamic powers which we today admire and envy. By each of us being ministers, the church today can gain such power too. Talk this over among yourselves, see the nobility of your part in the kingdom of God. Go forth to minister.—E.L.

The California Crippled Children's Camp

Out in California, in the San Bernardino mountains, a unit of Summer Service Volunteers worked in a crippled children's camp last summer. This M.C.C. unit gives a report of their experiences in these articles.

1. History of the Camp

THE Crippled Children's Society of Los Angeles County started their first camping project in the summer of 1945. One hundred children from Los Angeles were taken to Tamarack Lodge at Big Bare Lake for a two week period. The staff of Mrs. Sarkes' regular camp was used with the addition of two supervisors of special camping.

In the summer of 1946 "Happy-Day Lodge" was rented for the summer. Handicapped counselors then predominated. A very restricted program was used with much sedentary activity such as crafts, ceramics, table games, and Indian stories and dramatics. About 40 children came for 10 days each making a total of 200 children for the summer. The program resembled a school schedule that year—everything organized with little free time given the children or staff.

In 1947 this camp was changed to "Camp Paivika" meaning "Dawn" in the Indian language of the tribe living in this area, the Kohelas. The program was much changed during this year. More choice of activity was given the camper. Games and activities more in the order of a normal camp were begun. Medical blanks with detailed recommendations were used to base activity restrictions. In 1948 the present site was leased on long term from the government. The buildings were being erected during camping period. That summer campers and staff were housed in tents or out in the open. A little portable kitchen was used. It was necessary to haul all water. Electric power was generated on the grounds. Lack of facilities prevented camper increase and less handicapped campers only were admitted.

Two weeks before the close of the 1948 camping season the "Easter Seal Lodge" was completed. To have hot water, adequate refrigeration, and a beautiful clean place in which to eat was a most enjoyable experience. Camping out doors proved to be healthful, and enjoyable too, and many children regretted moving into more comfortable cabins when they became ready for use.

The 1949 season brought camping on a larger scale and many more handicapped campers were admitted. Nine counties sent campers to Paivika, by special arrangement. Crippled Children Societies of these counties helped to defray the cost to the Society of their campers. Tendencies are toward having a complete non-ambulatory unit each period. This requires specialized equipment, staff and materials in order to make it a camping project and not a sanitarium.

2. Population of Camp Paviaka

by Marlene Schroeder

Camp Paivika is a camp that offers a most beautiful and picturesque out-of-doors. It is a place where one stands astounded and sees all the beauties of God's wonderful creation. Both campers and staff alike come here for a rich experience that will never be forgotten.

First, let us meet the people who are here to help and supervise these children. At the head of the staff is Miss Laufeld. Since she is one of the principals of a school for handicapped children at Los Angeles, she is a very capable director. Assisting her are two social workers. Also a physical therapist, a speech therapist, an occupational therapist, and a recreational leader. The rest of the staff members serve as counselors, attendants, matrons, and kitchen help. The majority of the staff members are either university students or people who have had special training with handicapped children. Still, we find them so many people with so many varied ideas.

Next let's meet the campers. One-hundred boys and girls come here every two weeks for an enjoyable vacation. Why? Because they find it impossible to adjust themselves to regular camps and therefore wish to participate in a camp such as this.

They are crippled children ranging in the ages from 6 to 41. Children? Yes, we find many campers very, very immature in their growth and adjustments whether it be mentally or otherwise.

A large majority of the children use either crutches or braces. Some, of course, are completely confined to the wheel chair. Approximately one-half of these are victims of cerebral palsy and a comparatively large group are polio cases. Many of them need special care and attention.

Then we have many who have speech difficulties and some who are deaf and dumb. Other diagnoses are blindness, rheumatic fever, asthma, epilepsy, obesity and allergies. In addition many are very emotionally disturbed which is often due to their home conditions. It is a real pity to read the case histories of some children. Many come from broken homes, from resentful homes, and some from no permanent home at all.

Regardless of their handicaps, they are happy and come here with great enthusiasm. It is surprising to note how these unfortunate people can face life with a smile as they do. Whether they be white, Negro, Mexican, Japanese, Indian—Catholic, Jew, or Protestant they work together with a willing and helpful spirit.

3. The Voluntary Service Group at Camp Paviaka

by George Unger

If in unity there is strength, certainly we can say that the Mennonite group at the Crippled Children's Camp is established on a firm foundation. We are co-centered in our Lord Jesus Christ. From this point, the further we branch out, the less we have in common. And we do differ. The only thing we have in common is that no two of us are alike.

Vede Mae, for example, possesses something which cannot be equalled. Anyone meeting her must needs observe the corners of her mouth being pulled back for a 17-tooth smile, vaguely suggesting something of what is inside. And when she says, "Would you take care of devotions tomorrow night, please?" Who could refuse?

Mary Lou likes to sing, or even draw pictures. And the dear little boy campers say, "We'll get all cleaned up and washed today, so we can say 'hello' to Mary Lou when she comes back tomorrow. Otherwise she won't take us out sketching."

Of course, there are others. Marlene Schroeder has taught school for three years and it makes all the difference. She likes to ice skate and tell us about it afterward. The other day Marlene was sitting at the table, all in convulsions at something she was reading. And which other girl would laugh over a letter she has just finished writing. But Marlene has a very good sense of humor, even though introspective.

Marguerite is friendly and has a German accent, but when she says, "No, you've had one aleady," that's when the little boys put their hands in their pockets again or else push down the remaining bits of sandwich given them in the mid-forenoon. She is an exchange student and has been very happy to be able to travel around the United States seeing and learning new things, as anyone would.

The foregoing represent the state of Kansas, with the exception of Marguerite Schnebele who is from Germany. There are two Pennsylvania representatives—Ann Fager, and Earl Hensel. Earl's newly found friends during his stay in Upland have almost given him that "California permanent" look in his eyes and this summer's work has profoundly influenced his life. He is seriously considering devoting his life to work among the crippled children. During the past eight weeks, he has been very active in crafts.

Ann hardly ever mentions her school teaching experience because that is "old stuff" to her. She likes to see that the cabin is neat and tidy, when her "little darlings" are indifferent. And always full of new ideas—doing things in just a little different way.

There is nothing more that George Unger can say, except maybe "yours truly."

4. The Location and Setting of the Camp

by Mary Lou Rich

Paivika in Indian means "the rising sun" and Camp Paivika on the top of one of the San Bernadino Mountains in southern California is a perfect spot for watching the sun rise. The winding road leading to the camp gives one the feeling of being on top of the world. Great, tall pines tower above the camp buildings which are in a large circle around a center knoll where campfire is held. The lodge is a large, well equipped building with a kitchen and large dining hall, office headquarters and a game and recreation room. The lodge fireplace is burning every evening throughout the summer. With the huge floor-to-ceiling windows on three sides of the room it makes a perfect setting for any kind of group get-together.

Four long, neat looking cabins and a number of tents house the camp population. In front of the lodge a fine swimming pool is in the process of construction. By next summer's camping period it will be put to use.

When the evening sun is setting and the sky takes on a pink glow, the mountains in the distance also reflect the pinkness of the sky. Silhouetted against the tall green pines the purple and pink mountains make a beautiful and breathtaking picture.

As darkness falls Camp Paivika has new beauty. On a clear night the lights of San Bernadino lie in a sparkling pattern far in the valley below. The stars in the heavens above seem to accent the lights in the valley.

Taps is heard as the night falls and the camp grows quiet until reveille is played and the morning sun throws light across each sleeping bag. Another new day on the mountain top at Camp Paivika has begun.

V. S. Looks Ahead

by Paul Peachy

VOLUNTARY SERVICE is a bit dazed. No, it isn't defeated or out of work or anything like that; in fact it looks back over the past year with deep gratitude and a sense of worthwhile accomplishment. But it is the complexity and magnitude of the task that baffles. Here are, on the one hand, a few hundred lives and scores of communities that have been touched in one way or another, who have felt something of the spirit that has also blessed our lives. But how shall the small spark that has been kindled be fanned into Christian life and action? And on a continent where literally millions of youth are inwardly hungry, morally frustrated, disillusioned, and searching, how can we use our small talent most effectively? How can the few dedicated American Mennonite youth and dollars minister and serve most meaningfully? How can the bias against Christianity be overcome in a "post-Christian" society?

Of course we are not responsible for the whole, but we have a share; we are "workers together with God" and and so our bit does have meaning, and we continue to serve in the capacity with which we have begun. At Espelkamp we will continue to build home and communities; in France we hope to share with Mennonite youth in our first Voluntary Service project there; in Germany we look forward to several short-term services throughout the year. Again we are awaiting the American student group who will help in the summer program.

In the future we hope to make our first experiment with the caravan which will be a team of American Mexican V.S. folks spending at least two weeks, working, living, and sharing with the young people in a community. That young Christians be challenged to give a positive expression of their faith and that non-Christians or those indifferent be drawn into this experience, is one of the most effective methods of witness that we could use in the present situation. But V.S. is not an end in itself. We are not building programs or organization, but proclaiming the Christian message and building the Kingdom of God in word and deed.

AFRICA. Racial intolerance is growing in South Africa. Evidence of this is found in the opening of the fifth private prison in the Orange Free State from which black convicts are hired out to farmers as cheap labor; in the request for separate hearses for black and white funerals in the Transvaal; and in the petitions from various groups of whites to the government that all condemned black murderers be hanged in public.

On February 26, the Methodist with 8½ million members and as many more constituents will call upon all Methodists who have not yet signed the commitment to total abstinence to do so as a service to God and country.

The Southern Baptists have also undertaken churchwide commitment to abstinence. In Virginia, all of the churches observed a joint Commitment Day on January 15, 1950.

PASADENA, CALIFORNIA. Pioneer Radio Evangelist Charles E. Fuller, originator and director of the Old Fashioned Revival Hour, celebrated twenty-five years of gospel broadcasting in January which has been designated as Anniversary Month on the program.—United Evangelical Action

A total of 8,397 men have thus far been granted classification as conscientious objectors under the 1948 draft law it is announced by the National Service Board for Religious Objectors. An agreement has been signed by the Roman Catholic Church and the Communist-dominated government in Warsaw for the rebuilding of thirty churches there which were damaged during the war. The agreement covers procedure and the extent of cooperation between civic and ecclesiastical authorities in the church reconstruction program. Religious News Service says that this is the first time since the beginning of the church-state conflict in Poland that the Catholic Church and the government have been able to enter into any formal agreement.—Gospel Herald

NEW YORK CITY.—Appointment of Mrs. Alfred Madison Chapman, of Washington Crossing, Pa., formerly of New York City, and Mrs. James M. Dolbey, of Cincinnati, O., to chairmanships in the United Council of Church Women, was announced here today by Mrs. Harper Sibley, Council president.

The United Council represents 10,000,000 church women of 83 Protestant denominations across the country.

BERLIN, GERMANY.—Church authorities in Berlin, Germany, have announced that 15 war damaged Protestant churches in that city were rebuilt and consecrated during 1949, bringing the total of restored Protestant churches in the city to 103. Seven of the rebuilt churches are located in the Western sectors, and the other 8 are in the Soviet-occupied part of Berlin. By the end of the war, 62 of the 192 Protestant churches in Berlin were totally destroyed, 61 severely damaged, and 67 had suffered minor destructions. Only 2 had remained untouched. — Watchman-Examiner

THE COMPASS OF TRUTH

By Charles A. Welles

One of the evidences of the divinity of Christ is the fact that when one has once learned of His teachings, the mind is never free again from the deep realization that here is truth, here is justice, here is the complete and final measurement of love. It is an amazing experience that millions have shared, an experience that no other prophet or teacher has been able to provoke. Whenever one is caught in a moment of indecision, when selfish interest or one's prejudices are tugging for recognition and we are gripped by doubt as to our direction,—if we let our inmost thoughts "ride free" for a moment we will feel the needle of conviction again pointing towards this incomparable figure and His all-encompassing words. Sometimes His words are too much for us,—too much for our frail, selfish earthbound minds,—but the figure and His words remain in our vision like a light burning on a hill.

Looking Toward Freeman

Nestled among the mountains high up in the Alps, a count built a little chapel for his subjects. It was very beautiful, artistic, and worshipful. Only one thing seemed to be missing—there were no lights, nor any provision for having any installed later. Visitors felt the beauty was marred by such an omission. As the shadows of evening fell and the day's work of the peasants was done, these visitors saw little lights appear on the mountain sides from above, from below, from everywhere, moving toward the little chapel. The peasants, men and women, young and old, were coming to evening prayers. Now the chapel was bright, the light through the windows streamed up the mountain sides and down into the valley. Every person had to bring his trimmed and lighted candle to make the little chapel the place of praise, thanksgiving and worship to God.

To help God make the General Conference sessions at Freeman in August accomplish what He wants to see done, we as organizations, committees, and individuals must everyone from every*where* bring our lighted candles of love, of intercession and sincere prayer, candles of loss of self for His sake, of life not hoarded but spent, of His hand laid on us to do His bidding, candles of completely consecrated hands, minds, and wills. May our candles be trimmed and lighted fit for the Master's use.

HOW SHALL CHRISTIANS THINK ABOUT CHINA? We have heard of some who think all Christians and missionaries should leave that country, now dominated by atheistic and materialistic communism. That would be like Jesus' situation if he had complied with the request to "come down from the cross." Of course, such a point of view would want nothing to do with the recognition of now Communist-dominated China. Some Christians notably the Quakers feel that the new China regime should be recognized; many others are uncertain; others feel that nothing should be done and lean in the direction of the support of the Nationalist Government of Chiang Kai Shek. Of course, as Christians, we cannot support an anti-Christian philosophy like communism; on the other hand, we dare not lose contact with the Chinese people who also need the witness of the gospel. We ought to confess our own failures in the crumbling of the Nationalist regime under Chiang. As the Christian Advocate put it:

"Chiang might have succeeded if the people had been ready for democracy, and the people might have been ready if there had been a hundred times as many missionaries as there were in the first years of the century, and there might have been more missionaries if there had been less interest in the commercial exploitation of China, even under the famed Open Door policy. But that would have been a different people and a different Generalissimo, able and ready to apply the peacemaking methods in the New Testament he loves."

Furthermore we should not be too hasty in judging the Chinese people in their quick change-over. We read the following words from the pen of F. Olin Stockwell of the Methodist Mission (also from the Christian Advocate), Chungking, China:

"The liberation of Chungking high-lighted the complete collapse of National Government morale and moral integrity, for the action of the leaders as well as the soldiers of the Chiang Kai-shek regime compounded fear and brutality in a tragic climax. . . .

"Not only were men and leaders alike fear-crazed, but they exhibited a brutality that is almost unbelievable. On the night of Nov. 29, 1949, the deathlike quiet of the city was punctuated with the blowing up of ammunition dumps and arsenals. Not until later did we learn that the blast that had shaken houses in Chungking and broken windows had wiped out from 3,000 to 5,000 people—coolies and other workmen at the arsenal who were given no warning of the plans.

"In addition to this act was the machine-gunning of between 300 and 400 political prisoners at the Tze-chi-keo concentration camp on the outskirts of Chungking. This camp was organized as a training center during the war, and Americans assisted Chinese in developing spy work against the Japanese. Since the war the secret agents of the central government have carried on at the same center, directing their activities against the Communists.

"Stories of brutality, of secret arrests and executions have been whispered about from time to time. On the night that the central government left Chungking, from 300 to 400 men, political prisoners held on charges of being Communists, were brutally machine-gunned and burned at this one center, their bodies thrown into ditches or left to rot in the open. Several escaped to tell the story.

"The order for this crime came straight from the top, signed by the Generalissimo himself. Unfortunately, because of America's former relation to this center, the crime is credited to America, as well as to the dying central government.

"In Methodist circles in America, Chiang Kai-shek is remembered as one who gave property and endowment for an orphanage at Chungking, where today there are 200 smiling children. In Chungking circles he will long be remembered as a cruel and despotic ruler who ordered the slaughter of more than 300 political prisoners in a last-minute gesture of helpless defiance."

All this leads in the direction of several conclusions. First, we have absolutely no sympathy with atheistic communism. Second, politically speaking, we should not forget that China was not a democracy before the Communists took over; furthermore in the matter of recognition of governments neither Christianity nor democracy has been a basis of recognition in the past. Third we should not forget that there may be some very valid reasons for the inexplainably quick turnover by the Chinese people as indicated above. And, finally, as Christians we are bound by our convictions, whether China is democatic or communistic, recognized politically or not, to accept the Chinese people with all other peoples of the earth as part of the world that "God so loved" and with that, the acceptance of our responsibility to serve them through our missionary and relief programs and whatever other channels God may open to us.

ONE OF THE NATION'S LEADING (and often highly criticized) periodicals, The Christian Century, recently carried out a nation wide poll of ministers to determine the twelve most effective churches in the country. One of these, the first to be reported on, is the Mount Olivet Lutheran Church in Minneapolis. The reporter who was sent out by the Century to write up the church asked some of its members what they thought was the secret of its greatness. One of these, a brilliant woman, formerly a member of another denomination and an accomplished musician who was pouring her life into Mount Olivet, said, "Here I find a spirit which dares to face life as it is. This church knows there is a hell and says so, and it knows the alternative to hell and proclaims it. At different times before coming here I was a member of four churches. Their breadth of intellectual interest appealed to me until I discovered that they had become so broad that they forgot the difference between right and wrong. They left me cold and I came to believe that they were spiritually dead and didn't know it. But here I find warm vitality, compelling love, faith that really saves. Why can't other churches be like this? Why can't God awaken them also?" More of our Mennonite churches ought to have this note of finality saturating their message as they seek to speak to the problems of this life as well as those of the life to come.

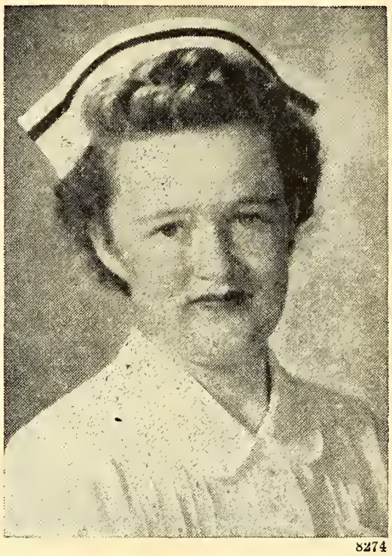
Sewa Bhawan Speaking

by Elenore Schmidt

SEWA BHAWAN means "House of Service." This past year we have been called to prove this over and over again. There have been times when we have despaired because of lack of time, staff, and equipment. But thanks be to God for each opportunity of service.

Serving the needs of the soul is a great part of the work. Those that come here are sick in body and sick in soul. Some one has ventured to say that ninety per cent of India's sickness is sin or the result of sin. Can we neglect so great a part of our Christian service? We cannot by-pass this challenge and command from our Lord the Great Physician to bring to these people the gospel of healing and peace.



Elenora M. Schmidt

Each morning patients who are not bed fast, and the friends and family of patients gather in the hospital court yard to hear the precious Word of God. Together with this testimony in song and word, Gospel portions and other religious literature is sold and distributed. Since last April, 461 Gospel portions, New Testaments, and other books have been sold. We have had opportunity to sell Bibles, but because Bibles in Hindi and Oriya are not available these opportunities were lost. But God's Word in Gospel portions does go out to villages which we may never reach in any other way.

A full time evangelist deals personally with patients and often the wife of Pastor J. Walters of Bethel Church comes to witness, to comfort and to give joy to many through her visits.

"But to Minister"

Not to be ministered unto but to minister is the supreme example left to us by our Saviour. This hospital was established so that we might follow in His steps—to serve the needs of the sick in this jungle area. Day after day crowds come for healing. Some come with real faith and go away healed and blessed. Others come doubting, seeking our help only after all else has failed. Needless to say, many of these go away unhelped and as restless as before. All in all those that have come to Sewa Bhawan as in-patients in 1949 reached the total of 2,130 with a daily average of 46.

In all there were 4,944 patients who came to our out-patient department throughout the year. Even though figures do not tell all, they help to give a picture of the extent of our work. In order to make these figures a little more personal I will tell you about one or two of these "numbers."

Kalab Ram came in for admission one morning. As soon as we saw him we knew he was very sick. After examination, Dr. Dester ordered him prepared for an emergency operation for strangled hernia. He was in a very weak condition and according to human reasoning he was beyond help. Soon the operation was under way and we all prayed that it might be successful. Those prayers were graciously answered for Kalap Ram made a miraculous recovery. Several months after he had left the hospital he came to pay us a visit. I did not recognize this strong, happy healthy young man.

A Miracle in Our Midst

Phulmoti Bai, a Chrisian of Jagdeeshpur, is the victim of tuberculosis of the spine. She came to us for admission. At first, as I came into her room I was overcome with pity for this crippled woman. But soon my pity was turned to praise. Here was a soul thanking God for each small blessing and fairly shining with joy. The months that she spent in the hospital she became an inspiration and a blessing to us all. If I was discouraged for any reason, I went to see Phulmoti and soon I was filled with the same praise that she radiated. After a long treatment she was discharged, wearing a body cast. The first time I went to see her in her home she was still in bed, the next time, a week or so later I found her in the garden watering her vegetables. At Christmas time she attended church and gave a special thank offering for all that God had done for her. Phulmoti is a miracle in our midst.

Those who serve include a number of humble illiterate folk who help keep the hospital and grounds clean. Those of the trained staff, besides the doctor are: two compounders, one of whom is also laboratory technician, two trained women nurses and one male nurse. Dr. Banwar has been with us a year—a busy year in which we have thanked God over and over again for sending us this consecrated Christian doctor. Compounder E. Sidh has worked here as compounder and laboratory technician for many years. In many ways he is Dr. Dester's right-hand man. He is also a stalwart Christian, carrying his full share of the burden as deacon in the Bethel Church. His wife, Lily Sidh, is one of the trained nurses on our staff. Com-

What Seminary Students Were Told

by Marie J. Regier

DURING the interval between Christmas and the New Year over four hundred students from eighty-eight seminaries scattered all over the United States and parts of Canada representing forty-two different denominations and at least seven different countries gathered in Rock Island, Illinois for the second triennial North American Inter-Seminary Conference.

There were three major emphases at the conference: (1) If the minister himself is not converted and has not experienced Christ he can not lead others there; (2) That in the true church every member is a missionary; in fact the proof that you are a Christian is simply the ability to lead others to Christ; (3) The importance of the prayer life. The main speakers set the tone of the conference and the discussion groups amplified what these had said. There was a special emphasis upon Bible study in the latter. Discussion groups met twice a day using an outline concerning the minister, his message and his task.

Aside from the small discussion groups there were special interest groups on Church Unity, Christian Missions at Home and Abroad, Church and Race, Church and Education, Personal Evangelism, Discipline of Personal Prayer, Counselling, The Minister's Ethical Dilemmas, and Women as Professional Workers. The delegates were free to make their choice though the one on prayer was so large that some had to be turned away to another group.

"There Are No Once-born Christians"

The main speaker of the conference was Bishop Stephen Neill, formerly of India now assistant secretary of the World Council of Churches. He symbolized the spirit of the conference. He dealt with the qualifications of a minister. First in the list he put familiarity with the experience of forgiveness of sin. As long as he is not forgiven himself, the minister cannot lead others. Too often the young minister is taken for granted. The same thing was emphasized by other speakers. Samuel Shoemaker of Calvary Church, New York, said that he had been a missionary to China for some time before someone found him who did not take him for granted and pointed out that he was trying to teach the Chinese what he did not possess himself. Bishop Neill said, "There are no once-born Christians. They are all twice-born of water and spirit." Shoemaker told of a young preacher who came to him saying that there was so little spiritual power in his life. He admitted that he did not believe in the deity of Christ. "Isn't it preposterous for any man to make the claims which Jesus made," Shoemaker asked him, "if they were not true? Either he intentionally tried to deceive people, or he suffered from terrible illusions, or else he spoke the truth." The young man realized his error and then and there turned his life over to Christ with the result that everything changed and his life became charged with spiritual power.

Forty Per Cent from the Gospels

Particularly impressive was the lecture on the minister's message. Bishop Neill emphasized first that he must preach the whole counsel of God and not only his pet subjects. It is a good thing to look over your sermons of one year and see how your texts are distributed. About forty per cent ought to come from the gospels, twenty-five from the epistles, and twenty-five from the Old Testament. That leaves ten per cent for special occasions. But in all this there should be one central theme and one only—Christ and Christ only. Shoemaker also emphasized this when he said, "Human wisdom has failed and always will fail. The only medicine is Christ and His cross."

Bishop Neill further emphasized the necessity of being so familiar with the Bible that the whole of Scripture would be in solution in the minister's mind so that even his sentences would be formed in the cadence of the Bible. People to-day do not understand the Bible and it is very important to re-interpret it to them.

A Matter of Life and Death

In the third place he should preach always a pounder Musa Gier has been with Sewa Bhawan for four years. He is rather a quiet young man but we like him for that very reason. Mrs. Ashin Tirkey is the trained nurse who has served as nurse in Sewa Bhawan longest. Besides being a good and faithful nurse, she is also a competent mother of three children.

Our two newest staff members are Mr. and Mrs. B. R. Singh—both trained nurses. Dresser G. L. Singh has never had formal training, but experience and willingness to work make him a valuable worker. He with a young helper, do all the dressings and treatments of men patients. Mr. Y. Kumar, who also has never had any formal training has proved himself again and again in his many years of service at Sewa Bhawan by being able to do most anything. Our registration clerk, Mr. H. Pandow was a primary school teacher in Mauhadih before he came to work for us. Phulo Bai and Bhagywati Bai are the two cleaning women who also serve as nurse aids. Other cleaning women who are employed from time to time clean the yards and wards. In God's sight each one, whether doctor, nurse compounder or lowly worker, contributes to the work of the Kingdom.

To Him whom we serve be given all the praise and glory for achievements during 1949. We thank Him for health, and trust Him to keep us—all of us who serve in Sewa Bhawan throughout 1950.

The Man Who Walked With God

by A. H. Schultz

"And Enoch walked with God, and he was not; for God took him." Genesis 5:24.

THIS text is taken from a chapter in Genesis that at first reading seems to convey no great spiritual truth since it speaks largely of death. Someone has called it the "Death-Bells Chapter" and rightly so, for the expression "and he died" appears eight times. Another has called it a chapter of "Mr. Nobodys" for it lists only the facts that these men were born, lived many years, reared a family and died!

In the midst of this sounding of "Death-Bells," we suddenly come across a glorious gem of God's truth in the life history of a man concerning whom we read: "that he walked with God." His name is Enoch. The death-bells are silent as Holy Writ opens up in these few statements to reveal a hero of faith. The testimony of this antediluvian saint challenges each of us to walk with God and live in His fellowship.

The Misery of Feeling Alone

This business of living is a very important issue. It isn't immaterial how we get through life! There is only one right way to live, and that is to live in God's fellowship: "for in Him we live, and move and have our being." To be living outside of God's fellowship means to be living "without Christ, being an alien from the commonwealth of Israel, and a stranger from the covenants of promise, having no hope and without God in this world." How miserable life can be when the consciousness and feeling of being entirely alone bears down upon you. Have you ever been in a big city with its teeming multitudes all around you, yet you felt yourself all alone? That is a strange feeling. Then how good it is to meet someone you know. Immediately the loneliness is gone and in its place there is a spirit of mutual kinship.

I shall never forget my first experience in the big city. My boyhood days had been spent on the northern prairies of Montana, thirty miles from the nearest railroad town. I was very much a country boy when stepping out into a new, unknown world. After several days of travel I arrived at the big city of Minneapolis. The country showed up all over the young fellow, clothing, expression, movements, and all. Never in my life had I been so lonely among so many people. Since my arrival was after nightfall, fear of what might happen to me if I should venture out on the street at night, caused me to lock my door and go to bed hungry. The next morning as I stepped out of my room a fellow-student met me, who introduced himself and soon put my fears and loneliness to flight. He was familiar with the city and so helped me get my bearings. His presence, help, and kindness created a real spirit of fellowship and friendship which has lasted a long time.

This experience suggests a spiritual parallel to my mind. Natural man in his sinful state is a stranger to God; an alien from the covenants of Promise. He is separated, cut off from God's fellowship. He is unable to guide his course and life aright. Life becomes a burden. But then the love and grace of God are made known in Jesus Christ; we anchor our faith in Him and sweet fellowship is established. Praise God, we are no longer strangers but fellow-citizens with the saints and of the household of God.

On God's Terms

Now let us see Enoch's experiences. In a simple, declarative statement we read: "and Enoch walked with God." This short sentence includes many things. It doesn't say that God walked with Enoch; no, Enoch walked with God. This presupposes that he had met God's conditions, for Amos 3:3 declares: "Can two walk together except they be agreed?" Let us note that God does not meet man on man's conditions. Man can never be acceptable in God's sight in his own righteousness, good works, morality, and character. Man must meet God on God's terms! Although Enoch was sinful by nature God's Word testifies that he walked with God. He had met God's requirements of faith, obedience, and a godly Life. D. L. Moody comments, "Enoch was one of the few men in the Bible against whom God had nothing to say."

Even though Enoch lived long before Christ, the Scriptures by implication indicate that his experiences were according to the pattern for believers of all time. He was in full agreement with God as to the place of meeting. Where do a Holy God and a guilty sinner meet? At the Mercy Seat—the Cross of Christ. By faith Enoch looked forward to the Redeemer. "No man cometh unto the Father but by Me" said Jesus. No man can be in fellowship with God unless he first comes by way of Calvary. The Old Testament saints looked forward to Christ's atoning Sacrifice on the Cross, and we who live after, look back to that same event for salvation. This is the only basis for fellowship with God.

Further, he was in agreement with God as to the goal. Walking with God he had the same objectives and purposes. Enoch lived to glorify God. "Ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit which are God's." The name Enoch means "dedicated". His life was dedicated to the doing of God's will. He was the Lord's servant, doing whatever he was commissioned to do. He testified, prophesied against the wickedness of the times as Jude 14 and 15 records. He did not compromise with the world!

It Costs Something

We note also that Enoch was in agreement with God as to the cost. It costs something to be a Christian. Has it cost you something? If not, you had better examine your profession. Satan hates God and His followers and will make it hard for the child of God. Yet Enoch would not be deceived. He lived in a wicked and sinful generation which was rapidly filling the cup of God's wrath which would be consummated in the great Flood. In this environment the man of faith pleased God. The test of a true walk with God comes, not when everything goes easy, but when the opposition and attacks of the Enemy are fierce. A true and living faith conquers every foe and wins with God. Living in God's fellowship assures victory.

Enoch's godly walk brought assurance and safety. He had this testimony that he (had) pleased God, according to Hebrews 11:5, and that is what counts. A child of God can live in calmness of soul even in the midst of a troubled world. I'm thankful that we can know here and now whether we're God's children or not, whether we are doing His will or not. The assurance of work well done and the approval of the Master, gives inward satisfaction and pleasure. So it was with Enoch. Only to have the Lord's fellowship and approval, that was all he sought for.

Our final thought is found in the striking statement of verse 24b. "He was not; for God took him." What happened to him? He was translated, taken directly to heaven; he was the first one not to die. The godly walk of the believer ends in eternal glory. Hallelujah! Whether Enoch's wife sent out a searching party for him when he did not return, I do not know. But this I know: "he was not for God took him." He had gone in person into the very presence of God—there to live forever in his Father's fellowship. That is the goal of all true believers! One of these days, I know not when, the Lord Jesus will come and call all His own out of this world. What a glorious moment that will be—to be caught up into the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, "and so shall we ever be with the Lord."

Are you living in God's fellowship?

Letters Are Needed

Hearings on Selective Service extension began January 20 before the House Armed Services Committee and key government figures including the Secretary of Defense, Secretary of State, General Bradley and General Collins have already testified for it.

The draft is not needed and, admitting this, the Army has indicated its desire for a law on the books with registration and classification functions required but not induction. This is dangerous and will establish the principle of peacetime conscription as well as give mobilization powers to the Army in peacetime, instead of letting them reside with Congress.

As Congressman Thomas J. Lane (D.) of Massachusetts said last May:

"Young men cannot poceed in full confidence with their educational programs or start up in business with this passive threat hanging over them. Under present conditions it is a nuisance law which serves no constructive purpose. It points the dagger of fear at every mother's heart."

It would be a serious mistake to continue the draft in peacetime just because the Army wants to establish the pinciple of peacetime conscription.

Furthermore, as an English educator put it, "Conscription is taking away men from where they are essential and putting them where they are useless." The real fight in Europe today is for men's loyalties and that will be determined much more by their economic security and their dedication to freedom than by the number under arms. Men forced into the army are men taken away from industrial and agricultural work needed for genuine economic recovery.

Will you write as many of the members of the House Armed Services Committee as you can, particularly those from your own state.

Home Mission Board Offers New Service

MISSION Conferences held in individual churches or in closely situated groups of churches have a tendency to impress upon the people the vastness of the fields and importance of mission work. Missions according to Scripture is basic for the virility and growth of the home church.

When a greater interest in and understanding of mission work has been aroused, increased support comes to the work. As a result, more workers can be sent out to preach the gospel of salvation; and consequently, the larger will be the number of converts to Jesus Christ. In order to impress our people that Home Missions is a vital part in this great program of missions and strengthens the "grass roots" of the home base, the Board of Home Missions offers to make available Home Mission workers wherever desired.

The Board has made provision in the 1950 budget to cover such travel expenses. It is hoped: (1.) District conference program committees will consider Home Mission workers when making up their program, as well as Foreign Mission workers. (2) Church groups when planning a mission conference will make room for Home Mission workers and (3.) If an individual church wants to have a mission conference that the Home Mission Board will be contacted for a worker or workers, through the secretary, A. J. Neuenschwander, 146 Beck Street, Wadsworth, Ohio.

This fact of the wider use of Home Mission workers will also have the salutary effect of making more consecrated and enthusiastic workers in their home fields.

Bequests

Recently the Board of Home Missions received, through the bequest of the late John and Frieda Regier, $6,000 from the sale of their farm that was willed to the Foreign and Home Mission Boards. We thank the Lord for such consecration and pray that He might stir others to make their will so that even when they have gone to their rest, their gift will aid in the spreading of the Cause of Christ.

Request

Some weeks ago a request came from Carl Walhsteadt, Home Mission Worker Barbourville, Kentucky, for one of their school girls who is a high school senior. She would like to attend a Bible institute. Pray that the Lord might provide for her so that she can carry out her plan of preparing for Christian work.

HELP FOR CITY CHURCHES

Leiffer, Murray H., The Effective City Church

New York: Abingdon-Cokesbury, 1949, 232pp. $2.75

It is generally said, that the Mennonites are a rural people. Yet, less than half of the members of the General Conference live on the farm. This means that more and more we are becoming an urban people and for that reason should make an effort to understand the influences of urbanization on American life.

Most people take both the church and the city for granted. In an uncritical fashion laymen and even ministers commonly accept their church and its program without asking whether it could be a stronger force in the community? Rarely indeed, do the lay or clerical leaders of a congregation ask themselves seriously, whether the church's program is adequate for the needs of the community and whether there are neglected groups in the community which it could serve. Leiffer, in his book The Effective City Church, which might more appropriately be entitled "Urban Sociology and the Church," assumes that the church has a unique message and that it performs a distinctive function in the community. Some churches, however, do not get the message across, whereas others do and hence are effective. Leiffer contends that this is possible only when the church finds its community, knows its people, and then readjusts its program so as to achieve maximum effectiveness in a particular situation. He argues that there is no final and perfect program and hence what is adequate and well-balanced in one community will not suffice in another.

Leiffer's book is divided into four sections. The first traces the rise and development of American cities and shows the effect of urban life on people and on the church. He follows this with a discussion of "Urban Communities and Their Churches" such as the downtown district and the "First Church," the blighted area and the institutional church, etc. The third section of the book is concerned with the general problems of the city church, and the fourth, with church planning in city and regional areas.

Leiffer's book is written largely from the point of view of a Protestant sociologist, nevertheless his book is of particular importance to denominational officials, ministers, lay church officials, and any others who are interested in the problems and future of our city churches. This book is easy to read, yet comprehensive in scope, and contains a surprising amount of information.

Many city churches are comparatively ineffective and the mortality rate is shockingly high. Therefore, Mennonites, being more adept in rural life, ought to study this account so as to enable them to build and plan wisely as the trend toward the cities goes on.—Harley J. Stucky.

MEN NONITE MEN FOR CHRIST

FINEST CHRISTMAS GIFT IN ADAMS COUNTY

LIND — The finest Christmas present in Adams county will to a 78-year-old woman who isn't as alone in this world as she often may feel.

Members of the Menno Mennonite church are giving a new home to one of their number, Mrs. Elizabeth Entz, known to practically everyone in the Lind area as "Auntie" Entz.

Willard Wiebe, pastor of the Menno Mennonite church, believes that friends will help Mrs. Entz move across West Third street, a block from the school building, into her new home this Saturday . . . .just in time for the elderly pioneer to spend Christmas Eve with a "gift" that typfiies the true spirit of Christmas far more than most.

It is a gift born completely of unselfishness and good will. Members of the church have contributed all of the labor and donated all the materials.

The house was finished last Friday, two weeks after it was started. Farmers drove from miles around to join townspeople in building it. An estimated $1200 was spent for materials—all of it donated.—taken from The Ritzville Journal-Times, Ritzville, Washington, Dec. 22, 1949.

Bluffton College Rural Life Conference

THE Eighth Annual Conference of the Rual Life Association, to be held at Bluffton College, Bluffton, Ohio, March 16, 17, 18, will have as its general theme "Building the Community."

Among resource persons who will be present as speakers or discusion leaders are Charles F. Brannan, U. S. Secretary of Agriculture; Baker Brownell, professor of philosophy at Northwestern University; Richard Eastman, field secretary for General Conference Friends in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois; Stanley Hamilton, executive secretary of the Rural Life Association; Russell Hoy, rural pastor, farmer, and chaplain of the Ohio State Grange; Carl R. Hutchinson, educational director of the Ohio Farm Bureau; I. W. Moomaw, former agricultural missionary to India, now educational secretary of Agricultural Missions, Inc., New York City; and William Stauffer, Mennonite minister and farmer, Sugarcreek, Ohio.

Lloyd Ramseyer, president of Bluffton College, will be chairman of the conference. One evening session will be devoted to the extremely important subject of farm price supports; a three-way panel discussion will be held with Secretary Charle Brannan presenting his plan. Allan Kline of Des Moines, Iowa, farmer and president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, has been invited to present his views in opposition to the Brannan plan; if he cannot appear, someone else will be invited to present the opposition. Jerry Voorhis of the Cooperative League in Chicago, has been invited to present the middle viewpoint, that of the consumer. Opportunity will be given to question the speakers.

One session of the conference will be devoted to rural education for high school and college age youth. Another feature of the gathering will be the showing of pictures of the Mennonite colony in Paraguay.

The Peace Club sponsored a peace institute on the campus Feb. 17 and 18. This is the second annual institute of this type. Speakers were C. J. Rempel, Melvin Gingerich, and J. N. Smucker.

A mission institute is being planned for April 14 to 16. While intended primarily for college students, others are invited. A number of Mennonite missionaries will participate on the program. The institute is financed through income from the Memorial Fund.

S. F. Pannabecker, president of Mennonite Biblical Seminary, was a campus visitor February 10 and 11. He spoke in chapel and interviewed prospective seminary students.

SEMINARY FEATURES VISUAL-AIDS SERIES

The first of a new series of programs of visual aids featuring the missionary and relief work of our students was started here Friday night when Marie Kroeker of Henderson, Nebraska, presented her pictures of Italy, and Ellen Harder of Whitewater, Kansas, showed hers of England and France. Both have served in relief work for the Mennonite Central Committee. This series will provide a way for all of our students to share their pictures with the Seminary student body.

Hanno Klassen, the German exchange student, made a profound contribution this Wednesday when he led the prayer meeting. His utter sincerity and deep faith provided the basis for a moving testimony prior to the period of prayer.

President S. F. Pannabecker visited Bluffton and Goshen Colleges in the interest of students who want to attend here next year.

A special evening lecture was presented at Bethany this week by R. H. Miller of Manchester College. His subject was "Prophets and Prophecy."

Elmer Ediger was scheduled to appear in the churches of the Henderson, Nebraska, community on February 12.

Don. E. Smucker was scheduled to address the chapel service on Tuesday, February 14 with the subject, "Reflections on my Experience as a Student."

Marvin J. Dirks gave a sacred solo concert recently at the Eighth Street Church, Goshen, Indiana.

Jottings

—Bergtal Church, Pawnee Rock, Kansas: Bible study is conducted by John E. Kaufman, our pastor, each Wednesday evening, after which choir practice follows, and also adult church membership instruction. The children are to meet during Bible study period for Bible stories and junior choir practices. On January 8, Miss Louise Deckert, R. N., sponsored by the C. E. showed colored slides of her work as supervisor of the hospital at La Plata, Puerto Rico, under the M.C.C. Miss Florine Dirks, missionary to Africa, recently brought the children's message in the morning and, in the evening, showed colored slides and told us more of her work of the past four years in Nigeria. Catechism class for the teen age young people is conducted by the pastor each Sunday during the Sunday school period.—Mrs. John K. Friesen, Corr.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: Seeing on colored slides the work of the Board of Home Missions as shown to us by A. J. Neuenschwander, now of Wadsworth, on January 29, gave us a greater vision of brotherhood with the Mennonites of South America. Activities going on recently among our organizations to serve the well-rounded church life are the following: The Golden-Rule Class made a donation to the Missionary Society to help a certain project. An enthusiastic choir, started last summer, continues to function each Sunday morning. A heartening number of ladies braved the icy roads to attend the all-day quilting and program of the Missionary Society on February 1. Approximately thirty tickets have been sold to our Christian Endeavorers to attend the annual Wayne County banquet held at Smithville Inn which is famous for its chicken dinners.—Mrs. Ivan Badertscher, Corr.

—Johannestal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: Harvey Jantz spoke in our church in the community pulpit exchange on the Sunday of February 5. He spoke on "Behold I set before you the open door."—Corr.

—Grace Church, Landsdale, Pennsylvania: The morning worship service, February 5, brought us a most challenging message on "A Yielded Life" by our pastor, J. J. Plenert, followed by the installation of the church officers, including Trustee, Henry Landes; Treasurer, Linwood Kulp; Secretary, Osmund Fretz; Fin. Sec., Ronald Philips, Corr. Sec., Mrs. George Greger; Pianists, Martha Fretz and Annabel Ebert. Leon Detweiler was then ordained as deacon. We as a congregation are holding up our new deacon in prayer, as he undertakes his duties. Tobias Rittenhouse observed his 81st birthday on Sunday. Attendance certificates were awarded in the Sunday school. Mrs. Samuel Gerhart and her son Wm. Gerhart have a record attendance of twenty years. Our Senior Deacon, Jacob Fretz, missed only while attending General Conference in California.—Cor.

—Bethesda Church, Marion, South Dakota: World Day of Prayer will be observed in our church. In the past months the Ladies Mission Society made bandages from old sheets and sent them to the Africa Mission Station. Now they packed 188 printed feed and white sacks, sixty-eight spools of thread, nineteen packages of needles, nine bed sheets, twenty yards print material, two pairs pillow cases, twenty-five dozens assorted buttons, seven baby blankets, twenty-three baby gowns made from outing flannel, overall, shirt, socks, and a few paper dress patterns which were all sent to the Mennonites in Paraguay. Also to the African missions eleven baby gowns, and eleven dark outing flannel baby blankets were sent. Now they are making comforters.—Corr.

—Gospel Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: The new year of 1950 has again come and with it also all the newly elected officers were installed, who are busy getting everything organized in the various departments. Eighteen members of the Sunday school received honorable mention for having missed only one Sunday and several with a perfect attendance. Two members, living out in the country, have a five year record of perfect attendance. They all expressed their thankfulness towards God for good health and joy of having had this blessed privilege. We Visit and Work in Volendam Colony, Paraguay

by Ozzie and Elaine Goering

IT is exactly four months ago that we left the M.C.C. home in Asuncion and went to the colony, Volendam, which was to be our new home and our place of work for several months. As we rode in the M.C.C. truck from the port Mbopicua, to the colony, many ideas of what to expect went through our minds. What are we to do here? How will the people act towards us? How do the people live, etc. We were soon to find out. On the way to the colony we found many of our Mennonites working on the road to the port. When we asked why they were doing this we were told that one day in about six months is set aside for the building and improvement of roads in and around the colony. We also discovered that mostly women were doing this work.

One Can Tell

First impressions are not always the lasting impressions, and so it was in this case too as we were first introduced to the colony. The road had been dusty and by the time we got settled we were pretty dirty, in fact we wondered if it ever rains in Paraguay. By this time we have found out differently. Everyone had told us how we might expect things but it is hard to imagine a place like that unless you have seen it yourself. To our surprise the colony looked better than the pictures that had been painted for us by others. Here in Volendam we found fifteen villages all within a matter of a few kilometers (a kilometer equals about five-eighths of a mile) of each other. The villages have all been cut out of forest because the land is better there than on the prairie. The homes are all made of a clay mixture (dirt and water), which is around them. The roofs are thatched with grass found on the prairie. As one visits the homes, one can tell which families have worked the hardest and which families have the most ingenuity by the way the homes have been arranged. In some places you visit, you will find nice white-washed walls with curtains hanging and things all nice and clean. In other places you go you will find just the four walls standing, no windows or anything. It usually turns out to be that those people who have lots of hope for the future and who want to get ahead are the ones with the nice white-washed homes and it is those who just seem to have lost all ambition and hope where you find the bare walls standing.

Cold Stares

At first the people were rather cold to our coming—at least it seemed so to us. As we walked down the street in Village No. 5 where we were to make our home, all the people seemed to meet us only with cold stares and no one seemed to say a word. We being new ourselves, felt like we had been thrown out into one of the world's uttermost regions without friends. However, we soon discovered that as soon as we said "Guten Tag," the people were only to glad to talk and to make friends with us. During the stay in Volendam, we have tried to use every possible excuse to get into as many of the homes as posible. It seems that they really appreciate it when someone from the North is willing to come into their homes and talk to them. As we go from house to house we always hear the same story over and over again of (1) the beautiful homes which they had in Russia before the Communist revolution, (2) the coming of the Communists into power and the fleeing of the families; mistreatment by the communists, (3) the flight through war and Germany. and (4) contact with the M.C.C. and resettlement in Paraguay. The story is interesting, but it is also tragic.

Man-power is Missing

Comments by the Editor-- "Now is the Time to Plan Your Summer"

Now is the time for you to plan for your summer. If you have a dash for adventure and a desire to make good use of your summer, you can find many things you can do, either at home or in other communities. Your first thought is perhaps to earn some money so that you can go to school. You may have plenty of work to do at home, and the family farm, or in the family business. Such an experience is of great value and, the more of it we can have, the better. You may be in search of a job and to find work and do it well is of great value, too.

There is real adventure in working at home. You can make it even greater adventure by what you do during your free hours. Your church group, your C. E., or youth fellowship may have some project they want to undertake. They may have parties and activities which would fill those free hours. They may have some special service that they do for needy people in the community. By doing those things, you can have real adventure.

We don't de-emphasize the possibilities at home by also suggesting service units of the M. C. C. and the General Conference. You may not feel financially able to give your summer in service. That is the chief barrier blocking volunteers from actually going out. That is important, but we do need to weigh our decision by other factors as well as by the money factor. Too often, our decisions are made solely on the basis of finances and not as much on the basis of opportunity and growth and experience.

Testimony after testimony comes back saying that the greatest experience of growth and new insight has come through Voluntary Service. For that, it is worth sacrifice!—E. L.

things that comes to us is that usually a father or older son, mother or daughter is missing from the family circle. Many of these have not been heard from for years and there always remains that hope that they might be alive yet. It is the man-power that is missing in Volendam. You will find the women working as hard as the men. We think that is one reason why you will find so many more women in the hospital at Volendam than men. The day in Volendam begins with the sun and ends when the sun goes down. At the present time it is summer here in Paraguay and so you will find the colony stirring at five o'clock in the morning. And in the evening you will find it quite difficult to do much visiting after eight o'clock. Also, in our colony we have a very fine hospital. We have no full-time doctor, however, we have access to the doctor in Friesland, and he comes to Volendam one week a month. When the doctor is not around we have a very fine substitute, a Sister Betty, who came with the first Volendam group.

One Begins to Wonder

Oftimes one gets discouraged when talking with people, and they seem to have lost all hope for the future and seem to think that they can't make a living here in Paraguay. However, we must not forget the background of these people. In their flight from the Russians they went through much and often they had to avoid the truth in order to save themselves. Here they came to a land of an entirely different nature, a land of a different climate, different customs, different people, and different language. When one thinks of these things, one begins to wonder that the people are as good as they are, and that they still have the hope and ambition for the future as they have. Those who have lost that hope are those young men who have served in the armed forces in Europe. Many of these young men did not come here because of religious convictions and they are dissatisfied because the going is somewhat hard. Inspite of the fact that there are a few that are dissatisfied, one must remember that they are human beings just like our Mennonites in the U. S. A. and Canada, and whenever you put 1,800 people together you cannot satisfy everyone.

One Has to Marvel

As a whole, most of the people in Volendam appreciate everything that is done for them from the North. They are willing to work hard and they try to make the place where they are, a beautiful place in which to live. As one goes through the different villages one has to marvel at the work that has been done by these people in two years time. They have cleared forest, built homes, planted flowers and trees in the short time of only two years. One can tell that these people have worked hard, and if they continue in that spirit, one wonders what Volendam will be like in five years from now.

Please do not forget these friends of yours here in Paraguay. They need your help and your support in gifts and prayers. God has brought these people this far and we are certain that He will not forget them now. As we go about our work in Volendam it seems to us that we have done nothing. It is only with the help of God and your prayers that our work is not in vain.

Work with Underpriviledged Children in Washington

by Ethel Jahnke

NOT far from the busy streets of the nation's capital at the edge of the quaint and historic Georgetown, are sheltered one hundred or more dependent and homeless children. To some youngsters it is a haven of happiness; to others, an experience of frustration and bewilderment.

To the interested observer, conditions which bring the children to the Industrial Home School Annex are full of pathos and tragedy. A young mother and two children come in. The mother's drawn face looks prematurely old. She has come to the end of her resources, but life must go on. Tearfully she turns away leaving the children behind. Her aim is to find work, rent an apartment, eventually have her children at home again. And where is Daddy? Perhaps he is a victim of alcoholism, or maybe he has deserted his family.

Took Turns Sleeping in the One Bed

On the other hand, here is a boy of eleven or twelve years. His eyes light up as he tells how happy he is since he came to the Annex "Just think," he says, "I have a bed to myself and three whole meals each day. Before I came here our whole family of twelve children and my mother lived in one room. We had only one bed, and we took turns sleeping in it. I hope I can stay here until I'm old enough to work for myself." Yes, these conditions exist in Washington! Children of prostitutes, abandoned children, orphans, offspring of delinquent parents—these are the cases which stream into this institution.

In July, 1948, the Annex was opened to temporarily meet the needs of these homeless children. It is not intended to be a permanent home, but rather a place to stay until the Welfare Board can arrange for the child to return to his parents, be placed in an orphanage or in a foster home. The institution is interracial and the children range in ages from two months to thirteen years.

Rub My Other Back Too

The bathing is over. What fun to have three or four in the tub at the same time! Just who is wetter, the children or you, is a good question. After prayer, the task of tucking them in so they will stay begins. Three-year-old Charles, after having been put into bed several times, looks up with his expressive eyes and says, "Help me to pray to be a good boy." Bedtime seems to be the time they long for mother. Often a back-rub will sooth a child so that he will fall asleep: One evening a little one who couldn't go to sleep looked up and said, "Rub my back." Soon he turned over and said, "Rub my other back, too."

"Are we going to have Bible school down by the stream today?" eager voices inquire every morning. One of our classes is held by a little stream. After teaching the children songs, Bible stories, and Scripture verses, they play and wade in the water.

Can You Yield?

Our unit has much to remember about the Annex. As a group of inexperienced "VS'ers" we recall entertaining the children, working in the nursery, redecorating rooms, sewing, painting, remedial teaching, garden, teaching Bible School, and evenings of bathing the children and tucking them in bed. We remember too, the sweet face of a child begging, "Please come in my room and pray with me."

The needs at the Annex will challenge the best that you can give—willingness to be used where you're needed, to relieve the thirst for love and belonging. Can you spend yourself for the sake of little children? Can you yield to the tug of little arms—maybe brown, maybe white—that reach up around you?

Service with Delaware Handicapped Children

by Ethel Reeser

A relatively unique type of service was offered to a number of the M.C.C. group who arrived at Farmhurst, Delaware in June, 1949, to work in state hospital for the mentally ill. As one of the six girls who served in this unexpected capacity, I would like to describe some of the features of our work with the aim of giving an insight to those who may be interested when another such proposition is made.

The call came from the Governor Bacon Health Center, established less than one year ago in a former army fort along the historic and picturesque Delaware River near Delaware City.

And what is unique about this place? In an atmosphere which once echoed with the din of military training, relief is given to physical pain and mental frustration and fear. But the Center is unusual in that it deals almost exclusively in preventative psychiatry, and as such, it closely focuses its attention upon childhood.

For this purpose, a group of cottages have been adapted to accommodate children in a home-like atmosphere. Here, both normal children from underprivileged homes and those from normal homes who have serious personality maladjustments, are assisted toward normal living under the supervision of a housemother who is chosen because of her ability in that respect.

A ward has also been established for those children who are crippled by rheumatism, heart disease, spastic orders and the like. Here, children are given an understanding of their handicaps and are taught, wherever possible, to surmount them, and to prepare themselves to lead a useful, happy life.

To this end, we helped. Ours was the joy of seeing rows of bright faces above rows of wheel chairs and crippled feet, above oddly-shaped and under-developed bodies. Ours was the satisfaction of holding a cup of cold water to parched lips on the hot, summer days, and of planting in new, young soil, the seed of hope in eternal things.

sense of urgency. "If you do not think that the gospel is a matter of life and death you have no business preaching. But in order to bring this gospel to the people he must know their every day life, what they think and feel. Only then will there be both the warp and the woof in his preaching. What you say is not as important as what the people understand. It is not just the word that the preacher speaks that is important but the bells that he starts ringing in their lives. The message must make men feel at home and at ease on the one hand. It must answer to their need, but on the other it must shock and wound them too. Your preaching must also make people hate you. But never wound people over trival matters. When it comes to sin in people's lives you dare not mince your words. It may be your duty to empty the churches. Unless you are going to preach words of eternal life, don't preach at all."

There is a terrible finality about words like these when spoken by a man like Bishop Neill whose whole personality breathes love and gentleness. They were much more effective than if they had been spoken by a man of a stern mien. They conveyed iron conviction. One young man said to me afterwards, "This conference has shaken me to the foundation of my being. I realize that I am not ready to go into the ministry. I am going away for two years. I think I will come back, but at present I am not sure whether I really want to give my life to God or whether I want to live for myself. I will need the prayers of others." In one of the special interest groups one of the students asked Shoemaker how it were possible to bring a person who did not feel his need of salvation to this realization. Shoemaker suggested that he get him in touch with someone who had a very vital experience. "But I know a man at this conference who is practically an atheist and he listens to Bishop Neill's messages day after day and yet they have no effect on him," the young man countered. "I would not be too hasty in my judgment," Shoemakers replied, "Bishop Neill will probably act as a depth bomb to him."

GREAT BRITAIN.—Toyohiko Kagawa, Japanese Christian leader, made his first public appearance in London following his arrival from Japan for a six-months' evangelistic tour of the British Isles.

In his address at a press luncheon on January 3, Kagawa paid tribute to General Douglas MacArthur, declaring that the Japanese people had "almost forgotten that MacArthur was an American and represented a conquering military force." He described the American occupation of Japan as "the most peaceful occupation of all time."

"Today in Japan," Kagawa asserted, "the emperor is a man, not a god. There is freedom of speech and worship, and workers are able freely to organize themselves."—Ecumenical Courier

ENGLAND — A young Methodist minister, Rev. Roland Gibbins, has stirred Durham saloon keepers to appeal to the police for protection. In the course of a "Back to Church" campaign, Mr. Gibbins had invaded the pubs on Saturday night inviting people to his Sunday services. The pub keeps asked that he be banned "as he is likely to cause disorder, and also interferes with our business."—Ecumenical Courier

NETHERLANDS—An appeal for all possible aid to the United States of Indonesia was made at the Hague by the Council of the General Synod CSA of the Netherlands Reformed Church in a "Summons to Prayer" sent to Reformed congregations throughout the country on January 3, 1950.

The Council urged church members to "leave behind all discord of views and show unequivocally that the real well-being of the Indonesian peoples is close to our hearts."

"We must resist the temptation to remain sulkily aloof, or, what would be worse, observing spitefully the difficulties the young State must face in the first period," the Council declared. "We are convinced the Lord calls us to serve the Indonesian peoples in a new relationship."—Ecumenical Courier

NEW York—Cooperation achieved by Protestants in Europe shortly after the war is being reduced by a new upsurge of denominationalism, Dr. J. Hutchinson Cockburn, former moderator of the Church of Scotland, told a meeting of the Friends of the World Council of Churches here.

He said that serious post-war economic and social problems had driven European churches "to a certain measure of cooperation," which was "in no sense ecumenical."

Now, he explained, "the recent tendency has been towards a denominational approach to church work."—Covenant Weekly

KENTUCKY—Two years ago, Attorney Henry M. Johnson, president of the Kentucky Sunday School Association, and Dr. Sam Morris, Texas evangelist, filed suit in Kentucky, alleging that the Columbia Broadcasting System had refused to sell time for temperance, abstinence, and welfare interests. The suit asked for $33,000,000 damages. On the motion of the plaintiffs, Federal Judge Roy Shellbourne dismissed the suit. Mr. Johnson said: "Nine tenths of what we wanted was accomplished when the network and affiliated stations agreed to sell choice radio time." He hailed the agreement as "a great victory for the Drys."—Watchman-Examiner

Editorials

REVIVALS ARE MAKING THE HEADLINES AND THE RADIO WAVES. As we have stated before, we feel this is a definite answer to the prayer of thousands for a mighty moving of the Spirit of God in America. This should be a real encouragement to the Church. There is one point however where this movement stops short and can, in the end, hurt the church as much as help it. That is at the point of its failure to deal drastically with the complex social sins of our day as well as the personal sins. In much of this evangelistic effort nothing is being said about the now universally accepted mass international murder, race hatred, economic exploitation—all of which are sending the souls of men to an eternity with Christ. Why don't we hear reports of confessions of having killed people in war either by direct participation or by furnishing the weapons? Why don't we hear reports of people who are landlords confessing the fact that they have extracted unjust rents? Why don't we hear confessions of people who know they have been guilty of hatred of Jews, Negroes, Mexicans, Japanese, Germans, or Russians? Why haven't we heard of confessions of people who have broken up the happiness of a family by grudge and hatred? Of one recent convert we read that he deplored his former drinking and swearing; perhaps he even stopped smoking. This is good as far as it goes, and let us thank God for it! This is needed to clear the ground for a more radical consecration. But if we stop there the world will laugh at us. One of the reasons why certain elements in our country welcome this type of extreme other-worldly approach is that it completely and systematically ignores some of the wholesale sins of mass hatred and economic exploitation upon which those elements thrive. Our plea then is: let's not put the brakes upon the present movement of the spirit; let's pray for more of it; and, let's put teeth into it! It just doesn't make sense to the world when we save the soul of a young man and encourage him to win others and in the meantime pray for God's blessing upon him while the government puts a gun in his hand with which he is to wipe out other precious souls. It doesn't make sense to the world when a soul is saved, while the feeling of that soul toward another individual, just as much in need of redemption, is one of bitter hatred because he happens to be of another political or racial background. Those who are convinced that believing in the Lord Jesus Christ is willingness to follow Him in all relationships of life have a tremendous evangelistic opportunity and responsibility at the present time. We dare not succumb to the temptation of ignoring evangelism just because it may be misused by some. It is ours to "preach Christ and him crucified" making the applications down the whole gamut of life. Our message should press for a verdict on the basis of a clear knowledge of the implications of being a Christian for all of life. We betray people if we ask for a verdict and invite them to become a Christian before we have shown them what it will cost. Dare we yield to the temptation of trying for large statistics about souls converted by keeping the demands of Christ down to a minimum?

FOR ONCE ALL PROTESTANTS SEEM TO BE UNITED on an issue. That is, that the embassy to the Vatican in Rome must not continue. Even United Evangelical Action, which usually frowns on any political pressures or any kind of "dabbling in politics" by the church encourages its readers to wire or write to the President immediately due to the tremendous pressure which is undoubtedly being brought to bear on the President by the Roman Catholic hierarchy to continue the contact with the Vatican by naming a successor to Myron C. Taylor who recently resigned. By all means write: the address, The Honorable Harry S. Truman, President of the United States, White House, Washington, D. C. This flagrant break in our traditional policy of separation of Church and State must stop. And while you are writing, don't forget about informing your Congressmen and the House Armed Services Committee about your opposition to the continuance of Selective service (see last week's MENNONITE, p. 120).—J.J.E.

There are before the present Congress bills to prohibit transportation in interstate commerce of liquor advertising and to stop its broadcasting over the air. The Langer Bill (S. 1847) in the Senate and the Bryson Bill (H. R. 2428) in the House. Hearings on these bills were set for January 12 and 13, 1950. Since the future life and prosperity of the liquor traffic depends very largely on advertising, making their products popular, you may be sure they will leave no stone unturned to defeat these bills. They have a good chance of passing, however, if a large number of people write personal letters and send telegrams, resolutions and petitions from congregations and other organizations urging their passage. These should be sent at once to the U. S. Senator and Representative from your district, c/o Senate or House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

The crucifixion of Christ is an event which occurred once for all. And yet it is an event which is constantly recurring with every persecution, inasmuch as the Christian is joined with Christ. A great world church teaches the doctrine that at every communion the body of the Lord Jesus is offered again in sacrifice to God. But the body of Christ is again offered in a real and living sense only with the suffering of His saints. Paul participated in the fellowship of Christ's sufferings when he endured persecution and hardship for the cause of the Gospel.—Gospel Herald

There are not differences of honor within the Christian army, but there are differences of function. That is why we are not to be called, "Rabbi, Rabbi," and why we must let no man call us "Father" when One is our Father, as Jesus said, but there can be a division of labor without any difference of higher and lower. One of our worst heresies has been the introduction of differences of honor along with division of labor, but this only demonstates a radical inability to understand the revoluntionary significance of the Gospel.—Elton Trueblood

Meaningful Music for Lent

by Marvin Dirks

"WHEN I Survey the Wondrous Cross" is a hymn whose title and content could well serve as the theme for all of our Lenten or Passion Week music. The Lenten season is a time of heart searching and of meditation on the mercy and goodness of God toward us. It is a time of bringing to our special attention the great love of the Father as shown by the gift of His only Son, our Lord, who suffered and died on a cross for our redemption.

As the Christ so freely gave Himself for us so also should we be continually giving ourselves in His name for others, to the end that we may glorify God. So also we may employ music to glorify God and at the same time bring blessing to men. In a sense we may present our music as a sacrifice "of a sweet smelling savor" to the Almighty.

Our Choice Reflects Our Theology

In choosing music for the Lenten season or any season it is well to remember that a fair idea of what we think of God may be gained from the music we offer each Sunday in our churches. During the Lenten season we must be especially careful that the music we offer be productive of no worldly suggestion or 'lightness.'

8439

Good choral music for Lent is not difficult to find. Davison, an authority on music at Harvard University, has estimated that not less than eighty per cent of the greatest church music centers on the salvation of man through the death on the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The Larger Choral Groups

The larger choral groups form an especially good medium of musical expression during this season. There is a wide choice of cantatas, anthems, chorales and spirituals available. For adults, Stainer's "Crucifixion" can be reverently performed with a depth of feeling and a richness of expression far surpassing most other works. Other cantatas heard during the Lent or Easter Seasons are Du Bois' great work the "Seven Last Words"; and Gauls' "The Son of Man"; selections from "The Messiah" by Handel; and, Bach's "St. Matthew's Passion." The last named can, however, be successfully presented only by the most advanced choir with capable soloists. Selections from all of the above can be secured and rendered according to the ability and experience of our individual choirs. For a more complete list of Lenten, Passion, and Easter cantatas anyone interested should write to a good music house such as Carl Fisher Inc. or Lyon & Healy in Chicago.

Anthems

Some of the most familiar Lenten numbers from the above Cantatas are: "God So Loved the World" by Stainer; "O Sacred Head" (The Passion Chorale) by Bach (there are a number of good arrangements of this varying in difficulty); "Surely He Hath Borne our Griefs" by Handel or by Graun; and "And With His Stripes We are Healed" by Handel. These could very well be presented more often than they are apart from the larger works.

Separate Anthems and Spirituals

Other separate anthems which have proved very effective are: "Jesus, Our Lord, We Adore Thee" by Will James, "Rise, My Soul, To Watch and Pray" by Grauer and "Jesus' Cross, the Death and Pain" by Gumpeltzhaimer. The latter song was a hymn of the Bohemian Brethren—there is a good choral edition by Walter Buszin.

For those who are interested in them, there is a variety of spirituals available which are well adapted to the Lenten season where they are presented in a devotional atmosphere. Two examples of this group are "Were You There" by H. T. Burleigh and "All Mah Sins Been Taken Away" arranged by Robert Hernried. I have actually hesitated naming the above separate anthems because of the danger of presenting them as the "best." Actually there are many others of equal or even better quality depending on our individual use of and experience with them. I am confident, however, that the ones named will bring blessing to those who experience their presentation either as singers or listeners.

Not less than eighty per cent of the greatest church music centers on the salvation of man through the death on the cross of the Lord Jesus Christ.

The Conditions of Discipleship

by George W. Phillips

" 'If any one comes to me and does not hate his own father and mother and wife and children and brothers and sisters, yes, and even his own life, he cannot be my disciple. Whoever does not bear his own cross and come after me, cannot be my disciple .... So therefore, whoever of you does not renounce all that he has cannot be my disciple.' " (R.S.V.)

THERE is no passage of Scripture that states more pointedly than the one given above what are the conditions of true discipleship Do we as Brethren (or Mennonites), today, have the spiritual genius to give this passage of Scripture the place it demands in our Christian experience? I doubt it.

The church itself has become too much institutionalized, and our personal religion has become too much professionalized to experience fully what Christ is telling us here. We are afflicted with spiritual anemia. We have so little real spiritual power. Our spiritual power is not comparable to our extensive church machinery. We have the outward forms of the Christian faith, but the inner content is too unreal. To be a follower of Christ involves an absolute commitment and a complete change of life.

Our spiritual power is not comparable to our extensive church machinery.

On this occasion Jesus was being followed by great multitudes. But Jesus was never enamored by numbers. These people were following Jesus far too easily; so he thrusts a challenge at them. He would sift the motley crowd. The way of salvation is simple enough, but it is not easy. Jesus accepts only on terms of life commitment. Church membership needs to be made hard and challenging. We can enter only by the narrow gate, and we must walk the narrow way.

A significant expression in this paragraph is the thrice repeated one, "He cannot be my disciple." He does not say merely that one cannot be a good disciple, but one cannot be a disciple at all. It behooves us then to find out what bars us from discipleship. The test is an absolute one. There is no way by which we can set up our own standard of righteousness. To be Christian means that life must be Christ centered. He must be supreme. The kingdom must be central. Everything else is secondary. Most of us are just fooling ourselves. We are playing at religion. We are enamored by the many wheels going round in our church activity, without ever knowing a life of renunciation or surrender.

Jesus said, "If any man cometh unto me and hateth not his own father, and mother and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple." Or as He put it elsewhere. "He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me." Jesus must come first. John Bunyan went to jail for his Christian convictions even though he had to leave behind his own blind child.

Jesus also said, "Whosoever doth not bear his own cross and come after me cannot be my disciple." This means voluntarily to accept sacrifice and to suffer for the kingdom's sake. It means not merely self-denial, but denial of self. There is a vast difference. This text bears down hard. If we would bear the cross as the early disciples did and as Jesus demands of us, we too could turn the world upside down. The cross stands at the very heart of true discipleship. Therefore, Jesus says, "Count the cost."

Jesus, then, approaches it the third time by saying, "Whosoever he be of you that renounceth not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple." This expression really stuns. The self must be entirely subservient. The temporal self-ambition, purely earthly interests, must be relegated. Renunciation is necessary to enter the narrow gate that leads to life It is not sin, here, that Jesus is talking about; it is the renunciation of other so-called legitimate things. The chief trouble is not that we do not live good lives, but that we have failed in renunciation— in self-surrender.

The only kind of life that there can be in Christ Jesus is the surrendered life. Without surrender there can be no vital experience with Christ and no triumphant life. Leslie D. Weatherhead states in one of his books that in his opinion ninety per cent of church members have never had a vital experience of Christ. Then we wonder why miracles do not happen and why the church is so powerless. The factors and experience of Pentecost are still available. The failure is ours. May we meditate on this Scripture until Christ's message is actually understood and until it becomes personal to each of us.

From the Mission Front

An "On the Scene" Experience

by Andrew Shelly

FORTY-SEVEN hours with our Indian missions in Oklahoma! That was my privilege recently. During that time I visited all the churches, and talked to a number of Indians in the various communities. While it has been my practice to try to keep in as close touch as possible with all our mission work, this "on the scene" experience has been something completely unique.

Upon arrival at Clinton, Arthur Friesen, one of our missionaries, called for me and we proceeded at once to Hamman, some 35 miles away. Every Tuesday afternoon he has a meeting there. As one travels over the roads one has inevitable "up and downs." The Indians we visited live in a camp comprising about 125 people. They live in very small huts. (The one I was in had just one room). Upon arrival I met Brother Homer Hart, a Cheyenne, who assists at the Hamman work. Hart was converted many years ago, and now preaches, teaches, and generally supervises some of the work.

For the First Time — Through an Interpreter

Next I met an elderly lady; then, some delightful children. After a short time, a number gathered in a hut for the meeting. For the first time in my life, I spoke through an interpreter. They understand English, but the older folks have difficulty following a talk. We had a joyous time of fellowship, closing with the singing of "What a Friend We Have in Jesus" and a prayer.

That prayer was one of the high spots of the day. An elderly Indian, who had been converted in 1939, led in prayer. Of course, I didn't understand a word, but it was evident she was pouring out her heart to her Lord and Saviour. After a general time of informal mingling, Friesen showed me that part of the field, and we returned to his home near Clinton.

The next day we left at eleven o'clock on the 60-mile trip to Canton to join the other missionaries on a tour of that part of this Cheyenne-Arapaho field. And what an inspiring eight hours this trip proved to be.

Upon arrival in Canton, we picked up Alfred Wiebe and Herbert Dalke two other missionaries, and proceeded to visit the various churches. Brother Wiebe has charge of the Cheyenne part of the field. He has 133 members. About 400 Indians are in the area. Brother Dalke supervises the Arapaho Indians with 141 members.

First we visited the church near Canton. I rejoiced to discover that the old, dilapidated building is soon to give way to a new church. From here we crossed the North Canadian River—at the place the U. S. Government built the great dam—to the Longdale Church. The work has an interesting history dating back to 1908.

Scene of the Labors of Haury and Petter

Next we went to Cantonment church. In some ways this was the most inspiring part of the trip. Here I saw the work begun by S. S. Haury. And it was here that the late Rudolph Petter began his work in 1891. I saw the farm home where he did his translation work. In the dusty attic of this church, I saw some of the work of Petter. I saw some of his translations, and thought of the tremendous work that entailed.

Our final stop was the Funda Church.

The next morning I "looked in" on the women's meeting at the Clinton Church which is served by the Friesens. Seventeen women and children were present. It reminded one somewhat of the women's meeting back home.

Well, what did I carry with me as I left Clinton.

First, I was amazed at the degree of success in an exceedingly difficult area of service. It appears that in a work of this kind one faces all the usual problems, plus many unique ones. Whatever the problems, it remains that there are Indians who have accepted Christ as Saviour. And, although none are large, churches are functioning, supervised by missionaries and assisted by Indians.

The Work Is Not Completed

Second, a very vivid conviction has grown upon me that our Conference has a real field of service here. The work is not completed. Christians need instruction and guidance greatly. And, there are still many Indians who have not been reached for Christ and the Church. One cannot visit in the camp as I did without feeling that here is a great challenge.

Third, as I spent quite a number of hours with our three missionary couples—Friesen, Wiebe, Dalke—I felt that we are fortunate to have consecrated workers on the field. They are ever seeking the best ways to do their important work. I discovered they are to have an Indian Retreat! This will be the second year.

Fourth, I wondered what could be done on the far-flung Oklahoma mission field if all in our constituency could receive a vision of the task! It seems to me that the work can prosper in increasing fashion as our people everywhere give it prayerful support.

I left wishing I had been born twins: I would like to leave one to work here!

MISSION BRIEF

The Indian women of the Clinton Mennonite Mission Church quilted their seventh comfort after Christmas on February 9. All but one of these were given to sick and old Indians. One was sold to help buy more material. Miss Marie Regier spoke to the Mission Club on January 20 and another welcome visitor was Andrew Shelly who spoke to the women in the morning on February 9.—Mrs. Arthur Friesen

Kansas Summer Bible School Training Program

THE Kansas Vacation Church School Training Program sponsored cooperatively by the Boards of Christian Education of the Protestant Churches affiliated with the Kansas Council of Churches and Christian Education (with which the Western District Conference also cooperates through its Education Committee) will have a series of one-day Vacation Church School Clinics in Kansas.

It Is Being Done

I. THE LARGEST GROUP OF ADULTS THAT EVER JOINED

SOME of our General Conference churches are doing a very valuable piece of service in the field of lay visitation evangelism; this is especially so in the Eastern District Conference. One of these congregations is the First Mennonite Church of Allentown, Pennsylvania, where Maynard Shelly is pastor. Shelly reports:

"Early in October three teams of lay people went out by twos to call on people who were on the 'prospect list' and to ask them to accept Christ and to follow the Master with us. They went out on three successive nights. They had been thoroughly prepared for this work and had consecrated themselves for this task in a special service.

"As a result of our visitation evangelism effort eighteen people made decisions. For of these people had never been identified with a Christian church, so this became for them their first decision. They were received into our fellowship by baptism. One other person joined through profession of faith, having been previously baptized, but never having been a member of any church. Seven of these people had formerly been members of churches, but they had allowed their membership to lapse and were no longer actively identified with a Christian church. These people joined our fellowship by renewal of their covenant. The remaining six transferred their membership from other churches, which were in most cases outside of the city . . . . These people were formally received into the church on the 23rd of October a week before our fall communion service . . . That morning, after the close of the service, instead of the people moving back to the exit, the entire congregation moved forward to welcome each person individually. It was an experience in which each person present shared and it was a real thrill to everyone. This was the largest group of adults that ever joined this modest congregation on one day."—by W. F. Unruh, secretary, Evangelism

"One Great Hour of Sharing"

AKRON, PENNSYLVANIA. — Many Protestant churches in the United States are cooperating in the sponsorship of a special relief appeal through radio broadcasts during the week of March 4 through 11, and reaching a climax in the "One Great Hour of Sharing" on Sunday, March 12 when all Christians are urged to go to church and there make a special contribution for relief purposes. The M.C.C. has not been cooperating with this joint effort, chiefly because most Mennonite congregations contribute regularly to relief. It should be clear, however, that special additional contributions can be used to good advantage in the Mennonite relief program, as M.C.C. constituent individuals or churches are led through this special appeal, to contribute to this cause.

Relief Warehouse is Moved

The M.C.C. Food warehouse formerly located at Silver Springs, Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, has been moved to the Fridy Warehouse, South Manor Street, Mountville, Pa. Persons in the eastern area should take note of this change of location.

Message from Friesland Colony, Paraguay

The following is a translation of a letter from David Wieler, the Oberschultze of Friesland Colony:

"The colony administration of Friesland is hereby in the name of all children and parents, expressing its heartiest thanks to the Mennonite Central Committee. The joy which the Christmas packages brought into the homes was undescribable. Please convey our heartfelt gratitude to our brethren and sisters who never seem to tire of giving . . ."

Leper Colony is Approved

Recently the Paraguayan government has issued a decree transferring title of a land tract located near the city of Concepcion, to the Mennonite Central Committee and approved use of the land for the establishment of a leper colony. A number of M.C.C. workers are now surveying the land, establishing banking and postal facilities, and planning the approximate location of the buildings to be erected. The cost of construction and availability of materials are also being determined.

This leper colony project has been envisioned since several years ago, and will serve a very worthy purpose in caring for some of the lepers in Paraguay. The project is being undertaken as an expression of appreciation to the people of Paraguay for admitting Mennonite refugees from Europe. The work is to be carried on in cooperation with American Leprosy Mission Inc., (formerly the American Mission to Lepers); and the Mennonite colonies in Paraguay are also interested in helping in the project.

M.C.C. PLANS SERIES MENTAL HEALTH INSTITUTES

A special institute on Mental Health and Church Responsibilities is to be held on March 10, afternoon and evening, at Goshen College, Goshen, Indiana. This meeting is under the auspices of the Mennonite Central Committee, although the program is being planned locally. Resource leaders include Ernest E. Miller, Delvin Kirchhofer, H. Clair Amstutz, and Elmer Ediger. The sessions of the Institute are open to all who desire to attend. This is the first of a series of institutes on Mental Health, to be held in various Mennonite communities.

Ministers Handbook Ready by Conference

Word has been received from the Brethren Publishing House at Elgin, Illinois, that we can confidently expect the MINISTERS HANDBOOK to be off the press in time for our General Conference next summer. That will be good news for many who have waited long for this revision.

Sample dummies received at the Headquarters office and circulated among members of the Executive Committee indicate that members are highly pleased with the type of binding and the samples of the page format. Present plans are that it will be pocket size, leatheroid type of binding, round corners, with a ribbon marker. The type is a very pleasing large, open-face type which makes for easy reading. One of the features of the new format is that prominent initial letters serve as convenient "hitching posts" for the eye to follow in the course of the ceremony.

Ministers desiring a prompt and immediate shipment as soon as it is off the press may now begin placing their orders directly with the Conference Book Store nearest them.

Seminary Discusses Revival

AT the prayer meeting on February 15 Leon Thomson, Hutchinson, Kans., a graduate of Manchester College gave his impressions of the revival at Wheaton which he had witnessed. He said this revival had the following characteristics: First, it was student centered. Faculty did not start the revival nor did they dominate in its development. Second, it was a genuine and sincere expression of religious experience. Third, the context of the revival was the conflict of fundamentalist commitment in the modern culture. He referred to the various pledges of non-conformity taken by the students which conflict with many phases of modern life. Fourth, there were critics of the revival present among the students, whose direct quotations he gave to our group. Fifth, it was spontaneous breaking out quite unexpectedly. In elaborating his survey, he pointed out that Wheaton College has a tradition of revival so that the students are accustomed to this particular form of religious expression which is not a common one to many people in Protestant churches including a large segment of of the Mennonite Churches. His conclusion was that it was collective act—strong, gentle, and elusive. Following his message and the dismissal of the meeting, he remained for an hour to receive questions and comments from students seeking to understand this experience.

Missionary Harold and Ruth Ratzlaff spoke twice to the First Mennonite Church of Berne, Indiana, on Sunday, February 12.

On Saturday morning, February 18, our students started registering for the third and final term of our school year.

Bethel and Tabor Faculties Meet

"PROBLEMS Common to Church Colleges" was the theme of a meeting of faculty members from Tabor and Bethel Colleges, February 13. Dean R. C. Kauffman of Bethel and President P. E. Schellenberg of Tabor spoke on the responsibility of Mennonite Colleges concerning academic standards and greatest service to constituencies. The possibility of forming a Mennonite college-accrediting association to help with the problem mentioned, was discussed. A social period, during which refreshments were served, followed.

In addition to the special certificate for elementary school teaching Bethel College offers the specialized high school teaching certificate to students. Bethel has fifteen grade and thirty-five high school teachers who will apply for their first teaching position this spring.

J. W. Fretz was a guest at lunch with Governor Carlson, February 10th, when the latter called a meeting of the Displaced Persons Commission of Kansas of which Fretz is a member.

Our Mennonite Hymnary has one of the very best collections of Chorales for the Lenten season in the section from Number 531 to 540. Number 562 may be added to this group. The Chorale is a form of music which lends itself very well to the feeling of Lent. These Chorales used together with the story or background as found in the Handbook to the Hymnary will enrich our Lenten worship services. Certainly pastors and leaders should not fail to explore and use the hymns in the section entitled "His Passion" from Number 103 to 112. One of my own favorite hymns in this section is "Cross of Jesus, Cross of Sorrow" as yet not well known in many of our churches.

And for Easter

Although this article is concerned mainly with the music of Lent, may I include the suggestion that some time during the Easter season a workable program using choirs of various age groups could be planned. High-school, or possibly even some junior-high choirs, could present a cantata such as Clokey's "Christ is Risen." Easter in contrast to Lent is a time for Alleluia Choruses and joyful melodies.

Whether in the time of Lent or Easter it is of utmost importance that we maintain a deep devotional atmosphere. We should avoid all forms of showiness in dress, in staging or in the personality of singers. The less attention there is called to exterior things, the greater will be the spiritual blessing. "Do all to the Glory of God."

Jottings

—First Church, Wadsworth, Ohio: The recent Brotherhood meeting was pronounced a great success—the meal of roast chicken was great, the address, "Science in the World Today," by Dr. Leonard Kreider, was challenging and informative. The attendance, 42, was the highest so far.

—First Church, Reedley, California: At their two meetings each month the ladies of the Missionary Society fill various needs, including the sewing of layettes, dish towels, and quilt blocks for Home Missions. In addition to this they make comforters and mend for the local relief center. The church members have given food and miscellaneous showers to some of the displaced families who have come to make their homes in Reedley.—Mrs. R. Harder, Corr.

—Buhler Church, Buhler, Kansas: On Sunday, February 12, our Sunday school observed rally day with a record attendance of 337. On the same Sunday we also observed our annual "Loyalty Day," with a fellowship dinner at noon after which opportunity was given for members to make cash donations or pledges for church maintenance for the coming year. The four mission societies of our church have installed a public address system in the church.—Mrs. P. J. Neufeld, Corr.

—Menno Church, Lind, Washington: It has been a new experience in the life of our church to be denied meetings in our regular worship services for a period of four consecutive Sundays due to the cold weather and drifting snow. Services continued February 12 and the annual business meeting was held at one o'clock in the afternoon. A family night was enjoyed February 17, including a fellowship luncheon.—Mrs. C. C. Claassen, Corr.

—Bethesda Church, Henderson, Nebraska: The Senior Mission Society collected 1,011 feed sacks which have been sent to the Mennonite Mission Society groups in Paraguay. Also, 445 pounds of clothing were packed for relief. Elmer Ediger, working in the interest of M. C. C., brought the morning message recently. In the evening he was guest speaker for the Christian Youth Fellowship. A senior male chorus with Ted Schmidt as leader has been organized.—Mrs. Maurice Janzen, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Hydro, Oklahoma: Andrew Shelly spoke recently in the interest of Mennonite Biblical Seminary. Represestatives of Grace Children's Home spoke and showed pictures of the home. These meetings were well attended and thoroughly enjoyed by all. Repair work is in progress at the parsonage. A wall heater has been installed in the bathroom.—Wilfred Ewy, Corr.

—Grace Church, Pandora, Ohio: The Men's Fellowship gathered in the basement of the church for a potluck supper and program recently. The film, "The Other Side of the Fence" by William Allbright, nationally known soil expert, was shown. There were eighty men and boys present. On a recent Sunday evening, the service was in charge of Stuart Lehman of Berne, Indiana, president of the Young People's Union of the Middle District Conference. Slides were shown on the Y. P. missions projects and short talks were given by the officers of the Union. We have also had the privilege of having with us the Ernest Crouses of Germany. They gave us glimpses of the Mennonite congregations in Germany.—Susan Steiner, Corr.

—First Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: Our former pastor and wife, the I. J. Dicks, were involved in an automobile acident the first part of January. Mrs. Dick is still recovering. Mrs. L. R. Amstutz, our present pastor's wife, was also involved in a car accident and has almost completely recovered. Our pastor, L. R. Amstutz, has been preaching a series of sermons from the Psalms. There are twenty young people in the catechism class. The pastor also taught a teacher training class during the Sunday school hour before he began instruction in the catechism class. Wednesday evening in our church is known as "church night" or "family night." Five classes meet at the same hour. The classes represent various age groups. Due to lack of room in our church building one class meets in the parsonage.—Mrs. Willmar Loewen, Corr.

—Fairfield Church, Fairfield, Pennsylvania: Two young people, Philip Roth and Jay Bream, were recently taken into church fellowship by baptism. We also observed communion services, this being the last Sunday that our pastor, E. S. Stoneback, and his family are to be with us. They are leaving this week for Wichita, Kansas, where he will take up his new pastorate.—Henry Burkhard, Corr.

—Deer Creek Church, Deer Creek, Oklahoma: Andrew Shelly from Kitchener, Ontario, Canada, conducted the morning and evening services recently. Our pastor is conducting a midweek Bible study class for the adults which has been very well attended. The children's class is meeting in the parsonage and is under the supervision of Mrs. Waldo Krehbiel.—Mrs. Allen Moyer, Corr.

—First Church, Reedley, California: The P. W. Penners arrived here February 11. Mrs. Penner gave a short message of interest to all in the morning service. A most interesting church program was presented in the evening of the same day. In observance of Race Relations Sunday, young people of various nationalities including Japanese, Canadian, Swiss, Korean, and Negro took part in rendering songs, telling of native customs, and religions, and giving their testimonies of how wonderful that all of us can worship and love the same God.—Mrs. R. Harder, Corr.

—Eden Church, Inola, Oklahoma: Sunday, January 22, we commenced with our prayer meetings. We have two topics each evening and only on Sunday nights. Sunday morning during Sunday school hour our pastor, G. B. Regier, has a catechism class. On the fourth of January the chorus from the Mennonite Seminary rendered a program here. We have the promise of John Thiessen, missionary to India, in the near future of which we are happy, we receive visits from our missionaries but seldom; yes, we feel slighted sometimes.

—First Church, Hutchinson, Kansas: Our pastor Victor Sawatzky was re-elected for another three year term. Consecration for the church officers was observed. Walter Dyck of the Emmaus Church and our pastor exchanged pulpits recently. Our Men's Chorus gave a song service at the Bethel Church near Inman recently.—Corr.

David Livingstone of Africa

If you want to read an inspiring story of achievement, you should begin this serial about the great missionary, David Livingstone, who explored the interior of Africa.

PART I.

Missionary in South Africa

A HUNDRED years ago Africa was the Dark Continent. The interior was supposed to be desert. The Sahara Desert is in the north. and the Kalahari Desert in the south, so it was natural to think that desert conditions extended the length of the continent.

The man who first explored the interior of Africa and told the world about its mountains, rivers and lakes was David Livingstone, born March 19, 1813, and died May 1, 1873. But Livingstone was more than an explorer. His motive for travelling through unexplored parts of Africa was not merely to see the country, but to release the natives from paganism and convert them to Christianity.

When Livingstone was a boy in Blantyre, near Glasgow, Scotland, there were no laws regulating child labors; so he started to work in a cotton mill at the age of ten, his hours being from six in the morning till eight at night.

There was a village school in Blantyre, and Livingstone must have learned to read before he started to work in the mill. He records that he so much wanted an education that with a part of his first week's wages he bought a copy of Ruddiman's Rudiments of Latin, and started to evening school, which was held from eight to ten o'clock. He says that, "The dictionary part of my labours was followed up till twelve o'clock or later, if my mother did not interfere by snatching the books out of my hands . . . . . I read in this way many of the classical authors, and knew Virgil and Horace better at sixteen than I do now at forty-three."

Studied While Working

He studied even while he worked. "My reading while at work was carried on by placing the book on a portion of the spinning jenny, so that I could catch sentence after sentence as I passed at my work, I thus kept up a pretty constant study undisturbed by the roar of the machinery."

While still a boy he became interested in science, and read whatever books on the subject he could secure. He remarks that he did not have much time—working fourteen hours a day, going to school two hours at night, studying additional hours!—but he delighted to go into the country with his brothers and collect specimens of plants, animals and stones. The knowledge of science thus gained was of great value, for it enabled him in later years to describe accurately the geography and geology of Africa, and the plants and animals he saw there.

After he was nineteen he earned enough in summer to enable him to attend lectures (college classes, we should say) in winter, and thus to prepare himself as a missionary. Some of his friends advised him to join the London Missionary Society, which "sends neither Episcopacy, nor Presbyterianism, nor Independency, but the Gospel of Christ to the heathen." This was in accord with his own ideas, and he offered himself to them and was accepted. The Society gave him some financial assistance during his last two years of training, which was taken in London. It was not until 1840, when he was twenty-seven years old, that he embarked for Cape Town, South Africa, an ordained minister and a doctor of medicine.

Always to Other Parts

His first intention had been to go as a missionary to China; but difficulties arose in that country which led to the Opium War a little later and made English missionaries unwelcome. It was then suggested that he go to the West Indies, but he protested that the people there were already provided with physicians, and added, "Settling in the West Indies has always appeared so much like the ministry at home that my thoughts have not at all been attracted in that direction, but always to other parts of the world." Here we see his desire to get away from the usual —to break a new path. A few years later he wrote to a friend. "My life may be spent as profitably as a pioneer as in any other way." A pioneer he was to the day of his death.

Smoke of a Thousand Villages

While Livingstone was studying in London, and still undecided about the mission field to which he would go, he met Robert Moffat, who had been a missionary at Kuruman, South Africa, since 1821. Livingstone asked Moffat "if he would do for Africa." Moffat replied that a man of health and vigour could advance the cause of Christ in Africa if he would penetrate to the north of Kuruman where no missionary had yet set foot, and where in the light of morning there could often be seen the smoke of a thousand villages. This conversation had much influence upon Livingstone, causing him not only to offer himself as a missionary there, but to become a pioneer and explorer.

The sailing ship on which Livingstone embarked for South Africa went by way of Rio de Janeiro Brazil, the usual route. On the voyage, Livingstone learned from the captain how to determine longitude and latitude by observing the sun and stars. Some years later he had further instructions from the Astronomer Royal at Cape Town, and thus was able to locate by latitude and longitude the many lakes and mountains which he discovered.

Catalogued Roots and Fruits

During his first few years in Africa, Livingstone catalogued thirty-two edible roots and forty-three fruits growing in the desert without cultivation. He notes such facts as that on the top of a certain mountain water boils at 206° Fahrenheit, while at the bottom of the mountain the boiling point is 208° Fahrenheit, indicating roughly the height above sea level.

Going down a mountain he counted sixteen hundred steps, "which may give a perpendicular height of from twelve to fifteen hundred feet." On another occasion "I had the satisfaction of getting observations for both longitude and latitude—for the former, the distance between Saturn and the Moon, and for the latter a meridian altitude of Conapus. Longitude 22° 57' E., 12° 6' 6" S." His records of the longitude and latitude of rivers, lake and mountains enabled the country he explored to be accurately mapped.

From Cape Town he went about seven hundred miles north to Kuruman. Moffat was then in England, and Livingstone stopped at the mission for some months. But he was not content to "enter into the labours of other men." He soon came to the conviction that there were too many missionaries in the mission stations already established, and that new missionaries should move into the region farther north. He made two long journeys into that region during his first year, looking for a suitable location for a new mission station.

On his second journey he took heroic measures to learn the native language. He says, "In order to obtain an accurate knowledge of the language, I cut myself off from all European society for about six months, and gained by this ordeal an insight into the habits, ways of thinking, laws and language which has proved of incalculable advantage in my intercourse with them ever since." Before two years had passed he was preaching to the natives in their own language, and in three years he was translating hymns for their use. Later, he was "hatching" a grammar of the Sichuana language, which he thought might resemble ancient Egyptian. To find out if this were true, he asked a friend in London to purchase, if he could, an Egyptian-Latin lexicon. Livingstone did not drop his habits of study when he went to Africa.

He was successful as a missionary. After about two years he wrote to his father: "The work of God goes on here notwithstanding all our infirmities. Souls are gathered in continually, and sometimes from among those you would never have expected to see turning to the Lord. Twenty-four were added to the Church last month, and there are several inquirers." He insisted that natives made good Christians, and said that when he returned to Kuruman after travelling among natives who had not heard of Christianity he felt that he was returning to civilization.

ARE YOU READY?

One wonders sometimes how many chance situations are really just that, or great opportunities which one who is prepared may use to good advantage. It is said that at an opening night of Italian opera in Rio de Janeiro, the conductor, who was a Brazilian and temperamental, refused to lead his Italian orchestra. The audience was impatient. The musicians finally arranged to put their nineteen-year-old cellist in the conductor's stand. The young man closed the score and conducted the whole of Aida from memory. His name was Toscanini.

To be ready for our great opportunity is the secret of success. Ready is a wonderful word. '. . .. They that were ready went in . . ." They could enter the open door of their opportunity.—The Covenant Weekly.

A Three-fold Aim

During his first two years in Africa a threefold aim for missionary work was formed in his mind. First, train native workers, so that the efforts of each missionary could be multiplied. Second, open the country to trade, to raise the people from savagery. Third, abolish the slave trade. In furthering these three aims he became a traveller and explorer. But he was soon convinced that training native workers and opening the country to trade would be impossible until the slave trade was abolished. To free Africa from the curse of slavery became the purpose of his life.

In August, 1842, Livingstone set out from Kuruman and went about two hundred and fifty miles north to Mabotsa, where the native chief welcomed him and sold him land for a station. Here he built a house and began work among the natives.

Work Camp in Germany

[Here is a letter telling of some of the personal experiences our American students had in their work camp in Germany last summer. This camp was made up of a number of different nationalities—German, Dutch, Italian, American, and so on. The author is one of our relief workers. Ed.]

Frankfurt am Main

IS IT possible that the summer is coming to an end so quickly? Where has the time gone between May and now. I don't know when time has gone so rapidly as this summer! I'm here in Frankfurt getting recivilized after work camp—washing an endless pile of clothes, washing hair, repacking suitcases, ironing, and a dozen other little things. There is even time for the luxury of writing letters! It's wonderful. Mr. and Mrs. Paul Peachey have a little apartment here in Frankfurt, which is now the Voluntary Service headquarters. We came here for an evaluation meeting of all the summer service units, and I remained on for a few days. The Peacheys left yesterday afternoon for Hamburg, and so the apartment is mine for a day! But this serenity is soon to be broken by 10 students headed for America. They're picking up their American visas on their way to the boat which is to leave from Bremen. They will no doubt be an excited lot . . . . Hermine, the secretary, and I are getting a meal for them tonight. But 12 is nothing to cook for after our bunch of 35 in Hannover . . . . just a well-seasoned cook, that's what I am by now. You learn fast when you pitch in at camp.

Espelkamp

During our stay in camp we made several interesting weekend excursions. The first one was a one-day trip to Espelkamp where we have an M.C.C. unit. Espelkamp is a former munitions factory which was not discovered during the war. After the capitulation, the British blew up the gas works, etc. There are many buildings located in this forest. The British and German governments are making an attempt to convert this place into a home for refugees. Eventually it is to be a well-planned city. It has been given over to Evangelisches Hilfswerk, (the Protestant relief agency for Germany) to build up. There are good concrete barracks there which have already been turned into children's homes and old people's homes. Munitions storehouses are being made into tiny cottages for families. M.C.C. has moved into a wooden barracks there with a Voluntary Service unit. Our people there live only a step higher than the refugees themselves. It is hoped to bring industry into Espelkamp to provide work for the people. However since economy is rather unstable at the present time, many are unwilling to take the risk involved and it is rather slow in coming into shape. They hope to have a school, factories, hospital, etc. eventually. We went to church in the chapel there. It was very interesting. The chapel itself is much more "simple" than our churches at home. The floor was of cement, the walls and ceiling of roughly laid bricks. The church pews, plain benches without backs. One was impressed with the simplicity of the altar. Above the improvised table stood a plain wooden cross, to the left the pulpit. One had a true sense of worship, and that God was present to a greater degree than in many of the ornate cathedrals. It was interesting to see this attempt at solution of one of Germany's greatest problems. A Doctor Fürholtzer spoke to us. He's in on the planning end of the place. The refugee problem is something we cannot fathom . . . . since the beginning of the war there are more than twenty million refugees. One loses his sense of comprehension there.

Vast Desert of Rubble

Another trip we took which was interesting was the trip to Hamburg. Saturday afternoon we took a wonderful peaceful trip along the Elbe. The skipper piloted our boat through the harbor, which is the second largest port in Europe. It had seen a good bit of bombing too. We saw scrap iron being loaded for export. The Germans don't like that for they feel they need it badly in their own industries. The trip was wonderful . . . the sun shone brightly and we all sat out on deck lazying in the sun. That night we went to the Hamburg Mennonite church. Sunday morning we visited the place where there had been a V.S. unit last summer. It was a mental hospital which had been bombed. The M.C.C. had a work camp there last summer, building two cement barracks. One was a work shop where the patients could work, the other for students who were doing practical work on the grounds. We sang in the church there that Sunday morning. In the afternoon we made a tour of the city and then they took us out to the residential section of the city which had been hit terrifically by the Americans. Were it in normal times, other things would have impressed me, but as it is now, this vast desert of rubble which extends for miles to the south in Hamburg was the most impressive. For five nights straight this section was hammered with sulphur bombs. A quarter of a million people lost their lives. Or that's the nearest they can count. We saw the sequal to this also . . . the graveyard where these people are buried. When we think of funerals, we think in terms of an individual or two . . . but this. People were dumped into a huge mass grave from a truck, after dogs had been sent into the rubble to pick out the living and the dead bodies. The identification above the bodies indicates only which section of the city they were found. Along the side of this huge grave which extends perhaps like a block, square, are little crosses with the names of people who lost their lives. One gravemarker carried the question, "Why?"

We Have So Terribly Much

The last week-end the British gave us a bus to take a trip into the Harz mountains . . . . It was a lovely trip. We stayed at a hostel overnight. We found out when we arrived that they had not been informed that we would be there for meals . . . We had been informed they would furnish all our meals except breakfast. Fortunately we had brought adequate supplies for that.

From it, plus four loaves of black bread we made two meals. Our first gripers were our American students. One lost patience too quickly with them at such times. I wonder what we would do if we had to live like the German people actually live. I think we have it coming, almost . . . . we have so terribly much at home, and still are never satisfied. Sunday morning we had a lovely church service all our own on a hill overlooking hills, a tiny village and evergreens. After lunch we left for home—and stopped at the Russian border. Typically American . . . we tore out of the bus and began taking pictures of "Russian" trees, "Russian soldiers" which we thought we saw in the woods . . . and some kids took home rocks from the "Russian" stream which trickled between the two zones. We talked with German guards on the British side of the border. There were no patrols to be seen on the other side. The bridge across the stream had been wiped out.

Speaker: Philip Vernier

Our last night together we had a big Abschiedsfeier. All day Monday everyone worked like mad trying to make this a special evening. Since we had been eating out of tin dishes the whole time, we borrowed a nice set of china from a nearby hotel . . . the decoration committee nearly stripped a nearby woods transplanting it in our shabby, dingy dining room. The gardner showed himself very friendly (we had bought vegetables from him) and brought a wash basket of flowers . . . One of the Dutch boys drew very clever programs—a caricature of each person during camp. They were clever as anything and funny too. We had nut cups out of paper with a huge nail in each . . . bricks for candle holders . . . . Our menu was something extraordinary too. We had a speaker following the banquet . . . a Philippe Vernier from Belgium. He was one of the few pacifists in Europe during the war. He is a minister in a small coal mining village in Belgium. He has a family. While they were expecting their second child he was put into solitary confinement for the duration of the war. He is a very quiet, dynamic man. His presentation is not so wonderful, but he could really answer the Europeans' questions because he himself had lived his convictions. We can talk about it, but we have never had to face the pacifist question in the degree that Europeans have had to. He knew what he was talking about. He said we can never prevent war, but it is for us to "ring the bell" . . . . and he emphasized this over and over again. He compared it to a ship going in the wrong direction . . . and we must "ring the bell" .

I'm on my way to a second camp at Stuttgart. It will be made up mainly of Europeans and will continue the project, which was started by the first group. There is still material aid distribution to be carried on, but the spiritual side of the program is becoming the more important phase. Paul Peachey, who will be the director of this center, believes we have a strong testimony to give . . . and it's either one of two things—to carry out that testimony or back down on something which we've believed in for 400 years. He feels there is a growing dissatisfaction with the state church here—on many questions. Some folks are beginning to question the matter of baptism. The pacifistic question is being considered here and there by small groups. He thinks we can play an important part in encouraging and helping them to find their way to the Anabaptist beliefs. Not to win them to our church . . . but to encourage them to change theirs.

"I Would Like to Live Like Him"

ALL of us have our heroes. Older people have their heroes just like young folk. And, we all like to try to make our lives measure up to that of our heroes. I heard of a Dutch boy in Holland whose hero was Al Capone. I am told he now is the chief underworld character in Holland. Some of us have Hollywood actors as our heroes and we dress and try to act like we imagine they would. Talk with people and you find that they all have their heroes. Even political parties have heroes—the Republicans have Lincoln, the Democrats have Jefferson. Nations have heroes. Russia has Stalin, America has Washington.

You and I have heroes. But, we have the privilege of choosing our heroes. We don't have to have the same heroes as our friends have. We can choose out of the thousands of men and women we know about, a hero we admire. And it is a good thing for each one of us to have such heroes.

For this reason, there is nothing quite like good biography. The story of great men's lives stirs us and makes us think of how we can do great things, too. In this issue of the Youth section, there is appearing the first installment of a series of articles telling the thrilling life of David Livingstone. We will learn of his childhood, how he lived a very ordinary childish life for his day, how he first adventured in Africa, of his encounter with a lion, of his marriage and the great explorations that have made him famous.

Here is a hero we can all enjoy and perhaps there will be some who will make David Livingstone their special hero and will read more about him and will try to make their lives measure up to his.—E.L.

"This volume Handbook To The Mennonite Hymnary contains hymns from the Church Universal but it is the significant contribution of one communion that has a unique and dynamic message for a world that rocks."—Christian Herald, New York City, New York, Daniel A. Poling, Editor.

Beyond Our Own

GERMANY—In calling their people once again to repentance, leaders of the Confessional church revealed the temper of current religious thought in Germany in their message read widely on Nov. 16.

After warning of the threat of a new World War, "a further judgment upon us," the Germans spoke "as accessories to the crime of our people, confessing that we have forfeited all right to speak before God and men. Yet we cannot and dare not . . . leave unspoken the cry . . . . 'Grant the justice of God!' "

The statement calls upon Germans to abjure "nationalism that comes of the refusal to repent and waits the hour of revenge" and to cease spying on one another. It warns both Germans and their foreign rulers against self-justification, expressing a fear that in trying to justify themselves, East and West may plunge the world into war.—Christian Advocate

A "Rickshaw Reform Society" is working to have rickshaws abolished, as India has done. The Society is undertaking to secure jobs for rickshaw men when the change comes, and is suggesting the same device used in the Malay States, which have substituted a pedalled tricycle. The practice of using human beings to pull others about is more and more widely considered degrading throughout the Far East. —The American Friend

AFRICA—Four years' ceaseless effort by Michael Guthrie Scott, a Johannesburg Angelican minister, finally won an appearance before the United Nations Trusteeship committee where he pleaded for U.N. action to curb South Africa's rigid segregation policy.

He asked permission for tribal chiefs to state their own case before the U.N., that their lands be returned to them, and that mandated territory be brought under U.N. trusteeship. Scott declared that the majority of the indigenous population (nine-tenths of the whole) is opposed unalterably to South African rule.

While he fought for nonsegregation, segregation was reaffirmed by the synod of the Dutch Reformed church, meeting in Cape Town. The church said it did not "aim at inferiority or oppression," but at "self-reliance."—Christian Advocate

NEW ORLEANS, LOUSIANA — Archbishop Joseph F. Rummel of the Catholic Church of New Orleans recently cancelled the annual Holy Hour, scheduled for October 2 in the City Park Stadium. The City Park Board's insistence on segregation of Negro participants, the Archbishop said, was unacceptable to the sponsoring Metropolitan Council of the Holy Name Society. In commenting on this New Orleans incident, the editors of America, a Catholic journal, declared: "The action of the Park officials in invoking compulsory race segregation contradicts the very idea of a truly Catholic religious celebration. Furthermore, the Park officials lay themselves open to a charge of violating a basic right of every American citizen, that of religious freedom." — The American Friend

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS — The 1949 Chicagoland Directory of Religion, recently released, reports eighty-three denominations with a total of two thousand eight hundred churches in Chicago and suburbs.—Moody Monthly

Book Notes . . . . LIFE IS NOT TO BE SQUANDERED

Thank God for my Heart Attack: by Charles Yale Harrison, Henry Holt and Company, New York, 144 pp. $2.50.

ALTHOUGH deaths from heart diseases run three times as high as those from dreaded cancer, this noted writer experienced a heart attack and is thankful to God for it. He tells in detail his feelings and battles during his convalescence. This personal experience can give courage and hope to those who fear being "put on the shelf."

Coronary thrombosis is unlike tuberculosis, cancer, diabetes, or polio. The author says, "It's a disease caused by living," probably too intensively. Nervous tension causes an increase in the heart death rate. Harrison feels that "most of us take reasonable care of our teeth and eyes but we abuse our hearts shamelessly."

"The most gratifying thing about having survived a heart attack," he feels, "is the renewed sense of wonder of life that follows. You've been given a second chance in a world where millions are not even given a first chance."

The author has made an intensive study of both the organic and psychic factors involved. He makes no thorough-going study, however, of the personal Christian experience with the Great Physician of the body and soul as the title might suggest. Allusions are made to the Catholic, Jewish, and Protestant faiths. His insistance on the harmlessness of smoking and drinking reflects the level of our so-called American culture.

His concluding moral is good. "The secret of how to survive a heart attack is the secret of all good living—to live well yet rationally, fully yet without overexertion, interested in all things yet maintaining a serene outlook. In short, to be so in love with life that nothing could ever induce you to squander it."

Pastor and church workers, doctors and nurses, will find that the appearance of this book emphasizes the need for literature, on a very practical level, that will be truly faith-inspiring to those who are cardiacs and for those who fear that they may be.

Read with the proverbial grain of salt, this book can be of help to many.—Walter H. Dyck

I was . . . in prison and you did not visit me. Matthew 25:43 R.S.V.

NEARLY 100,000 children were thrown into adult jails alonside hardened criminals last year, the Children's Bureau estimates. Youth were found in road gangs and serving sentences in penitentiaries. In thirty-four of the forty eight states children were found in jails with grownups in spite of the fact that most of these states have laws protecting children from this kind of treatment. Institutions help to solve problems; but often they help to hide problems.

Our Lord, in the days of His earthly ministry, had a deep and abiding sense of mission. He had a work to do. CONFERENCE SUNDAY

Conference Sunday has been set for April 23. THE MENNONITE expects to come out with a Conference Issue on April 11, featuring the subject of "The Ministry of Reconciliation." We would like to suggest that Conference Sunday be made a day of prayer for our ministry of reconciliation in its various phases. That is the reconciling of men to God and also of men toward one another through the work of Foreign Missions, Home Missions, Evangelism, Education, Publication, Relief, Peace, Mutual Aid, etc. There are several passages of Scripture which serve as an inspiration on this subject of reconciliation: II Cor. 5:18-20; Matt. 5:23 and 24; Eph. 2:13-17, and Rom. 5:10. WORSHIP IS GETTING SUCH A GOOD LOOK AT GOD THAT WE simply cannot stand any sin in our lives. The season of Lent ought to be such a time of concentrating our gaze upon God as revealed in the crucified Christ that our lives will be purged and healed. All too long have we centered our attention exclusively upon man. As the result, men are giving an excuse from everything from the widely publicized anthropologist's defense of pre-marital sex relations to the common man's idea that pride is evidence of healthy self respect and hatred is evidence of strength and loyalty. This is leading to a complete perversion of life. Men, whom God intended should serve one another, plan systematically to destroy one another. Institutions and disciplines that were intended to be a blessing to mankind either serve to hide the evil of men or become openly associated with the propogation of evil. Man was sure he had found the messiah in science, but now we are almost certain that science may have provided the weapon for man to destroy himself. Man was quite sure that modern education could do in a few years what centuries previous could not accomplish; but, we have found that this discipline works as effectively for evil as for good. Then, we are inclined to say that what science and education are incapable of accomplishing, surely religion or the gospel will accomplish; at this point we have our greatest disappointment. Not that the gospel does not have the answer, for Christ is surely sufficiently. Our disappointment is in the fact that men take only that phase of the gospel that suits them and their way of thinking, thus neutralizing its power completely! Jesus suffered to deliver us from sin and to show us the way of dealing with evil which he so hated; but we take the crown of salvation and push away the cross of suffering which he asked us to take up and with it follow him. Jesus heals us in order that we may give up our very lives in dangerous consecration to the way of the cross. We accept the healing but shun the sacrifice. The Communists are right in calling such religion an opiate to the people, and such a religion deserves to die! But this much is crystal clear. This is not the Christian Way. If this Lenten season passes again without a deep moving of the Spirit as we behold Christ crucified for our sins AND for our example, then the world will become increasingy impatient with the church.

Which man is free—the nobleman who lies drunk on a luxurious couch, or the young slave who stands sober nearby?—Chrysostom.

"TURNING JUNGLES INTO GARDENS" is an article in this issue that describes the impact of our mission work in India. But in part of America and other parts of the world 'the garden' is being turned back into the jungle. The Christian Advocate speaks of the progressive polygamy trend that is reflected by recent headlines in our daily newspapers. In many newspapers comments are being made in defense of a recently and highly publicized adulteress. We are glad to see such a widely respected international daily as the Christian Science Monitor (respected more for its news coverage perhaps than its doctrine) come out with the following statement included in one of its editorials (Feb. 25, 1950):

"Nor do we see how such defense can be called 'persecution.' We do well to follow Jesus' charity, condemning the sin, not the sinner. But he did not approve the course of the woman taken in adultery or tell her to continue. In the present case the harm done to others, particularly the children, has not ceased. Nor has there been any clear evidence of repentance, but rather an apparent attempt to have this conduct accepted. In this case most newspapers have played a shameful part by trying to glamorize a sordid story of infidelity. Society has always regarded adultery as so harmful to itself as to require legal bans. For its own protection the least the public can do in this case is to reject all efforts either in press or picture to sell adultery as 'romance.'"

In any controversy, the instant we feel anger we have already ceased striving for truth, and have begun striving for ourselves.—Carlyle.

"ONE GREAT HOUR OF SHARING," a nation-wide church appeal for relief on March 12, is generally passed up by the Mennonite Central Committee with the reason that we emphasize relief giving throughout the year. If we conceive of M.C.C. as being only a channel for the fulfillment of our own obligations of stewardship this reasoning may suffice. But, our united effort will deteriorate if we have not broader vision than that. It is our own conviction that M.C.C. has been an instrument in the hand of God to call other denominations to the wider ministry of reconciliation inescapable in the commission of Jesus Christ. If that is true, the M.C.C. and constituent churches should be in the forefront of such efforts as "One Great Hour of Sharing." One Mennonite was heard to say that his church was having an offering for a building fund on March 12. This will probably be repeated in a number of our churches. How will our members explain to their neighbors?—J.J.E.

The U. S. Statistical Abstract 1017, page 196, says, "For every million dollars invested, the brewers employ 78 wage earners, while the million dollars in other industries employs 318 workers," more than four times as many. If the huge sums wasted on liquor and its accompanying evils were spent on necessities and spread among farmers, businessmen and laborers, instead of going to the booze barons and penal institutions it would put this country on the road to peace, prosperity and plenty.—The Spotlight.

Man's supreme sacrifice is in dying for his friends Christ's supreme sacrifice was in dying for His enemies.

The Miracle of Forgiveness

by Alexander C. Purdy

THE classic yearning for forgiveness comes from the 51st Psalm:

Have mercy upon me, O God, according to thy lovingkindness:
According to the multitude of thy tender mercies blot out my transgressions.
Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity,
And cleanse me from my sin.

And we remember how the Psalm continues: Purify me . . . Wash me . . . Cast me not away . . . Restore me . . Deliver me.

The classic assurance of forgiveness comes in Psalm 103:

Bless the Lord, O my soul;
And all that is within me, bless his holy name.
Bless, the Lord, O my soul,
And forget not all his benefits:
Who forgiveth all thine iniquities;
Who healeth all thy diseases . . .
The Lord is merciful and gracious,
Slow to anger and abundant in lovingkindness.

> Much of the devotional literature of our time stresses meditation and omits repentance and forgiveness. But to disregard the need for repentance and the good news of the forgiveness is to miss the core of the gospel. Forgiveness is the supreme miracle.

The same emphasis on forgiveness, rooted not in the indulgence or tolerance of God but in His very nature, runs through the New Testament. It is central in the teaching of Jesus and underlies the Pauline and Johannine writings. The grace of God and the possibility of a new birth, a new creation for man presupposes a deep and real belief in the divine forgiveness. It finds magnificent expression in the familiar words of the First Epistle of John: "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just, and will forgive our sins and cleanse us from all unrighteousness" (1:9), words so familiar that we often miss their real import. As Professor C. H. Dodd has noted:

"It is remarkable that our author should base divine forgiveness directly upon the faithfulness and justice of God . . . The mercy or forgiveness of God is a function of his righteousness . . . We believe in the forgiveness of sin, not by convincing ourselves that our sins were excusable, or remediable, or that we meant well, or 'that we won't do it again.' It is because the principle of forgiveness is built into the the structure of a moral order created and determined by the character of a just and faithful God." (The Johannine Epistles, Moffat N. T. Commentary. pp. 22, 23).

The Christian message of forgiveness is not an article of faith that we are apt to doubt. Yet is it central and dynamic for us personally? There are two considerations about forgiveness that seem to me to need reemphasis today.

First, forgiveness has been removed, almost unconsciously, from the center to the circumference of our faith. We have tended to equate sin with what we call ignorance, malajustment, glandular abnormality and the like, and to find its source in the environment instead of in the hearts of men. No doubt the mistake of another day was to think that ignorance and glands and environment could be disregarded; that sin and forgiveness had to do with a realm of the spirit of man only tenuously related to the real facts of our real life on this earth. No single item of knowledge of man's psyche is unimportant. Ours is the obligation, since we profess belief in the immortal significance of persons, to know and to use all the scientific information and fresh insights into human behavior available.

The Christian gospel is not a substitute for knowledge; it is a deep conviction that at the heart of this universe there is a power of healing, of recovery, of transforming, redeeming love—the grace or, in other words, the unmerited goodness of God. It is this faith that inspires every effort to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, give shelter to the homeless, and proclaim by word and deed the ministry of reconciliation. The service we render in material ways is our witness to the grace of God. We are moved not just by altruism, fellow feeling, but by the forgiving love of God which has touched our hearts and moved our hands and minds.

Second, forgiveness alone can open up a significant future for the individual and for the race. Without forgiveness there is no significant future for us or for mankind. We are bound hand and foot by the habits of the past. It is an illusion, as William James pointed out, to suppose that when we sin as individuals or collectively we can deal with the situation by saying, "It won't count this time." It is counted, inevitably and relentlessly, by the cells of the human body and by the social complex of which we are a part. The terrible cycle recurs—sin and defeat for the individual; wars again and again for the race.

But if over this system of cause and effect there should flow a tide of forgiving, restoring, healing love, the whole look of life could be changed. New energy, fresh motivation, deeper insight would be available to deal with the laws of habit and the slavery to the past. Was this what George Fox experienced when he saw an ocean of darkness and death and then flowing over it an ocean of light and life?

Much of the devotional literature of our time stresses meditation and omits repentance and forgiveness. But to disregard the need for repentance and the good news of forgiveness is to miss the core of the gospel. Forgiveness is the supreme miracle. It is quite as unthinkable, for the mechanist, as walking on water or turning stones into bread. But upon this miracle the Christian takes his stand. He has known in his own experience the forgiveness of God; he undertakes with divine help to forgive his fellow men and to seek their forgiveness, strengthened by the faith this ministry of reconciliation is his mission in the world.—Reprinted from the American Friend.

THIS CHURCH HAS ITS OWN SCHOOL
by Mrs. Virgil Kaufman

"ARE YOU going to Bible School this year?" "I sure liked it last year."

Such are the remarks which children make to each other as the time for Daily Vacation Bible School at the Eden Church (Moundridge, Kansas) approaches. A week or two before school opens a large poster can be found in the hallway of the church. "Attend D.V.B.S. at Eden." The parents are also encouraged from the pulpit not to miss the great opportunity of having their children attend school.

Originally Bible School was conducted in the various district schools of our community. Someone suggested the church should sponsor a Bible school. It would have several advantages.

Several years ago a meeting of all the school-district board members was called to discuss the possibility of arranging a church-sponsored school to be conducted in the church basement. At the meeting it was decided to begin such a school for those people living in the vicinity of the church.

From this Beginning . . .

The work began with three teachers conducting three classes: primary or pre-school and grade 1; intermediate or grades 2, 3, and 4; advanced or grades 5, 6, 7, and 8. A teacher was also secured to teach music to all the grades. Many songs and choruses were learned by the children.

School hours were from 8:30 to 11:30 A.M., Monday through Friday for three weeks. The parents took turns bringing the children of their particular neighborhood to church. The parents cooperated very well and a total of fifty-one children were enrolled.

Enlarged to Five Classes

From this beginning the work has been reorganized so that there are now five classes conducted by five teachers: pre-school; grades 1 and 2; grades 3 and 4; grades 5 and 6; grades 7 and 8.

The study materials used are those published by the General Conference: workbooks consisting of stories; memory work; cut-outs; coloring; songs; and other interesting features. Each child buys his own workbook and at the close of school he proudly takes it home with him. Each teacher conducts her own music class. This is one of the most enjoyable times. The children love to sing songs and especially choruses. Most of the classes also take an offering every day for the work of one of the mission fields, usually the one which the class is studying.

The last day of Bible School is one of the highlights. The children are usually given a weiner roast or some special treat. In the evening of the same day the children present for their parents a Bible school program consisting of memory work, songs, and choruses. The program is always well attended, showing the interest of the parents. At this time a freewill offering is taken for the teachers who already have received great blessings working with the children. An approximate sum per child is usually suggested. After the program the parents are given the opportunity to look at the display of the children's workbooks, memory-work charts, cut-outs, etc. This proves very interesting and always encourages the child to do his best work.

Advantages and Disadvantages of a One-Church School

A school such as this does present some problems. Sufficient teachers are sometimes not too easily found. Perhaps the greatest problem is that of transportation for those who live quite a distance from church. The spiritual gain, however, far outweighs the material cost.

Yet a school operated by the single Mennonite church has many advantages. Here can be taught

Joys and Heartaches

by Alfred Wiebe

THE weekly prayer meeting had just closed. We had felt led during the day to pray that this might not be just one more prayer meeting, but that the Lord would do something special, either by reviving some indifferent Christian or by bringing some lost soul to the knowledge of salvation. Now the meeting had come to a close and, as far as we could see, nothing extraordinary had happened.

The people had left. We were taking down the gasoline lanterns and were ready to lock the church and go home likewise, when a car drove onto the church yard and Mrs. Hare, one of our Christians, followed by Edna (both names are changed), a young girl came into the church. As we looked at Edna's face it showed evidences of much crying.

Under Convictions

As we greeted them Mrs. H. said to us, motioning toward E. "I think she is under conviction." A little later Mrs. H. told us about as follows: "Edna came to my house this evening saying she would like to go to church. I told her my husband had gone away in the car and had not come back yet. Then E. said, 'I feel so bad. I am lonesome for my brother who is in the navy, and my mother is not well; she will have to go to the hospital. I feel like crying.' I told her, 'Cry.' Then we both knelt down and prayed. Afterwhile my husband came home and, as E. still wanted to go to church to have you pray for her, we came."

After asking E. some questions and dealing with, her, we were convinced that Mrs. H. was right; E. felt burdened with her sin. Being asked whether she were willing to confess her sins to the Lord and to ask forgiveness, she was quite willing to do that and in a longer prayer confessed her sins and called upon the Lord for mercy, praying earnestly for her mother and her brother. After dealing with her some more, she left, relieved in the assurance that her sins had been forgiven. At the prayer meeting a week later she gave a good testimony of having accepted the Lord as her Saviour. She came regularly for instruction preparatory for baptism and seemed to take real interest in the lessons.

What a joy it is for a missionary to be permitted to see such a work of grace performed in the heart of a person by the Holy Spirit. This far outweighs any toil and disagreeableness that the work brings with it.

How Painful!

How painful, however, to see such a one overcome by former habits and drifting away again. And one is inclined to ask, was the former experience not real? We firmly believe it was. But not having learned to rely on the Lord for strength, temptations became too strong. We feel sure that she will come back ere long.

Will you pray for her and for many other young people, as well as older ones. It is hard for us to realize how difficult it is for them to resist the temptations with which they are constantly confronted. Nothing but the power of the Spirit is able to give them the victory.

Turning Jungles Into Gardens

by S. T. Moyer

AS we returned from a short rest in the Himalayas the end of last August, we changed trains in Calcutta,—a city 600 miles distant. We were checking our luggage in the Howrah Station: beggers, wandering holy cattle, smells and flies added to the scenery. Incidentally I used the word "Jagdeeshpur" to the booking clerk. At once an Indian gentlemen standing by spoke up,—"Are you going to Jagdeeshpur? There is a famous sanatorium there." He had been a patient in our local hospital and had gone 600 miles for treatment —one of scores and hundreds who came daily as Herbert Dester, our missionary doctor, Nurse Elenore Schmidt, assisted by an Indian staff of about fifteen or more, serve in Christian love more than 10,000 each year.

In 15 years — The Gospel to 125 Villages

Last Sunday I rode out by bicycle to a little group of believers in Saraipoli. Because last term we had served in Janjgir, twelve years had passed since my last visit. What can the Gospel do in twelve years? The number of Christian homes had grown from two to six. They had prospered in the grace of God and in economic well being. In another village, Savitripur, I had found the same thing, where the number of homes of believers had increased from six to fifteen. There is something thrilling in seeing a church spread from only 25 villages as in 1935 to now embrace believers in more than 150 different villages, conquering sin, poverty, ignorance, gross darkness.

In the Midst of This Spreading Church

In the midst of this spreading church is set the Jansen Memorial Middle and High School, the work assigned to my wife and me for this term. Some of the best of the young people of all our churches in India, with a few outside our own churches, some 190 young people, are in residence. Here they study the full government course of study. But in addition, the Bible in all classes, scientific agriculture, printing, weaving, sewing, carpentry, and a full program in the local church, are enabling them to grow as did Jesus,—in body, in wisdom, and in favor with God and man.

Where Wild Fowl Danced—Today There Is Healing

Twenty-seven years ago, P. J. Wiens and I rode our bicycles along the fringe of our present plot, spying out the land. We found jungle. Where our garden now is, wild hogs rooted. The call of the spotted dear and growl of the panther were heard at night. The foot prints of tigers were seen in the morning. Wild pea fowl danced in the evening sun. Today in the name and power of Jesus Christ there is healing for body, mind, and soul. Is not this the program we see writ large across the pages of the Four Gospels,—healing, training leaders, teaching, lifting burdens, releasing captives, preaching the good news of salvation from sin through a Saviour?

Jacob H. Janzen 1879-1950

by C. Krahn

DEATH has removed the pen from the untiring hand of J. H. Janzen, and his lips have been sealed for this life. To many, in both the old and new world, he has ministered as writer, as teacher, and as pastor. On February 16, 1950, he was taken from our midst.

J. H. Janzen was a fearless seeker of truth—the Christian truth. We common people, having chosen or having been chosen for a calling in life, usually manage to say mostly those things which are advantageous to us and our chosen field. We quickly develop a sense for things which are "proper." J. H. Janzen too possessed this faculty, but there was another one more important to him—the desire to seek the truth and to express it with little regard as to whether it would mean for him a personal gain or a loss and whether it would be in harmony with that which is usually expected of a minister. A year ago he wrote:

"Nimmer erlösche dein Hunger nach Licht.
Wahrheit siegt, drum verzage nicht!
Lass dir den Glauben nicht rauben!"

In Russia, Janzen had been a teacher and was elected into the ministry. By the time he came to Canada, 25 years ago, he had established himself as a writer, a field in which he was a pioneer. Mennonites being tillers of the soil have produced few writers. Among those that will be remembered by future generations J. H. Janzen will be prominent.

Arriving in Canada at the age of approximately 45 he acquired mastery of the English language more readily than most people in a similar situation, and was thus enabled to serve repeatedly in various Mennonite congregations in the United States and write his articles in the English language. Thus he became well known and beloved by many. His last lecture tour in the United States was made a year ago when he served, as he had done before, at the Bethel College Bible Week.

The ease with which he learned the English language is only one demonstration that he remained an inquirer and a learner all his life. He remained young in spirit and was therefore understood by the young—a born educator. One only wishes that a man with his talents could have devoted his time and energy without constant struggle to earn his daily bread. The articles which he was sending to the editors of our papers up to the last day of his life illustrate that he was a hard worker. Janzen was ready to be called home by his Lord and Savior in whom he trusted in childlike faith, but he was not ready to "retire" as long as he could labor. In one of his last poems he expresses his readiness and his farewell as follows:

Der Winter treibt sein rauher Spiel,
Mir ist's zu kalt. Mir wird's zu viel!
Der Wintersturm heult hohl.
Lebt wohl!

Home Mission Work in Canada

by Henry H. Funk

"The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad." Ps. 126:3.

A LITTLE more than a year has passed, since the last report concerning the work at Carman, Manitoba, appeared. At that time we rejoiced that the Lord had given us a building in which we could gather for worship. As we look back upon the work since then we see how He has continued to bless the efforts of all those who have shared the labours in this portion of His great vineyard.

When mentioning the baptismal service, we come to the primary cause for our joy. During this time some twelve souls have been won for the Lord, among various age groups. Six of these were baptized upon confession of faith on Dec. 4 of last year. We were very happy to have G. G. Epp, of the Home Mission Board present at all the services of that week-end. Rich blessings were ours through his messages, and through his services in baptism, and in the Lord's Supper. Truly God was very near to us on that joyous, yet solemn occasion.

Another thing that causes us to rejoice is the fact that He has enabled us to complete the church auditorium. The pulpit, and the remainder of the pews have been constructed, and all the woodwork and walls have been painted. We are still looking forward to Sunday School and kitchen accomodations in the basement.

Another matter is the growth of the general church program. We began in July, 1948, by conducting weekly worship services. A few months later we were able to add a Sunday school for all age groups. Early that fall a choir and Christian Endeavor were organized. In the spring of 1949 the first class for catechetical instruction was started. In midsummer of the same year, the catechism class was replaced by a mid-week Bible study and prayer meeting. The year 1949 has also seen the first period of activity on the part of the ladies aid, which finished the season with a very successful mission sale. Special services have included two short evangelistic campaigns, a community song festival, a thanksgiving and mission festival, two communion services, and a baptismal service.

Surely God hath been gracious. We are thankful for the many local, as well as other people who have shared in the beginning of the work among the Mennonite people at Carman. Especially we would like to thank the Board of Home Missions, and through them the people whom they represent, for their assistance and encouragement. We would covet your prayers for Carman.

M. C. C. Annual Meeting

Chicago, March 17, 18

AKRON, PENNSYLVANIA.—The Annual Meeting of the M.C.C. which in past years has been held in early January, is called this year for March 17 and 18, at the Mennonite Home Mission, Chicago, Ill. On this occasion the work of the past year is to be reviewed and plans laid for the coming months. These sessions are open to any persons who find it possible to attend. The Friday evening session will be of particular interest to visitors and guests, since it will be inspirational in nature, consisting of testimonies of workers recently returning from the fields, and other items.

Prior to these main sessions on March 16 there are to be several sectional meetings, including a meeting of Mennonite College Peace Society representatives, a business meeting of the Mennonite Aid Section, and a meeting of Voluntary Service representatives from the conference groups with M.C.C. representatives. Likewise on the morning of March 17, the M.C.C. Peace Section, and the Home-for-Mentally-Ill Planning and Advisory Committee will meet.

All of these Annual Meeting sessions serve an important place in the ongoing work of the Mennonite Central Committee, as it is here that the various conference groups express their wishes regarding the services that are to be rendered on their behalf during the coming year.

Need for School Supplies

Requests have come from a number of M.C.C. children's homes and Community Center units as well as several Far Eastern Units, for supplies to be used in school activities. These materials are a rather essential resources in meeting rehabitation needs in children's homes, and in services to families having a number of children.

The following items have been requested: Paper (tablets, scratch pads, notebooks, construction paper, and drawing paper), pencils, pens and pen holders, blotters, colored pencils, chalk, small slates, crayons, paints and brushes, erasers, small pencil sharpeners, scissors, modeling clay, and color books without comic pictures.

Church leaders and parents are urged to assist children in making their contributions of some or all of the above listed items, sending them before May 12, 1950, to Children's Project, Akron, Pennsylvania, or Children's Project, 189½ King Street East, Kitchener, Ontario.

J. H. Langenwalter Completes Forty-eight Years Service

J. H. Langenwalter, who recently announced his retirement as minister of the Lorraine Avenue Church, Wichita, Kansas, completed forty-eight years of active ministry Sunday, February 19, 1950.

Born in Halstead, Kansas, and entering the ministry in our denomination which at that time chose its clergy by lot or election from among the untrained lay members of each congregation, Langenwalter was the first Mennonite minister west of the Mississippi River who had a professional seminary training. He attended Bethel, Baldwin Wallace, Hartford, Oberlin, and Harvard. Such preparation for the full-time ministry was regarded by many Mennonites then in Kansas as being a marked and dangerous departure from the accepted practices of what was strictly a rural church. The standards of the well-educated Menno Simons and other 16th Century founders of the sect had been lost through periods of persecution and migration and were then only beginning to be re-established.

Langenwalter continued to lead in the re-establishing of higher education in the Mennonite denomination. He became President of Bethel College from 1910 to 1911 and again from 1921 to 1925. He also was Dean of the Mennonite Seminary in Bluffton, Ohio. Langenwalter has served churches in Kansas, Ohio, and California.

In serving beyond the bounds of his denomination Langenwalter has been active in educational and religious circles in Wichita for many years prior to his return in 1945. He first went to Wichita as professor of Bible at Friends University in 1925. In 1928 and 1929 he served as pastor of the Grace Presbyterian Church. He was Executive Secretary of the Wichita Council of Churches from 1929 to 1931.

The Langenwalters have recently established a new residence at North Newton.

G. S. Stoneback of Fairfield, Pennsylvania, has been chosen as Langenwalter's successor in Wichita.—Excerpts from an article appearing in Wichita papers.

not only the fundamental truths of the Bible but doctrine and the Mennonite principles. Here the Conference mission fields can be studied. The local problems of the church can be discussed and will be of interest to all. The children have the opportunity to work and play with children who are very much like themselves. This provides for a unified fellowship of the children. Such a school operated by a single Mennonite church also builds the general teaching program of the church.

A one-church school also prevents classes from becoming so large that the teachers would not have enough time to give the needed personal attention to each child.

Surely many a child's heart has been touched in Bible School. One cannot always see the immediate results but God blesses the work and some day it will bear fruit.

Seminary Views Five Years Growth

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, February 22. The annual meeting of the Seminary Board of Trustees was highly significant because the Seminary is now in the fifth year of its operation. In his report to the Board, President Pannabecker said, "God has been good to us during these years; churches have contributed liberally and in general there has been a church-wide confidence in the work of the institution. Housing, staff, and students have been provided, and, with the many non-seminary residents, the institution has come to resemble a Mennonite student center. Let us pray that God may continue to guide and that each step may be directed by Him and taken in accordance with His will." In other parts of his report, he pointed to three items that were of special note. First, is the graduating class of nine during the commencement season of 1949, completing their full three-year training in this institution. Second, is the development of an attractive and useful unit of property here on Woodlawn Avenue in Chicago. Third was the increasing satisfaction which is coming after greater years of experience in the school, whereby it is no longer necessary to plan every move and face every question for the first time.

In his report to the Board, Marvin J. Dirks, director of practical work, pointed out that during the past twelve weeks our students preached 39 sermons, served 20 hours in weekday Bible school classes, utilized 92 hours teaching Sunday school classes, spent 22 hours in giving shorter talks and leading Young

THE need for a Christianity that makes one the keeper of not only one's brother but also one's neighbor, the world over, was stressed by President E. G. Kaufman in a stirring address in chapel recently.

Elmer Neufeld and Charles Minsch delivered speeches on temperance in a contest sponsored by the Women's Christian Temperance Union. Elmer Neufeld was judged the winner and as a result went to Emporia as a candidate for the state competition, March 1.

The department of speech and drama recently presented its second annual speech recital in the chapel. Readings were given by: Victor Krehbiel, Stanley Voth, Allen Linscheid, Lynette Waltner, and Kenneth Arlo Voth.

An appreciative audience attended a music recital given by James W. Bixel and Gertrude Hohmann Dyck, professors of piano and voice respectively.

An interesting story is told by Joseph Laskowsky, a recently arrived Polish student at Bethel, about conditions in his native county, his hairbreadth escapes during the last war, and about his acquaintance with Christian truth and acceptance of the Mennonite faith.

BLUFFTON HAS CHRISTIAN LIFE WEEK

THE theme of Christian Life Week, March 7-10, will be "Beliefs That Matter." The speaker is Herbert Fretz, pastor of the Deep Run church near Bedminster, Pennsylvania. Fretz was graduated from Bluffton College with the class of 1943. He taught a Bible course here during the summer term last year. The topics selected for his addresses are, "Born to Believe," "Practical Pointers for Prayer," "Thirsty Fountains," "Am I A Christian," "Your Neighbor's Neighbor," "Returning Home," and "Go Home, Young Man, Go Home."

Harry Yoder and Pres. Ramseyer were in Pennsylvania recently working in the interest of the Founders Hall Fund and calling on prospective students.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

AMONG recent speakers to our student body were: Laura Waltner, a graduate of Freeman who is at present engaged in child welfare work in Yankton; Erna Fast, relief worker in Europe for several years; President Miller in his monthly chapel talk to the group; and, Cornie Claassen, pastor of the E.M.B. Church.

Quarter exams were held last week. The spring quarter started on March 6. At that time the newly elected officers of the Student Association took over for the rest of this year and the first two quarters of next year.

The all-school play, "Pride and Prejudice," was presented by the dramatics department under Miss Kaufman's direction. The play was given on two nights.

Charles Emerson Boddie, Negro speaker, is scheduled to speak on Christianity and Freedom. This is another number in the Community Series sponsored by the College.

CANADIAN MENNONITE BIBLE COLLEGE

EACH year a course in homiletics (theory of preaching) is given, the homiletics students are given opportunity for actual practice. Every Thursday a homiletics student speaks during the chapel service. Addressing a student body with a sermon is proving a great benefit to the particular student and to the rest of the student body also.

The College presented a program in the Bethel Mission Church here in Winnipeg recently. Among the various musical numbers that were rendered, the lives and works of two great hymn writers were given.

The Universal Day of Prayer was observed at the College. Classes were shifted so that an extended period from 10:00 A.M. to 12:00 noon was given to devotion and prayer. Personal testimonies and various needs and problems of today were brought out in several short talks. After each talk prayer was held in which the needs and problems were remembered.

A catechism class of six adults and five young people was started in February.—M. E. Goering, Corr.

It Is Being Done

This is the second in a series of articles reporting on the efforts of various Conference churches along the line of lay-evangelism. As the Conference week of witnessing approaches other churches may want to plan similar efforts.

The Timid and Fearful Came Back Strangely Warmed

"OUR first Laymen Visitation Evangelism Program has been a success and we praise God." This is how the pastor of the Deep Run Mennonite Church of Bedminster, Pennsylvania evaluates an evangelistic effort by the lay people of his congregation. Careful preparations had been made by the pastor. He had preached a number of sermons explaining the methods of lay evangelism and pointing out the urgency of this work. He personally contacted twenty qualified laymen of his church and asked them to become "visitors" in this campaign. A survey of the general community of the church was made covering two townships. Only those homes were contacted in this survey where people were known not to be regular church attendants. From this survey came a "prospect list." In this list were people who had shown some interest and who needed encouragement.

Eight Teams of Two

In an evening meeting special instructions were given to sixteen "visitors." These sixteen laymen were divided into eight teams of two. Each team was given a number of prospect cards with the names of families on whom they were to call, and decision cards on which people might record their decisions. At the close of the meetings a final challenging consecration service was conducted for the "visitors."

"During the next two evenings, the eight teams visited their prospects. Late in the evening at the end of their visits they returned to the parsonage and handed in their prospect cards with the decisions written upon them. The firstfruits of our evangelism program were already evident in the reactions of our visitors. It was inspiring to see them come back, some who had been timid and fearful were now happy and strangely warmed by their visits. They had been received everywhere cordially; they had experienced the joy of sharing their faith; they had found many decisions. It is too early to properly gauge the permanent results of these decisions. Approximately ten families promised to attend our meetings. Three families have been attending regularly. The others have attended to some extent. Much follow-up visitation must now be done by the minister. Some will need more encouragement.

A New Sense of Daily Evangelism

"But even apart from definite fruitage, a wonderful blessing has come upon our people: a new sense of daily evangelism, a new desire to welcome strangers in our meetings (of which we have a considerable number), a new enthusiasm for serving our Lord Jesus Christ! Our first Laymen Visitation Evangelism Program has been a success and we praise God."

Comments by the Editor--"Security Has Gone a Bit Out of Hand"

This past week, there appeared emblazoned on the front page of a large city newspaper a headline saying that "Force Will Assure Peace." The same week a Christian journal divulged some top military secrets, namely: 1. Armament races end in war. 2. When military thinking becomes the exclusive kind of thinking brought to any international situation, it is hard to distinguish it from non-thinking. 3. An obsession for security can make everything insecure. 4. You cannot shoot an idea. Apparently, according to this writer, those are top secrets because they seem to be so utterly disregarded in high military ranks.

A number of years ago, I recall a teacher of philosophy say that there are two fundamental desires common to everyone. One is the desire for adventure which causes us to undertake many ventures. The other is the desire for security, which causes us to withdraw and seek a haven. It would seem, in our frightened age, the drive for security has gone a bit out of hand.

When you view that situation from Christian eyes, it becomes a bit startling. In the Garden of Gethsemane, Peter attacked the soldier with a sword, not for adventure's sake, but for security's sake. When the disciples were fearful, they were paralyzed and Jesus then reproved them saying, "Oh ye of little faith."

Just think if those who call them Christian today would be relieved of the paralysis of fear, and would be able to shoulder their cross in the faith of the Christ, the testimony that could be made would be tremendous. Instead, for security's sake, Christian peoples indulge in mutual slaughter.

When we carry the Gospel forth to the mission fields, to peoples of many lands, to our own associates, let it be the adventurous Gospel of Christ.—E.L.

AT Mabotsa occurred the attack of the lion, one of the best-known stories about Livingstone. There were so many lions in that region that "the people lived in the midst of lions." Several lions had attacked the cattle of the natives, jumping into the pen at night; and on the day of the attack had killed nine sheep on a hill just opposite the mission house. The natives thought they had been delivered over to the lions by witch-craft, probably exercised by the "witch doctor" of another tribe. If the lions could not be killed or driven off, the natives would lose faith in the missionary. So Livingstone took his double-barrelled, muzzle-loading gun and went with a number of natives to hunt lions.

"We found the lions," he says, "on a small hill about a quarter of a mile in length and covered with trees. A circle of men was formed round it, and they gradually closed up, ascending pretty near to each other." Apparently only Livingstone and a native schoolmaster, Mebalwe, had guns, the other natives being armed with spears. Being down below on the plain with . . . . Mebalwe . . . . I saw one of the lions sitting on a piece of rock within the now closed circle of men. Mebalwe fired at him before I could, and the ball struck the rock on which the animal was sitting. He bit at the spot struck, as a dog does at a stick or stone thrown at him; then leaping away, broke through the opening circle and escaped unhurt.

"When the circle was reformed, we saw two other lions in it; but we were afraid to fire lest we should strike the men, and they allowed the beasts to burst through also. . . . We bent our footsteps toward the village; in going round the end of the hill, however, I saw one of the beasts sitting on a piece of rock as before, but this time he had a little bush in front. Being about thirty yards off, I took a good aim at his body through the bush, and fired both barrels into it. The men then called out, 'He is shot, he is shot!' Others cried, 'He has been shot by another man, too; let us go to him!' . . . . But I saw the lion's tail erected in anger behind the bush, and turning to the people, said, 'Stop a little, till I load again.'

"Shook Me As a Terrier"

"When in the act of ramming down the bullets, I heard a shout. Staring, and looking half around I saw the lion just in the act of springing upon me. I was upon a little height, he caught my shoulder as he sprang, and we both came to the ground below together. Growling horribly close to my ear, he shook me as a terrier dog does a rat. The shock produced a stupour similar to that which seems to be felt by a mouse after the first shake of a cat. It caused a sort of dreaminess, in which there was no sense of pain nor feeling of terror, though quite conscious of all that was happening . . ."

"Turning round to relieve myself of the weight, as he had one paw on the back of my head, I saw his eyes directed to Mebalwe, who was trying to shoot him at a distance of ten or fifteen yards. His gun, a flint one, missed fire in both barrels; the lion immediately left me, and attacking Mebalwe, bit his thigh. Another man, whose life I had saved before, after he had been tossed by a buffalo, attempted to spear the lion while he was biting Mebalwe. He left Mebalwe and caught this man by the shoulder, but at that moment the bullets he had received took effect, and he fell down dead." In a letter written soon after the attack, Livingstone mentions a third native who threw a spear into the lion and hastened his death.

Wondering What He Would Eat First

When Livingstone wrote to his father about this attack he said: "You need not be sorry for me, for long before this reaches you I will be quite as strong as I ever was . . . Do not mention this to anyone. I do not like to be talked about." He says in Missionary Travels that he had intended to keep this story to tell to his grandchildren; but when he returned to England a few years later he found that people to whom he talked had heard of it, and were anxious to learn more details. A woman asked him what he was thinking about when the lion was shaking him, and he replied, "I was wondering what part of me he would eat first."

His wounds were much more serious than he had indicated in the letter to his father. He says "Besides crunching the bone to splinters, he left eleven teeth wounds on the upper part of my (left) arm."

There was one other white man at the station, and he and the natives did what they could for Livingstone. In a letter he said that he had to begin work on his house before he was healed of the wounds made by the lion, and "a partial false joint in the upper third of the humerus is the result." In other words, the bone did not knit together. All the rest of his life it was painful for him to bring his left arm above the level of his shoulder, and he could not fire a gun without resting it on some support.

When he was able to travel he went to Kuruman, two hundred and fifty miles south, for further treatment. By the following January he was able to ride a hundred and fifty miles farther south to meet the Moffats who were returning from England. It was on this trip that he fell in love with Mary Moffat, and they were married about a year later, in January, 1845, and went to housekeeping at Mabotsa.

After about two years at Mabotsa the Livingstones moved forty miles farther north and built another house at Chonuane. But this was a very dry country, near the Kalahari Desert, and a year later they moved another forty miles to the Kolobeng River where they built a third house. Here they lived for the next five years.

Versatility Incarnate

One of his biographers says: "A jack-of-all-trades, he is building houses and schools, cultivating gardens . . . . As a missionary he is holding meetings every other night, preaching on Sundays, and taking such other opportunities as he can find to gain the people to Christ; as a medical man he is dealing with the more difficult cases of disease; . . . as a man of science he is taking observations, collecting specimens, thinking out geographical, geological meteorological and other problems bearing on the conditions of the continent; as a missionary statesmen he is planning how the actual force might be disposed to the best advantage, and is looking round in this direction and in that, over hundreds of miles, for openings of native agents; and to promote these objects he is writing long letters . . . . to anyone likely to take an interest in his plans."

Writing of those busy days long afterwards, he said he did not regret anything "except that I had not . . . . devoted a special portion of my time to play with my children." Several of his children were born at Kolobeng; and never again did he have a house he could call his own, or opportunity to enjoy home life. But at Kolobeng when the busy day was done he was too tired to play.

While living at Kolobeng, Livingstone made several exploring trips, and discovered Lake 'Ngami. He even took his wife and children on some of them, traveling in ox-carts through a dry country where they suffered much from thirst.

Proper Treatment of the Blacks

Some of the white men living in the part of Africa were violently opposed to exploration and missionary work. Many of them wanted "to pursue, without molestation, 'the proper treatment of the blacks.'" This treatment meant forced labour—virtual if not actual slavery. One of them said, "We make the people work for us, in consideration of allowing them to live in our country." "Our country" was the homeland of the natives into which the white men had recently moved! One of the white leaders told Livingstone, "You must teach the blacks that they are not equal to us."

Livingstone found that trade with the natives quickly followed his exploring trips. He determined to find an outlet to the ocean. But Mrs. Livingstone and the children could not go with him on such a journey; so he took them to Cape Town, put them on board a ship bound for England, and then started back toward the heart of Africa. —Copyright 1949 all rights reserved.

Down from the Mountain

by Kenneth Morse

SANZIO RAPHAEL'S great painting of the transfiguration of Jesus combines two important truths that Christians dare not forget. The upper half of the painting pictures the exaltation of Jesus as he is lifted up and glorified by the light of God. The lower half of the picture shows the epileptic boy with his father and friends, illustrating the hunger and need of humanity.

It is often difficult for us to get these pictures together. We so easily separate service from adoration, forgetting that always they go together. In Raphael's picture Christ is the center, but your eyes go quickly from him to the picture of need. There is only one picture. Christ's glory does not exist apart from his ministry of service. And Christian service is meaningless and helpless if it forgets the One who prompts it.

There was another occasion when Christians left a mountain of vision and began to translate that vision into service. On the mount called Olivet the faithful friends of Jesus had a great experience. It was the last time their eyes looked on their Master before "a cloud received him out of their sight." Then they walked about half a mile to Jerusalem—to start life all over, facing danger, but challenged to be Christ's witnesses.

It may be only a short ride from the summer camp where you found new visions back to your home church with its problems and your home community with many more problems. But you may find it difficult to keep the inspiration and the job all in one picture. It will be easy to become impatient with people who think and act differently. But with a little effort you can begin putting "handles" to your dreams.

Several months ago a college girl went to a meeting called a "hill-top." It was a grand experience. She didn't want to leave and go back to the campus because she might lose the glow she found that beautiful fall week end. Six months later she went to another "hill-top" and again felt the glow of walking closely with God. But this time she was eager to get back to the campus. She had found ways of carrying the vision into each day's opportunities. Let us go often to the mountains where we find new horizons and new power. But let us return just as eagerly to our places of service, building the vision into everyday life.

Soul Winning

Suppose someone were to offer me $1,000 for every soul I might try to win to Christ. Would I endeavor to lead any more souls to Christ than I am doing now? It is possible that I would attempt to do for money, even at the risk of blunders or ridicule what I hesitate to do, or shrink from doing now, in obedience to God's command? Is my love of money stronger than my love for God or for souls? How feeble then my love to God. Perhaps this explains why I am not a soul winner.—Great Commission Prayer League.

Beyond Our Own

A slight rise in the number of Southern lynchings was noted for 1949 by F. D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee Institute this week. Three lynchings occurred, one more than 1948 and two over the 1947 total.

President Patterson reported that 17 persons— six whites and 11 Negroes—escaped lynch mobs last year, most of them through the protection of law officers.

The men lynched last year were all Negroes.—American Civil Liberties Union-News

WINONA LAKE, IND.—The Free Methodist missionary board, under the direction of Missionary Secretary Byron S. Lamson, has announced plans for building thirty-two major missionary projects at a cost of $100,000. The announcement was made by Dr. Lamson at the world missionary conference of the Free Methodist church in Rochester, N. Y., Jan. 5-8. Eleven of the units are being built in Osaka, Japan. Others will be located in India, China, Africa and South America. The program also includes a high school and college building to be built at Santiago, Dominican Republic.—United Evangelical Action

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—Blind war veterans in Chicago, Ill., are sending CARE packages to veterans in Germany, Italy, and Japan who likewise lost their sight in World War II. The action was taken after the veterans decided it was "the best way we know to help world understanding." —Watchman-Examiner

SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS in this country plan to visit 6,000,000 homes in 1950 with a mass visitation taking place on March 4, June 3, and September 2. Elder Lemuel E. the night cometh when no man can work."

We, as a church, have a high calling. We too must work the works of Him that sent us. He, who is the Head of the Church, has committed unto us a great work. The Church today has a mission to fulfill. Will we, when we come together at Freeman, in our General Conference, face honestly and courageously the work to which the Lord Jesus Christ calls us?

The tasks which confront the Church are many. There, however, is none greater than that of carrying the gospel of God's redeeming love to the people who know not of it. Jesus Christ has given us this commission, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." This is a task well begun but not finished.

As we together face the challenge of missions, we shall rejoice and give thanks that the Lord has prospered His work. We shall celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the opening of our work in India. Then as we look to the future and plan for the work of the years ahead, four facts must be kept clearly in mind: —1. There are open doors in many countries. This is a time of opportunity. 2. Young people from our churches are offering themselves to the Lord for His work. We dare not refuse them. 3. The resources in our churches are adequate for an enlarged missionary program. We have not reached our limit. 4. The promise of divine power was given and has never been recalled. "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

Board of Foreign Missions

THE CHRISTIAN ANSWERS

My Faith Looks Up by Russell Dicks. Westminster Press, Philadelphia. $1.50.

THIS is the first book in a series called "pastoral aid books" which are aimed at helping people to solve problems. My Faith Looks Up, a title suggested by the familiar hymn, is centered around the problem of emotional tension. By this the author seems to mean that lack of a feeling of well-being which many of us at times experience. By the poetic form, which the author feels is best adapted for mediating strong emotions, he deals with Christian answers to experiences of worry, guilt, fear, restlessness, and suffering. This is no superficial self-help book, however; it is a book with a strong Christian and liturgical base. The various sections are tied together by short articles in which the author in prose analyzes the problems and gives his understanding of the Christian answers to them.

Russell Dicks is eminently qualified for this task because of his long experience in ministering to the sick as a hospital chaplain, his wide experience as a pastoral counselor, and his previously successful publication of a collection of worship material particularly adapted for those in trouble through illness.

The insights in the book are in general better than the poetic form, which unfortunately tends at times to be self-conscious and wordy. Some will find the author's vivid and creative imagination helpful and stimulating; others may find it a bid jarring and earth-bound. The tying-together articles are a little too condensed to be easily understood, but are still valuable. It would be worthwhile to consider carefully the correctness of the persistent theme of the book that one gets relief from his problems by turning away from them to concentrate on the positive and constructive sides which are present in any situation. Many feel that this is lastingly effective only when one has first very frankly faced his problem and his negative as well as positive feelings toward it.

Those with problems, and those who like to think of life in terms of problems to be solved, will find this book helpful. It is a sincere attempt to bring worship into as close a tie with the every-day experiences of life as possible, by a man who has perhaps thought about this question as much as any Protestant today. Particularly interesting is the way that scriptural passages are related through poetry to present experience. This material is probably better suited for evening than for morning devotions. All through the book there is the sense of the living presence of God moving in and out of the troubled waters of experience.—Paul Albrecht

Dear Editor:

Like most Mennonite students in colleges away from Mennonite centers, I appreciate the weekly MENNONITE. It helps one keep in touch with all the projects and current thought of our denomination. However on reading the "Seminary News" in the February 28 issue, I was deeply hurt to think that my church would not understand the working of the Holy Spirit here, on Wheaton's campus. It is easy to analyze cooly from without and come up with an explanation but it is quite different to have been in the midst of God's outpouring of the Spirit and to have personally felt REVIVAL AND EVANGELISM are closely related, yet distinctive. The first applies to the church's concern for the vitality of its own life while the second represents the church's concern for those who have never accepted Christ. It is probably wrong to say that one is more important than the other. Before one who calls himself a Christian is prepared to go out in the task of evangelism—in fact, before he can even see the significance of winning others to Christ he, himself, must have had his own heart cleansed, and inspired by the Holy Spirit. On the other hand there is something quite irrelevant about such cleansing unless it is geared into the Great Commission. Revival without evangelism is like a huge locomotive oiled up, loaded with coal and water, and steaming past the freight cars on a merry ride. Evangelism without revival is like the same locomotive trying to pull the train without steam. Vision must lead to work; work must be directed by vision. As our churches look forward to Holy Week as a Week of Witnessing, they will do well to keep these two elements before them. Our churches will need revival before they can witness; this is of the very essence of the gospel which asks for sustained repentance. Repentance is the clue to an effective lenten ministry. It is beholding our sinful ways under the light and love and judgment of the cross. Yet at this point we are sure to encounter tremendous difficulty. It is the most unpopular thing in our time to admit shortcoming or guilt whether it be individuals, churches, institutions, schools of thought, or even nations. We would much rather close our eyes to our own sin and condemn the others. In the process we stop growing spiritually and write the sentence of doom over those God intended us to help. Some feel repentance violates the personality. On the contrary it is of the very essence of growth in the sight of God. We cannot help a lost world if our lives are contaminated by the lostness of that world. Let us pray that our churches and institutions may experience the cleansing of a Pentecost; let us pray that they may search their hearts under the light of Calvary and the life and teachings of the Son of God rather than succumb to the temptation of picking the flaws in others in self-righteous self-defense. This alone will prepare for an effective Week of Witnessing during Holy Week.

MUTUAL-AID is the baby of the Conference Boards, being set up at General Conference at Newton in 1945. The report in this issue, (see p. 170), however, reveals that this board has been doing a helpful piece of work. We must not neglect those that are "of the household of faith." Furthermore, this work has evangelistic implications. The Old Mennonites in helping locate families and newly married young couples encourage them to move into an area neglected by the church and thus raise high the banner of the gospel. But this work like other conference projects needs the active support of our people. We have well qualified men to carry on this work; let us free their hands to work, with loans and gifts for their working capital and gifts for their expenses. Has your church had an offering for Mutual Aid? Have you as an individual considered the possibility of loaning the price that you may be planning to pay for that next eighty acres or quarter section of land, to the Mutual Aid Board so that they in turn can loan it to someone, who is living on a rented farm that is for sale and experiencing all the insecurity that involves, so that such families may get a secure start?

THE MANPOWER ACT under consideration by the House Armed Services Committee as analyzed on page 178 of this issue must not be confused with the bill to extend Selective Service. Selective Service legislation has always had the objectionable feature of the actual call-up. The Manpower Act while not having this feature is much more far reaching in its implications, and thus more subtle. It represents one more possible step toward the very type of regimentation which this country has always maintained it was against.

PAUL SAYS the body is the temple of the Holy Spirit. A temple is a place set aside especially for people to meet God. Thus our bodies are sacred; they are sacred or set apart to the particular god we worship. It may be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ or it may be the god of passion, pride, self-centerednes, materialism or others. If our bodies, then, are the temples of the living God through which others are to see, not ourselves glorified, but God glorified in our bodies, it is highly important that we know how we are to live and what we are to do to our bodies if they are to be temples in the fullest sense of the term. This conviction immediately gives rise to a concern about the kind of disproportionate amount of attention (much of which serves to glorify self rather than God) that is being devoted the body. We are being sold on a false beauty to such an extent that even such a woman of the world as Dorothy Dix has the following to say about the habits of women, the underlying principles of which apply as well to men:

"When I read the daily beauty columns in the papers and magazines which tell how by watching their diets and counting their calories, taking knee exercises or rolling on the floor, the ugly ducklings can change themselves into glamorous swans, I marvel that the high priests and priestesses of the beauty cult never give their clients the one tip which really will work and get results.

"And that is to spend as much time and effort in furbishing up their souls as they do in acquiring a girlish figure. For, after all beauty is a thing of the mind as well as of the flesh. But you never hear of a high-tempered woman having the wrinkles massaged out of her disposition, or of a peevish and fretful one spending good money to have her spirits lifted. Yet if they did, what a furor it would create among their friends! How they would wonder what Sally had done that made her suddenly look sweet and pretty! How they would

by Arnold Nickel

THE most important task of the Christian Church is evangelism—the task of bringing the Gospel of Jesus Christ to the world and of bringing the world to Jesus Christ. Upon this fact the Christian church has been agreed since its very beginning, although it has often been the most neglected point of emphasis.

Evangelism—Now

Since the Reformation the Protestant Church has been subjected to the entire gamut of evangelistic efforts, from the use of tracts strewn carelessly upon sidewalks and highways, to the mass revival meetings conducted by professional evangelists in the larger cities of our land. Printed literature on this subject has been profuse and professional evangelists have been plentiful, yet never before have the efforts to spread the Gospel seemed so inadequate and ineffective.

Another apparent trend is the growing dissatisfaction with the evangelistic efforts of the established denominations and churches. Unfortunately, this feeling of dissatisfaction has made great inroads into our own denomination. The historic tradition of evangelistic methods in the Mennonite Church does not stress the lure of the dramatic, neither the traumatic public experience and expression, nor the count of many numbers who have gone to the "front."

Evangelism—Then

Our program of evangelism must find its standard and direction in the Biblical teaching as set forth in the New Testament. Whatever deviates from its message and program must be considered as unwholesome and without the sanction of Jesus Christ. How does the work of evangelism appear in the New Testament Church? How does the present-day Protestant work of evangelism compare with that of the New Testament? May we direct our thinking on three broad but evident areas—the message, the messengers, and the methods of evangelism, then and now.

The Message

The message of the Gospel remains the same "yesterday, today, and forever." The message is centered on the life, work, and death of God's only Son, as summarized in I Corinthians 15:1-4. The Apostles preached a positive message which they received from their Lord. Their messages were concerned primarily with two important matters—the sinfulnes of man and the righteousness of God. Thus their task was to make known the work of reconciliation as established through Christ for all. They reasoned with the people and declared the Lord of Life wherever they went. The real message of the Gospel does not rely upon fiery and fictitious stories or upon so-called religious songs sung to the popular tunes of the day. Too often men have supplanted the Gospel of Christ by their own craftiness, thinking thereby to win many more for Christ. The end should never justify the means, and man's contrivances should never take the place of the Gospel as given to us in the New Testament. The teachings of Jesus and the sermons and letters of the Apostles must become an integral part of every Christian life and message if the task of evangelism is to culminate in final triumph.

The Messengers

The messengers of God must meet certain basic requirements if the work of evangelism is to be instrumental in reconciling the world to Christ. The evangelists of the early Church were well-trained. Christ Himself selected and taught his disciples, who were later to become leaders in the Church. Paul was a learned man in the Grecian schools and also a distinguished rabbi in the school of Gamaliel. The Great Teacher has never put a prize on ignorance, neither has He ever opposed the art of learning. It is Jesus' desire that His messengers be Spirit-filled, learned in the things of God, and experienced in the Christian walk. In his booklet on Christian Peace, the late C. Henry Smith makes the observation that too many of our ministers and leaders are trained in short cut courses in non-Mennonite schools, and that there is no surer or quicker way to drive out the distinctive Mennonite principles than through such a method of training our leadership. Christian education and evangelism must of necessity advance together in the work of the Kingdom.

Furthermore, the messengers of the first century Church were devout men whose lives proclaimed the message as loudly as did their words. Paul's words to King Agrippa are words spoken to us, "I would to God, that whether with little or with much, not thou only, but also all that hear me this day, might become such as I am." (Acts 26:29). Many religious leaders, apparently in the work for the Lord, have lost the effec-

In Berne

A Marvelous Moving of the Spirit

by Olin Krehbiel

THERE has been a marvelous moving of the Spirit of God in the community of Berne, Indiana, since the New Year. Last fall the ministers, serving the five congregations in town and three in the country, met together for prayer and planning for a union revival campaign. It was recognized from the beginning that man cannot by mere publicity and human effort produce a revival. Much prayer ascended to God that the Holy Spirit might assume the leadership and come upon men in convicting power.

Prayer and Lay Visitation

For a month in advance, members of the various churches gathered in cottage prayer meetings over the town and in the country. Then every home within a five-mile radius of Berne was visited and invitations were extended for people to attend the services. There were meetings with the personal workers to instruct them how to deal with seekers in the inquiry room. The meetings were held from January 1-15 and our prayers were answered above our expectations.

I have never seen anything like it before in my life. There were decisions every night. They came from all over the auditorium of their own free will. It was surprising to see how many came from far up in the back balcony, down the stairs, up to the front, and into the inquiry room. There were over three hundred recorded decisions and half of these were for salvation. Others were for restoration, assurance, victory over sin, and dedication.

The attendance was very good, even when there was bad weather and basket ball games. The last week the church was filled to capacity and on Sunday nights there were overflow crowds, with people standing around the sides and some three hundrd listening in over speakers in the basement.

In Factories—Prayer Groups

Each night there were four groups meeting in preservice prayer. The adults were divided into two groups, men and women, while the young people found one room too small and so they divided into one group for the boys and one group for the girls. Then in the local school as high as sixty girls met over the noon hour for prayer. In the factories there were prayer groups, meeting. Each noon the ministers came together for prayer and the result was that many people came under conviction.

P. J. FRIESEN, 1870—1950

On February 20, one of the earliest residents of the Mountain Lake, Minnesota, community P. J. Friesen was laid to rest. He was one of the few still living that came here 75 years ago and knew of the hardships of those pioneers years.

His activities included membership in the hospital board, membership in the church school board, for fifteen years he was secretary of the local ministerial conference and for nearly 35 years one of the ministers of the Bethel Church.

He passed away February 16 at the local hospital, after a severe illness of twelve days.

Saved at a Sewing Machine

A Japanese man and wife were converted, also a Mexican girl. A whole family found the Lord—father, mother, and two sons. Some of the ministers were called by telephone at night and persons were saved. People made decisions of their own accord in their homes. One day as I was walking along the street in Berne, I was called into a factory, for a young lady by her sewing machine wanted to be saved. A boy and then a girl from the school came over to the parsonage at the noon hour, being under conviction and desiring salvation. The girl had not even been to the meetings. There were people who made restitution for wrongs, money was restored, some asked for forgiveness and began speaking to people with whom they had not been on speaking terms. One of the high school teachers told us he could feel a different spirit in the school and that two girls had come and confessed to cheating in an examination. Since the meetings our regular church prayer service attendance has increased fifty per cent.

Getting People Right With God

The evangelist was Harold Walker, a young man, not of national renown, but mightily used of God. He stuck strictly to the subject of getting people right with God and did not touch on such subjects on which churches differ doctrinally. He did not use objectionable methods nor unduly prolong the services. The song leader, gave able assistance in the song services and also in leading people to Christ. Miss Louise Kimmel, who is an excellent children's worker, conducted meetings for those from four to twelve years of age, in which there were as high as three hundred and fifty in attendance. Ira Gerig, pianist, thrilled the audiences with his playing while the people assembled. The special music numbers and organists were supplied from local talent. The result of these meetings has been that the church people of the community have been brought closer together.

The churches and pastors which co-operated were the First Mennonite (Olin A. Krehbiel), the First Missionary (J. Pritchard Amstutz), the Trinity Evangelical United Brethren, the Cross Evangelical and Reformed, the Church of the Nazarene (J. R. Shadowens), the West Missionary, the Bethel Brethren, and the Evangelical Mennonite.

We give all the glory to God for it was His doing and it was marvelous in our eyes. We counted it a privilege to have seen this manifestation of the Spirit at work in our midst. Knowing that there are yet quite a number who need the saving grace of the Lord Jesus, we are planning to have union meetings again next year.

A Venture in Cooperation

A Community Summer Bible School

by Elva Schrock

OURS, is a small city (Nappanee, Indiana) with many churches, it therefore follows that most of the churches are small. We have an organized Council of Christian Education consisting of the pastor and one lay member of each church, the chief responsibility of which had been to provide for a program of weekday teaching of the Bible to the children of our schools.

How Was It Begun?

During a discussion of ways in which the service of Christian education might be extended outside the school year a city-wide summer Bible school was suggested. Only two churches had been having summer Bible schools. Both were attracting children from all churches, and both were crowded to capacity, while hundreds of children remained unreached. Most of the churches felt themselves too small and lacking in leadership to attempt a school. A few people caught a vision of the possibilities of a united effort, and a committee was appointed to formulate plans and present them to the churches for approval. With one exception, the churches voted full cooperation.

How Is It Organized?

At the December meeting of the council a planning committee is elected. This committee assumes full responsibility for the school, formulates the objectives and policies, and appoints the director and other committees. Each cooperating church is responsible for recruiting workers, both teachers and assistants, and for securing advance enrollment of their children. There are four inter-church committees; a curriculum committee which chooses the course of study and materials, including mission-study emphasis and service projects; a committee on personnel which receives names of teachers, places them, appoints the directors of centers, and recruits more workers if necessary; an organization committee which decides on churches to use as centers, contacts the boards of same for permission, and assists in preparing each center for use; and, an enrollment committee which distributes the cards to the churches, collects them, and classifies them for final organization.

We set up our centers in different sections of town and children are encouraged to attend the center nearest their home. At each center we place teachers and assistants from various churches. We have found it wise to secure the director of each center from the church used; both because they know the physical plant of the church, and also because, knowing the policies of the church, they will keep the atmosphere acceptable to its members.

Our school has been financed by voluntary offerings. They have been more than sufficient, but in the event they will not be, the council treasury will assume responsibility for the deficit.

Are There Problems?

An interdenominational program has its own distinct problems along with those common to the organization of any school. Even though all churches vote cooperation, there is a difference in the degree in which they give that cooperation. In some churches workers are promptly recruited and their names given to the committee, the idea is sold to the parents, and complete advance enrollment of children is secured; in other churches these things are accomplished only after repeated prodding by the director or committee members. The contact work necessary requires a vast amount of time, and in spite of it there is more active promotion in some churches than in others.

Care must be taken in formulating the curriculum; obviously no one person can insist upon the use of the materials of his denomination; many must be examined and an impartial selection made. For a committee to examine courses, choose with a continuing program in mind, and also choose those best for the use of teachers with varied degree of training and experience, is no easy task.

It is difficult to plan for adequate leadership preparation since so many people are involved, all of them busy people with many interests. We set as a minimum standard: one general meeting of all workers, a meeting of the workers at each center, and group meetings of the teachers of each age group; but, we haven't been able to

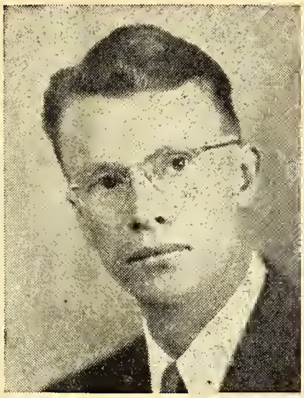
by Arnold J. Regier

"And they sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, Great and marvelous are thy works, O Lord God, the Almighty, righteous and true are thy ways, thou King of the ages." (Rev. 15:3, A.R.V.).

THE centrality of sacrifice is to be found everywhere in the Book of Revelation. Beyond the sacrifice, however, is the song. In the midst of wrath there is mercy, and in the presence of judgment there is the praise of the overcomers. The songs of the redeemed call forth praise, honor, and glory to the Lamb that was slain for the remission of sins, and who gave victory over the evil forces of this earth.

The imagery of the fifteenth chapter of Revelation unites in eternal celebration of those who were brought through the Red Sea after the first Passover with those who know the victory of the cross. These triumphs are expressed in song. The song of the Lamb is a celebration of redeeming love of which the experiences of Israel during its exodus were but a feeble type. It renews the memory of God's redemptive work through all ages.

As we again commemorate the suffering of our Lord and enter into the spirit of this Lenten season, let us not forget the Song of the Lamb. Despite sorrows, hardships, and trials on this sin-cursed earth, the Christian is given the assurance that these judgments are for a higher purpose. Beyond these evil days, faith tells us, there is an eternal purpose which can best be expressed in song.



Arnold J. Regier
President, Canadian Mennonite Bible College

The Song of the Lamb Is a Song of Triumph

Let us return in our mind's eye to the scene of Israel's triumphal march through the Red Sea. They saw the dangers of the sea wall surrounding them and were conscious of their enemies and persecutors pursuing them with great force. Fear filled their hearts. Yet the God of their fathers now came to their rescue, and after they reached the shore they saw the utter destruction of their enemies. Moses spoke forth a song of deliverance; a song not to celebrate their powers and achievement, but to honor the God of their salvation and their strength.

The Christian today as he walks through the Red Sea is also encompassed by the high water of physical perils and by the surging forces of evil seeking to overtake him. Yet as he walks through the dry sea he becomes more and more aware of the fact that God's protecting hand is held over him and when he reaches the distant shore he comes to the full realization that it is God who has given him the victory over his enemies.

As we study the song of Moses in Exodus 15 we notice that though it was a song of triumph it was not one of scorn toward the enemies. The eyes of the Israelites were directed toward their Redeemer. It contains the first mention of salvation in the Old Testament. The redemptive message of this great song can well be regarded as prophetic of that song which all of God's children sing today. We would join Moses in singing: "Thou in Thy loving kindness hast lead the people that thou has redeemed: thou hast guided them in thy strength to Thy holy habitation." (Exodus 15:13).

The Song of Triumph Is Being Sung Synonomously With the Plagues of the Sixteenth Chapter

The Song of the Lamb gives us assurance that there is something beyond the trials of the hour. Too often we think that the song will break forth only when Christ has vanquished the forces of evil. This is not the message that the Scriptures, especially the fifteenth and sixteenth chapters of Revelation, tell us.

Previous to the Reformation great spiritual darkness had engulfed most of Germany. Famine and pestilence weakened the people. Pope Innocent VII declared a papal bull proclaiming that Germany was filled with witches. Constant danger of invasion by the Turks stood at their door. Superstition and fear engulfed the hearts of the peasants. Out of this period we see arise an Erasmus who held a great vision which prepared the soil for the Reformation movement. He expressed his faith in a redemptive song by saying, "I long that the peasant should sing the Scriptures to himself as he follows the plow, that the weaver hum them to the tune of the shuttle, and that the trader should beguile with them the weariness of the journey."

Our M. C. C. relief workers tell us of incidents when our refugees came into the detention camps in Denmark who, even under trying conditions, would burst forth in the singing of the great chorales. These great hymns of the church have been a great inspiration to our people in time of persecution and distress. They have helped our people raise their eyes from the hardships of the hour to the Lamb of God who once bore their sins on the cruel cross of Golgotha and who now can give them fresh strength and courage.

Have we a song ready when the dark hours strike? Are we able to join those who have overcome in the song of the Lamb? Do we have sufficient faith to see beyond the dark clouds of sin and destruction even in our day?

A child of God can see more on his knees than can a philosopher on his tiptoes.

The Reader Says

the cleansing within. I have resignedly shrugged my shoulders as the newspapers misrepresented the power of God, for "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." (I Cor. 2:14). But it seems also that Christians who themselves did not realize this moving of the Spirit within their hearts cannot understand either. So it would seem that Mr. Thomson apparently came merely to "witness," not to partake in God's work and thus it is very logical that there should be errors in the summary of what was transspiring.

First, revival is not a tradition at Wheaton. Tradition is a practice or convention handed down by men. Revival is a sweeping of the Holy Spirit and quite without the reach of man. God has seen fit to send Wheaton three revivals seven years apart. No student spends seven years at Wheaton so that he would be "accustomed to this particular form of religious expression." Too, I find no account of the work of the Holy Spirit in the summary. Revival is not an experience. It is a person—Christ and the probing of God.

Then it was not alone the "conflict of fundamentalist commitment in the modern culture," and did not center especially around the Wheaton pledge—not to drink, dance, smoke, and attend theaters and other questionable amusements. But the lust of the eyes and the pride of life too, were confessed. Injustices to students and faculty, spiritual pride, spiritual hypocrisy, hatreds, gossip, cheating, deceit, and lack of love for lost souls. If this cleansing had been tradition we would not have confessed everything that we did, for we would have said, "I'm not so bad." I sat from 7:20 to 1:20 marvelling at what God was doing in others' hearts, waiting for an experience or an emotion and saying just that. But when I prayed once again that the Spirit should search my heart it was not possible to rationalize away sin or say, "how insignificant," because when the Spirit works, God calls sin—sin, with no degrees of it, and demands that every wrong be righted. There was no shouting, nor crying aloud, nor anything unseemingly, only the deep solemnity and awe of the presence of God and the deep searching of His Spirit into our hearts.

In the editorial column was stated that we find no confession of social sins. How can this come until one's heart is right with God first, his individual neighbor next, and then society; until God is not only indwelling but also infilling; until the Holy Spirit is not only resident but also President. God said: "Your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid His face from you, and he will not hear." (Is. 59:2) and "If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways, then will I hear from heaven and will forgive their sin and will heal their land." (II Chron. 7:14).

As a fellow Mennonite, one who has not merely accepted the doctrine but also examined it in the light of scripture and become convinced that it is God's way for a Christian, I prayerfully suggest that we cannot speak of the love of God, the life of non-resistance in time of war, and duties to society until we feel the compulsion of His love in our hearts, not only in the rationale, to every one of our neighbors; till everything is right between every man and us. We cannot speak of God's love and forget His Almighty Holiness; for God reads more than lips and reason—He reads hearts. God never speaks to crowds—He speaks to individuals. It is my earnest prayer that we will be cleansed and find the joy and peace that passes human understanding which prevades since God's great visitation at Wheaton; that none of us, laymen or ministers, will ever reach the try to find out what magic pill or potion had made Mary a gay young girl again!

"If this seems a fantastic theory, think what constitutes beauty to you and me. It isn't classical feature. It isn't a Greek profile, golden hair, or a peaches-and-cream complexion. It isn't even violet eyes. It is something in a woman's face which bespeaks a lovely character, something that comes from the heart and not out of jars and bottles.

"No amount of mascara, eye shadow, and false lashes can make beautiful the eyes that are cold and hard and cruel. You can paint a cupid's bow on a mouth with lipstick, but you can't make it kissable unless it is soft and quirked with love.

"Then there is intelligence, without which there can be no real beauty. At most, there can only be the fleeting prettiness of extreme youth which just lasts an hour and then is gone forever. It is only the women who have brains, who have culture, who have humor, who have personality who are never ugly, no matter what sort of an assemblage of features they have, and who grow better looking the older they are.

"Yet nobody tries to teach little bobby-soxers that the real beauty shop is in the schoolroom, and that the surest way of improving their looks is by getting a good education. It would dry the weeping eyes of countless teen-agers if they could be made to realize that a good set of brains is a more valuable asset than a good complexion, and that a clever, homely woman can make herself the most fascinating woman in the world.

"No beauty operator would think of advising a client to quit nagging her husband in order to get that hard straight line out of her mouth; to spend her evenings at home with her children instead of at bars and night clubs to develop that lovely, brooding mother look in her eyes; or to make her hands so beautiful by doing good deeds that the poor and sick and afflicted would want to kiss them. But it is a prescription that would work, for no woman who is hard and selfish is ever pretty.

"The beautiful women are those whose souls shine through their faces like light through an alabaster vase."

It is a personal obligation to make ourselves attractive. But the methods we use are determined by our choice of making ourselves a temple for others to worship us or God through us. If we are concerned about the latter then we will place a premium on the condition of the soul, the heart, the intelligence, and the temperament. And for the beautifying of these we have no better prescription than soul-saving, life-changing, and personality-enhancing Gospel of our Lord.—J.J.E.

M. C. C. Serves in Both Formosa and Chinese Mainland

AKRON, PENNSYLVANIA. The relief program in Formosa is being reorganized to provide a better opportunity to give more distinctively the Christian emphasis in helping the mountain people of the island who need medical care.

The continuing program as envisioned by Glenn Graber, director, will center in an established base clinic directed by the M.C.C. and employing necessary native staff members of Christian character. Here people can come for more thorough medical treatment, for follow-up work and for emergencies. From this center, smaller outposts can serve in more distant surrounding villages.

Hengyang Orphanage to Continue

A cablegram from Shanghai confirms that the M.C.C. may continue operating the Hengyang orphanage in China. Some concern had been felt when it appeared for a time that the private operation of the orphanage might not be permitted. Many of the children in this home have responded very favorably to the Christian teaching of the staff, among whom are Mr. and Mrs. James Liu and Theodore Ku, Chinese Mennonite Mission converts, who have given much assistance in M.C.C. work in China.

C. O.'s and Citizenship

A U.S. Supreme Court decision on Feb. 20 confirms that persons conscientiously opposed to all forms of military service may nevertheless become citizens of the United States. Martin Cohnstaedt, who came to U. S. in 1937, applied for citizenship but was refused on the grounds that he failed "to show an attachment to the principles of the Constitution . . ." Cohnstaedt, a Quaker, claims a position of conscientious objection to both combatant and noncombatant service, corresponding to the IV-E position. The Kansas Supreme Court concurred that he was ineligible for this reason. The U. S. Supreme Court has now reversed this ruling by a 5 to 3 decision; Justices Black, Frankfurter, Jackson, Burton, and Minton supporting Cohnstaedt and Chief Justice Vinson and Justices Reed and Clark dissenting.

In 1946 the U. S. Supreme Court had ruled that James Louis Girouard, holding essentially the noncombatant CO position, was eligible for citizenship, since the required commitment of willingness to defend the Constitution was interpreted as not necessarily meaning defense by arms. The decision was interpreted to apply in several cases of IV-E conscientious objectors, including some Mennonites although the interpretation was not explicit in the ruling, and depended somewhat on the attitude of the official administering the law. The Cohnstaedt decision confirms that conscientious objectors to all forms of military service may nevertheless be sincere and loyal citizens.

Clothing Distribution "Plus"

Oldenburg, in the Schleswig-Holstein province of Germany, was recently the scene of a typical M.C.C. clothing distribution. This town has been a haven for thousands of refugees—in fact the refugee population now is double that of the pre-war residents. The housing problem is acute, and unemployment is an even more serious problem. A school room was used as the distribution room, to which people from the city and nearby villages came by foot, by horse and wagon, or in some cases on trucks provided by the city. In three weeks about 1500 families were helped with clothing. Attempt was made to give the articles where it would help the most and also to give according to the size of family, income, living circumstances, etc. Names of the needy families were selected by German welfare agencies.

The workers on the field also feel that along with material help, there is a spiritual contribution to be made by Christian relief work. Many people have fallen into a hopeless attitude, and to help them to a new view of life, is a significant aspect of relief.

Mental Health Notes

A number of Voluntary Service workers are needed to help in the construction work at King's View Homes, the M.C.C. mental hospital being built at Reedley, California. Service term would be from three to 6 months.

A periodic news sheet is written by the M.C.C. Mental Health Section and is available to anyone interested in this work. The newsletter will report progress in the work at Brook Lane Farm, the M.C.C. hospital near Hagerstown, Maryland, and the construction work at Kings View Homes, in California; it will also carry items of interest in the general mental health field.

Building operations at Kings View Homes, Reedley, California, are going ahead favorably. Thus far the foundation has been completed and the rough plumbing beneath the floor is being installed. Local Mennonite congregations are giving helpful assistance in the work.

The Brook Lane Farm Advisory Committee met on Feb. 8 to review and evaluate the operation of this M.C.C. hospital to date. For a number of weeks the enrollment has been at full capacity, which is 23. The rate of admissions has been about 15 patients per month, with the average period of hospitalization correspondingly short. Effort is made to receive patients as early as possible and to apply immediate treatment. In instances where longer hospitalization would probably not result in recovery or improvement, the case is referred to another appropriate hospital.

Colonies Expect Good Crop

Recent reports from Paraguay give particularly encouraging word regarding the crops this year. The Chaco colonies have had more rain than usual during this growing season, and grasshoppers which had threatened were successfully controlled by poisons provided in advance. Since the life of the colonies is so closely related to agriculture, and the economic margin quite narrow, the success or failure of one crop is of considerable significance to them.

"I Had to Borrow Every Cent"

reported by J. Winfield Fretz

WHEN I was released from C. P. S., I didn't have a thing by which to get started, and by that I not only mean money, but any other personal property outside the personal necessities. I had to borrow every cent I used to buy machinery and seed to put out my first crop. Yes, the Lord has indeed been gracious unto us, and we are deeply thankful for all we have received. May we be worthy of His goodness and with His help invest our talents wisely. Thanking you again for the assistance you have given us in establishing our security and our home." (The Husband)

"Incidently, that loan was quite important to me too; my husband told me it meant our getting married when we did or waiting quite some time to get a bit of financial independence. Thanks a lot!" (The Wife)

As an evidence of the use to which your money given or loaned to Mutual Aid has been put and the appreciation by those who have been helped with this money, we would like to give a brief summarized report of the activities and summarizations of testimonies from some of the young men who have repaid their loans and who have expressed their appreciation for this help.

We believe that the Board of Mutual Aid serves a new and important function in the total work of our conference and we hope that you too, will share this conviction.

Requests For Exceed Ability to Help

Our board is trying to operate the program on sound business principals. We are making loans to young men who generally would not be able to secure credit at other credit agencies. We stand ready to repay all loans for which we are responsible as they come due. Our permanent revolving fund is, however, very small and for that reason we need to constantly secure new loans or renew old ones. The request for assistance of this type is far in excess of the loans we can grant. We endeavor to grant loans in the order of their request and on the basis of their merit.

WORDS OF APPRECIATION FROM SOME OF THE YOUNG MEN WHO HAVE BEEN HELPED BY MUTUAL AID

A Feeling of Responsibility to Such a Church

Hillsboro, Kansas

"My getting a loan from Mutual Aid was important to me because I was in need of a car to drive to work since I was living in the country with my folks. I had little money to make a down payment so it would have been difficult to get a loan elsewhere. The combination of a low rate of interest and the convenient rate of repaying the loan were a great asset to me because it enabled me to get a start financially. Men getting Mutual Aid tend to develop a greater interest and feeling of responsibility for the church. It has a unifying effect."

Tangible Evidence that the Churches Cares

Trenton, Illinois

"To receive a loan as we did through the church has been tangible evidence that the church has recognized a definite need and has sought to meet that need. More than that, it has helped me to realize my responsibility to the church and her work. I see young people lost to our church through inability to finance the purchase of farms or farm equipment. I realize that this would require large amounts of money over a long period of time; however, it seems to be a definite need."

That Brotherly Attitude

Congerville, Illinois

"It pleased me very much that the conference had a program whereby they could make loans to C.P.S. men to help them get started. It is carrying out that brotherly attitude which binds us closer. I want to again thank you for the interest and assistance you have given me, and will be glad to help in any way I can."

It Meant a Start for Me

Inman, Kansas

"I appreciated it very much and a lot more than just the difference between a low and high rate of interest. Definitely, it meant a start to me. As my father died about 2½ years before the end of the war, and I was forced to support myself, I ran up a debt of $900 for expenses and including trips home for sicknesses and death and also an auto accident I was in. I decided to try custom combining. Needing money, though, to get started, I tried to borrow but couldn't, until I was told to try the Board. I did and am happy to say I got the loan, which gave me my chance of paying off that debt and also my loan the same year."

WHAT THEY SAY ..... about The Handbook to the Mennonite Hymnary

"The Reverend Lester Hostetler, minister of the Bethel College Mennonite Church at North Newton, Kansas, has written a handbook to accompany the Mennonite Hymnary, the official hymnal of the General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America. The Handbook is the result of a vast amount of research in hymns and hymnology. It is the type of work other religious groups should be offering to their constituency, especially their young people.

"What is the beackground of a given hymn? Who wrote it? Who was he? How did he come to compose the hymn? How were the words and music of the hymn finally joined? A study calculated to answer these and other questions relating to the hymns in our hymnals should arouse interest and make congregational singing more interesting and meaningful.

"Reverend Hostetler's long period of service as a leader (in research) of church hymns and director of choral societies fit him for this task. He is a member of the Hymn Society of America."—Goshen College Bulletin, Goshen, Indiana.

"Into All th

Here is a clarion call to the church by one ways and proclaim the Gospel of redeeming Gr of a dying world.

ONE HAS ONLY to turn the pages of the National Geographic Magazine or scan the headlines of any metropolitan newspaper to realize what kind of a world we are living in. Immigrants, visitors and refugees have come to our shores until the United States is a microcosm of all races and languages. When we talk of carrying the good news within our own borders, how polyglot is the task; and it reaches out to a score of cultures and traditions that are not Anglo-Saxon.

We have in our public schools and on our streets representatives of Swedish, Mexican, Czechoslovak, Danish, Finnish, Norwegian, French, Hungarian, Italian, German, Polish, Portuguese, Rumanian, Russian, Ukrainian, Spanish, Arabic, and Turkish peoples. Across the Atlantic and Pacific shores and to the south of the Rio Grande, no other generation of Christians ever faced a larger missionary task or one more clearly defined than we today. Livingstone said, "The end of the geographical feat is only the beginning of the missionary enterprise." In 1949 there are no more geographical discoveries to be made. "Go ye into all the world" has now become a geigraphical possibility.

Squarely in the Midst of the Battle

Moreover, no matter where we live in this world, we stand squarely in the midst of the Battle of the Ages: with the Prince of Peace we stand, the powers of evil against the kingdom of God.

In such a scene, every Christian must become a cosmopolitan. There can be no isolationism for those who believe the Great Commission and desire to crown our Saviour Lord of all. It is, therefore, of importance, if we would pray with understanding as well as with the Spirit, that we have a true picture of the world today. Then and only then can we say, "Thy will be done, Thy kingdom come," intelligently. Then and then only can we go into all the world with understanding and sympathy to tell others the "Old, Old Story of Jesus and His Love."

Ignorance is always a cause of misunderstanding and there is much truth in the French proverb, "to know all is to forgive all." How can we expect peace until we ourselves become peacemakers and so prove that we are indeed the children of God; and that we are brothers by creation. As the prophet, Malachi put it: "Have we not all one Father, hath not one God created us?" (3:10).

THE DARK SIDE

The world today is a very large world and a greatly disturbed world. Two world wars have torn lands and hearts asunder, ploughed graveyards for the dead, disappointed hopes, brought sorrow to millions of homes with hunger, nakedness, and pain . . . We must not forget that the world today with its enormous population, its vast unoccupied areas of human need, its soul restlessness and disillusionment after two world wars is still in dire need of evangelism. There are many lands that have never yet had an effective Gospel witness . . . No other generation of Christians ever faced a larger missionary task or one more clearly defined than we today.

Lands and Hearts Torn Asunder

The world today is a very large world and a greatly disturbed world. Two world wars have torn lands and hearts asunder, ploughed grave-yards for the dead, disappointed hopes, brought sorrow to millions of homes with hunger, nakedness and pain. Who can describe such a world in a paragraph or paint it in true colors? The difficulties of crowding on so small a canvas a true picture of such large dimensions are obvious. There are likely to be many omissions; other areas may appear hazy because of the horizon—but this is the world as I see it today.

First, the world population was never so large as it is today. There are more than 2,200,000,000 members of the human family! "He who telleth the number of the stars," as David said, also and alone can "bind the broken in heart." The whole world is known. For at long last virtually all tribes have been discovered; all the dark places of the earth full of the habitations of cruelty, are no longer unknown. At the same time, world distances have never been so shortened. News from China is on the front page the day it happens. Jet planes travel faster than sound, and the borders of Tibet, once the outposts of missions, are as near as the borders of Texas.

Whole Provinces Have Exchanged Population

Meanwhile, mankind has never been so restless in spirit. Social strife and economic unrest are the two spectres that today haunt every nation. Families, even whole communities, are on the move. In India, whole provinces have exchanged populations. Political confusion and distrust is rampant on every hand.

The result is obvious: mankind has never been in such need of Christ and so responsive to the gospel message. Jew and Gentile, pagan and Moslem, are stretching out their hands for the Truth. A bewildered world seeks the way; a disillusioned world needs the reality found only in Christ; a decadent world needs the Resurrection and the Life that is life indeed.

Also in many ways the progress of missions is greater than some people have believed. In Japan, China, India, South America and parts of Africa, where missions have operated for years, the indigenous church has stood like Gibraltar against the terror and aftermath of World War II. There are actually more Christians in Korea today than there were in the whole Roman Empire at the close of the first century. It is now possible to cross Africa from the Atlantic to the Indian ocean, stopping every night at a mission station. The American forces in the South Pacific were surprised to find former cannibals eager to preach the Gospel to the soldiers and sailors who landed.

rld"--NOW!

by Samuel M. Zwemer

an missionaries of the Cross to stand in the old ne and only message competent to meet the needs

The Church of Jesus Christ in all its branches has become literally world-wide. In every continent and island the voice of song to our Risen Redeemer is heard. Our troops were surprised again and again, when they landed on Pacific islands, to hear native congregations sing their mother's tunes in strange languages.

This Church, alive and growing, was established by two groups of Christians. The larger missionary boards of Europe and America, most of whom have celebrated their centenaries, and the faith missions which during the past fifty years have led in a remarkable revival of missionary zeal and effort, featured by the occupation of new and difficult areas. And the program seems to have been a fulfillment of God's purpose and of William Carey's philosophic insight into the two-fold nature of the enterprise. The older boards have strengthened their stakes; the younger societies have lengthened the cords.

This is vividly illustrated in the greatest field, China. Here, universities, hospitals, training schools and printing presses have driven down deep into the heart of China in love of Christ for the lost, and from these vital centers the cords of love have extended to every part of the eighteen provinces. By the prophetic vision of Hudson Taylor, Christianity has become indigenous to China; the Church of Christ exists in every province.

While this may appear encouraging, there is a dark and desperate side to the picture as well. We must not forget that the world today with its enormous population, its vast unoccupied areas of human need, its soul restlessness and disillusionment after two World Wars is still in dire need of evangelism. There are many lands that have never yet had an effective Gospel witness.

Under the Hammer of the Times

There never was a time when the command of Christ was more relevant or more urgent. "The whole trend of development, one discovers with awe, seems to confront the missionary movement with its original missionary motive." So declared Dr. Kraemer at the Madras Conference in 1938. And he went on to say: "This motive is the certitude of having the apostolic obligation towards the world of witnessing to Christ and His new kingdom. For all subsidary arguments or motives, that have often usurped practically the place of the primary motive, are smitten to pieces under the hammer of the times. Recommending Christianity as the bringer of enlightenment and freedom as a capital national and social tonic to make powerful nations, as the infallible guide to progress, has come to naught."

If such was true in 1938, how much more is it in 1949. The primary basis of missions always was, and is today, the command of our Risen Lord. We do not mean that this command is the sole basis and ground of the missionary enterprise. That enterprise has a six-fold foundation, although the command is specific and central, and Christ's commission to His apostles is based on each of the others.

St. Francis of Assisi was not the first or the last to contemplate the scars of Jesus and bear the stigmata in his hands and in his heart. Paul wrote to the early converts, "Henceforth let no man trouble me: for I bear in my body the marks (the scars) of the Lord Jesus."

Christ the Son of God has sent me
To the midnight lands;
Mine the mighty ordination
Of the pierced hands.

And so we find the message of the five-fold Great Commission not only repeated in the Gospels but interpreted in the life of Paul and in the lives of all the apostolic succession. The only adequate commentary on the last command of Jesus is in the lives of the apostles, saints and martyrs who, down the ages, have carried it out across the seven seas.

An Eschatological Crisis

Paul's missionary message and passion were due to his sense of external values through the Resurrection. "Our light afflictions are but for a moment" . . . . soon there will be "the eternal weight of glory." The things that are seen are only temporal. Paul saw the invisible glory of the world to come. He heard the inaudible voices. He laid hold of the intangible realities. His passion for proclaiming the message of redemption was due to his sense of eternal values. He reasoned before Felix of judgment to come till Felix trembled.

All earnest Christians of every school of theological thought seem agreed that we face today an eschatological crisis. The day of the Lord is at hand. We heard the same note of warning from many voices. Professor D. R. Davies of England concludes his recent book, Divine Judgment in Human History, with the words:

"Repent—that must be the burden of the Christian message of this age, which is drinking the bitterest waters of all historical eras. In a day when the judgment of God has melted into burning lava and is pouring through the ruins of man's proudest achievements, let the prophetic trumpet-call of repentance pierce the tormented soul of man, so that men, here and now, may

Book Notes . . . . BEYOND THIS FAITH—LITTLE HOPE

Signs of Hope, by Elton Trueblood: Harper Brothers, New York. 125 pp. $1.00.

ELTON Trueblood, professor of Philosophy at Earlham College, Richmond, Indiana has become quite influential through his books and is frequently quoted in religious and other circles. His The Predicament of Modern Man of several years ago provoked much thought, as did Foundations for Reconstruction, and Alternative to Futility. Perhaps this latest book 'Signs of Hope in a Century of Despair' will be of more immediate interest to the average Mennonite reader than the other volumes in that it deals at least in part with matters upon which we do not all agree. One of the reasons this book is so thought provoking is that Trueblood has not been afraid to do independent thinking. Men of varied persuasions are likely to find the book interesting. They will find some of their own ideas confirmed while others will be challenged.

Trueblood takes a look at our twentieth century while we are passing from the first half to the second half. He calls it a century of despair, largely because so many of the hopes with which the century began have been shattered. As we are now "half past nineteen hundred" he sees some signs of hope, and it is with these that the book deals. Although he may offer comfort to those who still cling to the hope that some day the church will overcome all the evil in this world, he scarcely shares all their optimism. He firmly believes that whatever advances are made will be only through genuine, wholehearted acceptance of Christ by individuals, both those who already claim to be believers and by those who do not now believe.

The first sign of hope he calls "The Rise of the Horizontal Fellowship." By this he means the growing tendency for various bodies of believers to merge, and even more important, the growing fellowship and co-operation between existing bodies. He warns against hasty merger and fears that valuable contributions made by some groups will be lost to the church as a whole if merger means giving up all of the things upon which the two groups do not agree.

His second sign of hope is in what he terms "The Vitality of the New Theology." He sees much hope in the fact that theology has recently been able to attract "so many virile minds that even those who have tried to ignore theology are beginning to find it difficult to maintain their pose." He calls attention to the fact that the visit of Albert Schweitzer to America was big news even for the secular press, and that the face of Reinhold Niebuhr has appeared on the cover of Time along with business leaders and statesmen. He makes much of the "rediscovery of the doctrine of original sin," and emphasized that apart from God man is unable to attain righteousness. He sees a growing rejection of natural religion and states, "There have always been millions of humble Christians, particularly those called Fundamentalists, who have rejected this emphasis on natural religion and have stressed unique revelation, but the important feature of the new development is that such an emphasis is now made by the intellectuals."

Trueblood sees hope in the increasing interest in "lay religion." Lay members of the church are assuming more and more responsibility for the actual work of the church. All in all, his "Signs of Hope" for our present century of despair are all related to the Christian Faith. Beyond this faith he sees little hope. Most of our Mennonite ministers and serious-minded lay members will find this little book of great interest. Perhaps few of them will agree with everything he says.—Carl M. Lehman.

lay hold of the redemption done, once and forever, by God in Christ."

Pillars Crumbling

In a day when the pillars of western civilization are crumbling, and when the foundations of society seem tottering, and when sword and famine and pestilence walk abroad, we must preach a message that is otherworldly or we have no message at all. The older generation of evangelists were not ashamed of a gospel that dealt with eternal issues. They preached a message that bridged death and revealed eternal glory or eternal woe.

Evangelism that preaches Christ's resurrection and His return, goes beyond social reformation or new-world plans or political blue-prints. We can no longer go to the East to share the social and cultural benefits of the West, for the whole of socalled Christian culture stand at a period of terrible crisis, every section of it under God's judgment. We are compelled by the present situation "to look for a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness."—The Evangelical Christian.

BETHEL PAPER DRAWS HIGH RATING

THE Bethel Collegian, student paper of Bethel College, has been awarded first class honor rating for 1949 in the forty-first national newspaper critical service of the Associated Collegiate Press at the School of Journalism of the University of Minnesota.

The editors-in-chief of the Collegian for 1949 were Harold Duerksen of Hillsboro, Kansas, and Gladys Schmidt of Newton, Kansas.

A discussion of conditions in Germany and particularly democracy in Germany began with a panel group of foreign students and war veterans and ended with the whole audience participating at a UNESCO meeting at Bethany College, Lindsborg. Three German students from Bethel—namely, Wolfgang Fieguth, Gustav Reimer, and Helmut Huelsbergen participated. Mrs. Eva Harshbarger, dean of women and English instructor, also was present. Other foreign students present were an Italian girl from McPherson College and three girls from Catholic Marymount College of Salina.

J. W. Fretz of Bethel College has been appointed chairman of a UNESCO committee on displaced persons for the Kansas region. He is to select the other members of the committee himself.

The winter quarter at Bethel ended March 1. Most of the students left for a short vacation which lasted until March 6, the beginning of the spring quarter.

Bethel College plans to establish a degree in elementary education for students of the education department. Jane Carroll, professor of elementary education at Pittsburg State Teachers College visited Bethel College recently in order to help form the curriculum requisite for this degree.

SEMINARY INTO THIRD QUARTER

THE new quarter of the Seminary opens Tuesday, March 7. This is our shortest term running only eleven weeks. Therefore it is a great test on the entire school to pack in all the activities and materials which are necessary in this final third term. Two of our students have completed their work, but will return during the commencement season late in May. They are Erwin Goering of Bethel College, North Newton, who has completed his work for the master of religious education and Missionary Harold Ratzlaff, who has completed his requirements for the master of theology degree. He is now in Newton, Kansas, writing his thesis on the history of the General Conference Mennonite Missions in India, using the records of the Mission Board which are located in Newton. The master of theology degree is given to those who complete one full year of graduate work beyond the bachelor of divinity degree. Ratzlaff received his B.D. degree from Hartford Theological Seminary some years ago. Ferdinand Ediger, Drake, Saskatchewan, who has completed his work at Bethel College is joining our Seminary student group for this quarter.

The Religious Life Committee is happy to announce that a cooperative summer Bible school will be held for three weeks during the month of July. It will include the joint sponsorship of Mennonite Biblical Seminary, St. James Methodist Church, and Onward Neighborhood House. The latter institution is sponsored by the Evangelical and Reformed Church for the Christian leadership of the many Japanese Americans who live in this neighborhood. Bertha Fast, director of Voluntary Service for the General Conference and one of our students completed the negotiations for this new project.

FREEMAN COLLEGE OCTET SERVES

THE college octet has been singing in many of the neighboring town and country churches. The past Sunday they sang "How Lovely are Thy Dwellings" by Brahms, for the morning worship services in the new Bethany Mennonite church in Freeman. The members of the group are: Lois Hieb, Ruby Tieszen, Alice Kaufman, Dagmar Kroeker, Glen Epp, Carlyle Groves, Don Waltner, and Jerry Krehbiel.

The College Student Christian Association elected Maxine Mueller president for the next three quarters at an election held last Tuesday. The other officers carry on for the rest of the year. They are: Delmar Ortman, vice-president; Lily Becker, secretary; and, Dagmar Kroeker, treasurer.

John Walkup, regional director of N.A.E. from Minneapolis, spoke in chapel recently. He combined a song service with his talk.

The work of installing the heating system in Pioneer Hall is in progress at present. Daily volunteer workers help the crew of trained men who are working on the job.

It is not every day that a famous man of letters writes to a college freshman, yet that is what happened to James P. Jones of Newton, freshman at Bethel College.

He received a personal letter from Thomas Mann, one of the greatest novelists and philosophers of the world.

It all happened because Miss Honora Becker, Professor of English, assigned a paper on Mann in her English class. James could not find certain data concerning the Cardinal Newman Award given Mann for outstanding work in American literature. He wrote to Mr. Mann and promptly received a letter in which Mr. Mann informs him personally of the honor bestowed on him in 1938 by the Cardinal Newman Foundation.

Mr. Mann became a voluntary exile from Germany in 1933. He now lives on the San Remo Drive of Pacific Palisades, California.

—Bergtal Church, Pawnee, Rock, Kansas: Our congregation adopted the Ministers Aid and Pension Plan and also will continue a salary to our retired elder. The ladies chorus has resumed practice. Our pastor, John E. Kaufman, showed colored slides of another part of their South American work, that of Uruguay, Argentina, and Paraguay, on February 5. A junior C. E. including all grade school children has been organized with Mrs. John E. Kaufman and Mrs. Frank Smith as leaders. A short consecration service was held at their first meeting. The young people of the church met at the parsonage on February 13 for fellowship and discussion of young people's work. A union service was held at the Pawnee Rock High School on the evening of February 19 with the film "Out of the Night" being shown. Alvin Franz brought the children's message on February 19 and a song. World Day of Prayer was observed in union with the Pawnee Rock churches and held in the Christian with the Methodist and New Jerusalem churches also taking part.—Mrs. John K. Friesen, Corr.

—Bethel Church, Hydro, Oklahoma: We were happy to have Henry Hege with us who gave a brief message on his trip to Germany last summer, and conditions as they exist. In parts of his tour (where they were spared from the awfulness of war effects), he had seen very little change in the thirty-nine years of his absence. While other cities and villages were so completely destroyed, he could not recognize them. But when told, by relatives, they saw scripture literally fulfilled in the passage, "Fire fell from Heaven," and saw men drown in the air, (by succession of bombs) with their bodies aflame, he could understand in reality what they meant. Sunday night Alvin Regier and a group of students from Oklahoma Bible Academy brought a message in song.—Wilfred Ewy, Corr.

—First Church, Upland, California: Our congregation has recently been having the privilege of having a number of Estonian families attending our church services. Church night was held March 1. Our Estonian friends were invited as special guests. Mr. and Mrs. Peter Buller celebrated their sixtieth wedding anniversary Febraury 27.—Mrs. Fred Yoder, Corr.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: Working with a united will and purpose, a good number of volunteer persons made short order of varnishing our church floors under the capable direction of Menno Lehman who had already donated the labor of painting the church exterior and interior (with the decorative details done by Merl Lehman) in the recent remodeling program. Speaking on the subjects of "Present Conditions of Church Life in Germany" and "With a Congregation of Mennonite Refugees at Goettingen Germany," Dr. and Mrs. Ernst Crous of Berlin, Germany, recently, brought us a portrayal of how the German state-supported church was gradually betrayed into the Nazi regime, through the wartime pressures, and up to the present day confusion caused by the inevitable aftermath of war whose leaders have displaced God on the throne by worship of power and self. Invited by Christian Endeavor youth workers of our church who wish to promote greater fellowship with other churches, the Teen Fellowship Group of Oak Grove Church near Smithville presented an inspiring evening program recently, with forty present from the guest church. The program included musical numbers, topics, and talks, ending with the message by the guest pastor, Virgil Gerig. Basic theme centered around the balanced Christian life including the proper kind of recreation. The evening closed with a social hour and refreshments. The latest arrival in our church is Arthur Philip (born February 23), baby son of our pastor and wife, Irvin Richerts. —Mrs. Ivan Badertscher, Corr.

Mennonite Men's Chorus Festival

—Mennonite Men's Chorus Festival will be held March 26, 1950, at 2:00 P. M. at the Memorial Hall, North Newton, Kansas. Any men's chorus which has been overlooked by mistake and who would like to render a number, get in touch with Harvey Wedel, 920 High, Newton, J. Hobart Goering, Moundridge, or Frank Nachtigal, Moundridge.

—Eden Church, Inola, Oklahoma: Our congregation gave a farewell to Brother and Sister Marvin Eck on Sunday night, February 26. The Lord willing they will leave New York March 31st for Africa. Sunday, February 19, Bro. Zimmerman from Kansas brought the morning message; he travels for the Bible Society. B. H. Jantzen from Newton, Kansas, stopped in to present the project of canning meat for relief. We took up an offering instead.—Jacob Froese, Corr.

—First Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: On February 26 the Young People's Union of the General Conference churches in this community met in our church. The program consisted of Billie Bartel, chairman, Albert Ewert, song leader, devotions by Alvin Goertz, special music from Bruderthal and Friedensthal; talk on Western District Y. P. work by Henry Classen; talk on General Conference Y.P. work by Eddie Schrag; panel discussion led by Frances Becker; and summary by Herbert Wiebe. H. B. Schmidt spoke in our church in a pulpit-exchange Sunday. Johannesthal, Bruderthal, Lehigh, and Friedensthal Fellowship committees met in our church in the interest of Bethel College. D. C. Wedel was the speaker. A sound picture, "Beyond Our Own," was shown by Bob Tully. The Senior C. E. sponsored a family night program on February 19. Bennie Bargen was the guest speaker.—Corr.

—First Church, Burns, Kansas: Elbert Koontz, pastor of the Hebron Church, Buhler, Kansas, delivered the message on February 12. The women of this community observed World Day of Prayer on February 24 in our church. Mrs. W. C. Voth was guest speaker. The church enjoyed a C. E. program on February 19 entitled "The Holy Spirit in the World." A supper and program sponsored by the women's organization took place recently.—Mrs. Dave Stucky, Cor.

tiveness of their ministry by living lives unworthy before God and man.

Another important fact concerning the messengers was that they were members and established churches. Often we hear the argument from some Christian leaders that they do not wish to be limited by any church or denomination. They want to be independent, pitch their own tent, and preach their own gospel. Such do not assume any future responsibility toward those who have made commitments to Christ. On the contrary, the disciples were as much interested in establishing the Christian Church as they were in bringing the people to a saving knowledge of Christ. The spirit of individualism has crept into the hearts of many present-day messengers, thereby destroying the unity of the body of Christ.

The Methods

The methods of the New Testament evangelists were centered upon preaching and teaching the Word, baptizing the converts, and organizing and establishing new churches. They shared their possessions, gave to relief, and performed a healing ministry. The disciples never forgot those who accepted Christ, and never failed to emphasize the importance of nurturing the converts. All too often the methods of evangelism today have not been those of the New Testament. There has been a shift from the personal to the impersonal, and from the individual to the masses. The appeal of the glamorous and the spectacular has been employed in order to get the crowds rather than to let Christ draw them through His power of love. Material gain has often ruined the evangelist who once was a true disciple of Christ. Crude forms of evangelism are the portion of our age as evidenced by much of the present-day radio revivalism, airplane stunt preaching, and careless distribution of cheap tract literature. Every possible method has been used in an attempt to drive people to a decision, but seldom has the Christian church been aware of the losses through such demoralizing methods. Our people have been so greatly influenced through such means of evangelism that we have lost the value of the teaching method as used by the disciples, the early church, and, for the most part, in the Mennonite Church. We need to revitalize our catechetical instruction, our personal visitation among the members of our church and community, our worship services, and the organizations and activities of the local church.

Evangelism in our day should be in close harmony with that portrayed in the book of Acts. In certain respects new adaptations need to be considered in every generation, however, such should never displace New Testament evangelism as witnessed in its message, by its messengers, and thru the methods used. May our every effort in the work of the church be guided by the principles of Jesus Christ and His revelation to us.

get one hundred per cent attendance. For the school to be effective there must be unity of purpose and some uniformity of program and procedure. Frequent written bulletins of instructions and suggestions as well as the constant personal contact of the director help in achieving this unity.

Are There Advantages?

An interdenominational school does not offer any church the opportunity to emphasize its distinctive teachings, neither to give information regarding its program of work. But there is so much that is common to the faith of all evangelical churches, far more than can be taught in a few weeks of summer school. To challenge our interest and provide us with service projects there are agencies working on an interdenominational basis.

It is economical; the cost is shared by all the community, and due to the large enrollment, pupil costs are relatively low.

A city-wide school offers the opportunity of attendance to every child in the community. Parents feel free to send their children as they often do not when the school is sponsored by one church. Children from non-Christian homes are attracted. Children of many churches think about God together and join in work for others in His name. They early experience cooperation in matters of the spirit as well as in those activities purely secular.

There is value to the churches in working cooperatively. Every task commonly shared binds the Christian people of a community together in a fellowship that is richly rewarding to themselves, and every such task accomplished contributes to the presenting of the united front that is such an effective witness to those outside the churches.

We do not have much to boast about as long as we spend more for liquor than we do for milk.

Proposed Registration Act Endangers C. O.'s

Analysis of the Provisions for C. O.'s in the Manpower Registration Act of 1950

On February 27, Rep. Carl Vinson (D., Ga.), Chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, introduced the above-mentioned bill calling for the registration and classification of certain persons "as to their availability for military service."

Sec. 4 (b) (4) of the bill contains only a rudimentary part of the provisions for conscientious objectors contained in Sec. 6 (j) of the Selective Service Act of 1948, and eliminates the safeguards previously established by Congress for the protection of conscience. While the new bill does not provide for inductions it says that registrants shall be classified "as to their availability for military service."

Following is the text of Sec. 4 (b) (4):

"Any person claiming classification as a person conscientiously opposed to participation in war in any form shall, if such claim is not sustained by the local board, be entitled to an appeal, as provided in paragraph (3) of this subsection. Upon the filing of such appeal, the appeal board shall refer such claim to the Department of Justice, which, after appropriate inquiry, shall hold a hearing with respect to the character and good faith of the claim, and the claimant shall be notified of the time and place of such hearing and be afforded an opportunity to appear and give testimony at such hearing. The Department of Justice shall, after such hearing, provide the appeal board with its recommendations as to the disposition of such claim. The appeal board shall, in making its decision, give consideration to the recommendations of the Department of Justice together with the record on appeal from the local board but shall not be bound to follow the recommendations of the Department of Justice. Any person who is classified as a conscientious objector pursuant to this paragraph shall be listed by the local board on a register of conscientious objectors;"

Right of Exemption Imperiled

The new bill omits the first sentence of Sec. 6 (j) in the present law which provides that "Nothing contained in this title shall be construed to require any person to be subject to combatant training and service in the armed forces of the United States who, by reason of religious training and belief is conscientiously opposed to participation in war in any form." This makes it mandatory upon Selective Service to exempt such persons from combatant service and to classify them for exemption. Sec. 4 (b) (4) of the new bill leaves it to the President as to whether any person shall be classified as unavailable for military service. What is now a statutory right for religious claimants is left to the President to decide as he pleases. Under this bill it is possible that no conscientious objectors would be classified as such.

Definition of Conscientious Objection Left to the President

The new bill omits the parts from Sec. 6 (j) which define conscientious objection. It gives no standard for the President to go by. Thus, the President could have the power to say who is an objector, and the protection given to conscientious objectors in the present definition established by Congress would be lost.

I-A-O and IV-E Distinction Removed

Sec. 6 (j) provides an exemption from combatant service and a deferment for those opposed to both combatant and noncombatant service. The new bill makes no such distinction and all objectors are simply lumped together. If an induction act were passed in an emergency, time might not permit the determination of the claim of those objectors opposed to both combatant and noncombatant service and all could be made subject to induction into the army.

Right to Appeal Qualified

Sec. 6 (j) gives an unqualified right of appeal to objectors whose claims are denied. The appeal provision in the new bill makes the appeals of religious claimants

Urgent Message by Our M.C.C. Washington Representative -- Paul Goering

NATIONAL SERVICE BOARD FOR RELIGIOUS OBJECTORS

March 6, 1950

Dear Editor:

I want the readers of The Mennonite to know the danger to our religious views in the new Vinson bill. If this bill is passed in its present form, it will wipe out the protection for religious claimants established by Congress during the war.

Congress has learned that its policy towards conscientious objectors is supported by the American people and that it works successfully. It is in keeping with the best principles of our government and the aims of international cooperation. But this policy will not be supported if those who are directly concerned remain silent. Mennonites should immediately notify Mr. Vinson and the members of the Armed Services Committee that they want Congress to continue to safeguard religious views in any draft or registration act. Afterwards they can write to their own congressmen. They can, at the same time, give their Christian witness to the danger of following a policy geared to preparation for war.

How should they do this? The best way I think of is to dash off postcards now telling Mr. Vinson and members of the Committee what they think. Don't compose an essay with nice-sounding but artificial phrases. Congressmen pay more attention to a farmer who writes on a postcard or piece of paper what he thinks than to a well-worded, typewritten letter with a lot of stuffy argument and platitudes. They get so many fancy plans for world peace and everything else that its refreshing to get something with feelings as human as the following lines: "My son is more useful on the farm than as a soldier. Big armies bring war and hunger. We believe and teach that war is unchristian. Therefore, we don't want them to kill or to be killed." Each one should say in his own words what he thinks, not what he thinks sounds nice.

Since it is likely that most of those who will write at all will think two postcards are a big job, I'd say they should write two rather than attempt more and get discouraged. Pick out one name besides the chairman. I've listed their state and party for information but thats unimportant at this point. There are no votes connected to an issue of this kind and one man is as good as another, except the chairman who is more powerful. But the Committee has the bill now and will vote on it before the whole House does, so that's where the witness needs to be made first.

The patterns of this new bill is to maintain a complete manpower index so that the full manpower of the country can be mobilized in the event of an emergency. It will be kept in readiness for industrial mobilization, civilian defense, UMT, and military service. Vinson hopes to soften opposition to this bill by leaving out any call-up feature which makes the present draft more objectionable. Nothing is said about what will be done with those classified although the bill is obviously tied to the plans of the agencies working on the matters I mentioned.

The following congressmen are members of the House Armed Services Committee:

Carl Vinson, chairman (D. Ga.); Overton Brooks (D. La.); Paul J. Kilday (D. Tex.); Carl T. Durham (D. N.C.); Lansdale G. Sasscer (D. Md.); James J. Heffernan (D. N. Y.); L. Mendel Rivers (D. S. C.); Philip J. Philbin (D. Mass.); F. Edward Hebert (D. La.); Arthur Winstead (D. Miss.); Franck R. Havenner (D. Cal.); Melvin Price (D. Ill.); O. C. Fisher (D. Tex.); Porter Hardy, Jr. (D. Va.); Clyde Doyle (D. Cal.); William J. Green, Jr. (D. Pa.); Edward deGraffenried (D. Ala.); John R. Walsh (D. Ind.); L. Gary Clemente (D. N. Y.).

Proposed Amendment to H. R. 7442

The substitution of the following language for Section 4(b) (4) pertaining to conscientious objectors is proposed:

"Nothing contained in this Act shall be construed to require any person to be subject to classification as available for military service, who by reason of religious training and belief, is conscientiously opposed to participation in war in any form. Any person claiming classification as unavailable for combatant military service because of such conscientious objections whose claim is sustained by the local board shall, if he is classified as available for military service be classified as available only for noncombatant service, as defined by the President, or shall, if he is found to be conscientiously opposed to classification as available for military service in any form, be classified as unavailable for military service. Any person claiming classification as unavailable for military service or as available only for noncombatant military service because of such conscientious objections shall, if such claim is not sustained by the local board, be entitled to an appeal to the appropriate appeal board. Upon the filing of such appeal, the appeal board shall refer any such claim to the Department of Justice for inquiry and hearing. The Department of Justice, after appropriate inquiry, shall hold a hearing with respect to the character and good faith the objections of the person concerned, and such person shall be notified of the time and place of such hearing. The Department of Justice shall, after such hearing, if the objections are found to be sustained, recommend to the appeal board that (1) if the objector is classified as available for military service, he shall be classified as available only for noncombatant military service as defined by the President, or (2) if the objector is found to be conscientiously opposed to military service in any form, he shall be classified as unavailable for military service. If after such hearing the Department of Justice finds that his objections are not sustained, it shall recommend to the appeal board that such objections be not sustained. The appeal board shall, in making its decision, give consideration to, but shall not be bound to follow, the recommendation of the Department of Justice together with the record on appeal from the local board. Each person whose claim for classification under these provisions is sustained shall be listed by the local board on a register of conscientious objectors."

Canadian Mennonite Bible College

The Story of Our Youngest Conference School

THE Canadian Mennonite Bible College was begun as a project of the Canadian District Conference in order to meet the present and future needs in Christian Education within the churches of the Conference.

On October 5, 1947, the official opening exercises were held in the Bethel Mennonite Mission Church, 103 Furby St., Winnipeg. For two years the Bethel Mission church served quite suitably as the home of the College.

New Home of Canadian Mennonite Bible College

Arnold J. Regier of Elbing, Kansas, graduate of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary has served as president of the College since its beginning.

The student enrollment during the first two years has varied from 25 to 50 in number, always being on a steady incline. It was seen as a necessity that a new building be obtained for the third year. Conference members, teachers, and students united in prayer for new and adequate facilities. The Lord graciously and marvelously answered.

In May 1949, a large luxurious residence on 515 Wellington Crescent was procured through God's direct and providential guidance. On October 23, 1949 this new edifice (see accompanying picture) was dedicated to the Lord's work and at present serves as the new home of the College family.

Having formerly been used as a home of a family of the more well-to-do residents of the city the college building has to a certain extent retained its simple, unpretentious, homelike appearance. The curtained windows, the fire-places, and the comfortable, rug-covered stair-ways do away with the formal austerity generally associated with college halls.

Family Spirit Prevailing

A comparatively small number of students enables an intimate family-like relationship to be maintained. With one common interest, that of preparing for service in God's kingdom, the students together with the teachers are afforded many blessed times of Christian fellowship in worship, work, and play.

Religious Life

In preparing for Christian service, the devotional and inspirational nurture of the individual soul in fellowship with fellow Christians is of extreme importance.

Our daily chapel periods where guest speakers, teachers, and students contribute in breaking the Word are a constant source of spiritual nourishment. Every Wednesday morning the students under the auspices of the Devotional Committee take charge of the service.

Ever since its inauguration, the college has considered Saturday night as its family evening. The College family gathers for a period of prayer and meditation upon God's Word. This regular communal experience of approaching the throne of grace has contributed toward keeping "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

Each fall the College observes "Decision Week." Last fall, H. A. Fast of Bethel College served us with very challenging messages and also had private consultations with the students desiring them.

A highlight of the winter term is the Bible Week which is held in the second week in March. This year A. E. Kreider, Goshen, Indiana; Missionary John Thiessen of India, and J. J. Nickel of Langham, Sask., are to be our special speakers. We anticipate a time of heart-searching and Spirit-filling.

The Students of the College

by Katherine Klippenstein

THE student body of the Canadian Mennonite Bible College consists of a group of seventy young people who have come from different parts of five Canadian provinces. Because Winnipeg is centrally located in this vast dominion of ours, there are people from the East and West who have had to travel a distance of 1200 miles or more to reach their destination. The easterners have left their homes in the orchards of Ontario to seek these halls of higher learning. Then we think of those who come from the extreme west. Not even the heights of the Rocky Mountains hindered them in their zeal. The majority of the students, however, come from the Prairie Provinces. Many refer to the fertile farms of Manitoba as their home, several have their loved ones on the sunny hillsides of Alberta, and many have fond memories of the rolling plains of Saskatchewan. Although the backgrounds of the students differ insofar as scenery, occupation, and climate is concerned, yet here at college everyone willingly submits to the rules of routine.

It is required that students have first year university as a prerequisite to college. About one half of them are graduates of our Mennonite high schools or Bible schools. Their former profession and occupations are varied. Those who show traces of domineering qualities are the ex-teachers; those who can type without watching the keyboard, have been stenographers; those who understand pain best are the ones who have been in trained in hospitals as orderlies or nurses; those who bake the best buns have spent the most time in their mother's kitchen; those with the steady hand and level head have done the manual work, farming, fruit-growing, or lumbering. Besides this we have four ordained ministers with us, one of whom has served as a missionary to the Mexican people for several years.

Although the past interests of the students have extended in different directions, yet we all have one purpose in mind—to become purer vessels, better fit for the Master's use. Some students will return to their former professions, but with added abilities, more knowledge, and deeper spiritual convictions. Others, however, will look ahead to more distant fields. They hear voices calling them to foreign fields where the shadows of darkness lurk. They see opportunities for Christian service with the M. C. C. or in localities where the flock has no shepherd, or in districts where people live in slums and sin. Even though the future path may not yet be clear, yet one thing is certain, "We'll go where you want us to go, dear Lord." That is our prayer.

The Student Organizations

by Nettie Friesen

In order to successfully carry out a student activity program at our College, there arises a need for well-planned and efficient organizations.

The student-body president, vice-president, secretary, and the chairmen of the devotional, social, and the deputational committees form the student council. These six members, with two faculty sponsors, meet every two weeks, to correlate the various activities of the College, to discuss and attempt to solve problems dealing with the whole College family, and to aim for a well-balanced program of College activities. The student council, in the past, has drawn up a list of principles by which each student individually tests himself in order to foster and encourage a Christian spirit of fellowship, unity, and conduct. At the present, the council is active in drawing up a constitution that may be used for reference in the future. To the student council also falls the responsibility of appointing the other members of the committees already mentioned.

Cultural development has significance in the building of Christian character and personality. A group of active, literary-minded students have organized the "Pi Alpha Gamma" Society, meaning "lovers of higher literature." This organization renders a one-hour program every third Tuesday. In the past, several plays have been presented and interesting talks have been given on the different phases of literature. We can say that the Literary Society has been an asset to our College in that it has awakened in us a deeper appreciation for classical literature and drama.

In addition to this organization, the Music Lover's Society has been formed. Its purpose is to develop the appreciation for classical music and for beautiful church and folk music. A group of men of this organization have formed a male chorus, which is conducted by one of the students.

The best relief for mental strain or fatigue, after many hours of intensive study, is a period of physical exercise. Every Wednesday night from 9:00-10:30, the students go to a neighboring gymnasium to engage in volley-ball, calisthenics, and other invigorating activities. We are again refreshed for another week of enthusiastic work.

Another organization that holds a very important place in the College is the Missionary Fellowship Band. This organization encourages the spiritual life and growth of the students. Every three weeks an evening of devotion, prayer, talks by missionaries, or reports, is planned by this Band. It also plans for the noon prayer meetings held every Tuesday and Thursday. All students are invited to attend these. Intercessions are made, especially for the missionaries, at home and abroad. We have begun a correspondence with different missionaries on the field, and make special mention of them in our prayers. The Fellowship Band has also taken over a city mission work, which is in the form of house-visitation to the different Mennonite people, who might not have a church home at the present. Students make personal contacts, file the information received, and then report to the group. The Missionary Fellowship Band has been a great blessing to us.

We strive to equip ourselves for service and in as many ways as possible, for more efficiency in youth leadership or any field of Christian service in our home churches or in foreign fields.

We are grateful to all the organizations of our College, which have enabled us to perform our work more successfully and have aided us to develop into well-balanced Christian personalities.

Deputation Work

by Henry Wiens

YE are the Light of the World." Matt. 5:14 When we realize the truth of this verse we feel that it is our duty to let our light shine round about us. It is with this thought that we endeavor to witness for our Master and Saviour in our various service activities.

When our College first opened its doors it was in the Bethel Mission Church. Here we were given a cordial invitation by the Young People's Association to join ranks with them in worship and play. This has become a great source of fellowship and inspiration to us.

Another phase of our deputation work is the visits to the nursing homes and hospitals here in Winnipeg. Male and mixed quartets and octets go out on Sundays, sometimes in the morning, other times in the afternoon, and sing for the sick and the suffering in these homes. Many a time a lonely heart has been cheered by the strains of "There is a place of quiet rest, near to the heart of God," or "Abide with me, fast falls the eventide, the darkness deepens, Lord with me abide." Often a soft word spoken in a tone of kindliness, or a faint smile bestowed on the invalid is all they need to cheer them during the long hours of the coming day. Sometimes menial tasks done with a willing hand also show those who are suffering that Christians care, and that there is a God who loves and cares for all. The students, after rendering this service, are filled with praise and thanksgiving to their heavenly Father for health of mind and body, and for the opportunity to live a life of consecrated service for Him, using the gifts and talents He has given them.

Another opportunity for witnessing is in Sunday school work at the College, Bethel Mission Church and the St. Vital area. The latter was organized during the first year of College and is still served by our students.

This has been a brief overview of our outside activities. It is our desire and prayer that our God may be glorified through our services.

The College Octet

by Bruno Epp

OUR College Octet dates back to the first year of the opening of our College in 1947. The members of this mixed group are chosen by the President and the head of the music department of our college. Each year voice scholarship awards are granted to the members of the Octet. Each member is given one term of private lessons free of charge.

During the past two years, the Octet has had opportunity to serve in our various Mennonite churches of Canada. Programs have been rendered in most of our Conference churches in Manitoba. In the spring of 1948 the Octet made its first extended tour through Saskatchewan visiting our churches there in behalf of the College. Last year the Octet toured Alberta and British Columbia, participating at the Canadian District Conference sessions held at Sardis, B.C. in July. In passing through the State of Washington, programs were given in three of our Mennonite churches there.

At present plans are being made for a tour through some of the Mennonite centers in Minnesota, Kansas, Nebraska, and South Dakota. After closing exercises in June, a two-week tour will be made of the Saskatchewan churches taking in the Canadian Conference sessions to be held at the Rosenort Church at Rosthern, Sask. The Octet traveling in a seven passenger Dodge, has been accompanied by the president of our College, Arnold J. Regier, on most of its travels.

As an Octet, we appreciate the opportunity we have of becoming acquainted with our own churches. The ultimate purpose of our singing may be fitly expressed with the words of the Psalmist, to "Sing forth the honor of His name: make His name glorious."

The School Dormitories

by John Neufeld

AT present there are two dormitories for the students at the Canadian Mennonite Bible College; one for the women and the other for the men students.

The women's residence is situated on 146 Furby Street, about one-half mile from the College building. It at present accommodates 17 women, besides Pauline Jahnke, the dean of women. The remainder of the women either board out or do light-housekeeping elsewhere in the city.

The women at the residence do all their own housekeeping and cooking. They have divided into different groups and they alternately cook for the entire number. These added duties, besides school work, take considerable time, but most of the girls are appreciative of this opportunity of putting home economics into actual practice.

The men's dormitory occupies the third floor of the College building itself. At present only twenty-five of the men students, or about half of their total number are able to stay here. The remainder also board out elsewhere in the city.

The men's dormitory at the C.M.B.C. is something rather unique and interesting in that the boys do their own cooking. Each day twenty-five men students together eat three meals prepared by themselves in the College kitchen. The entire group is divided into smaller groups of three and these alternately cook for one day of the week. At the beginning of each week a menu is planned for the twenty-one meals of that week. With the able assistance of Pauline Jahnke, who plans the meals and at times helps, the program of light-housekeeping has worked out remarkably well.

Student Work Program

by Ruben Siemens

IT is only to be expected that a large amount of work will be required to keep a fine building like ours in shape. To take care of this the students have willingly consented to do twelve hours of "gratis" work each term.

If you should enter our College building between 4:30 and 5:30 o'clock on a week-day, the following scene would attest this. One or two girls are each pushing a mop; another is dusting desks and tables or cleaning the blackboard; and, one of the boys is cleaning the heavy rugs on the stairs with a vacuum cleaner.

On Saturday mornings you see a few boys down on their knees in the classroom busily applying "Johnson's" wax to the floor. One of the repairmen is fixing chairs or mending some other things that have given way.

After a snowstorm the snow-shovellers are ushered upon the scene. It is their duty to see that walks, steps, and driveways are kept clean. Some of the students put in their gratis work by working in the office, by assisting the librarian, or by doing publication work.

We think that in this way we can, in a small measure at least, express our gratitude to our Conference for all they have done for us in procuring this splendid building. Through it we also wish to express our thanks to God who has so marvelously answered prayers.

It has been gratifying to behold how willingly the students have done this work. If we were to use a motto for our work we would take Ephesians 6:5: "Do everything as unto Christ." It does not matter how common or menial the task; if it is done in the right spirit it can serve to the honor and glory of God.

I FOLLOWED A SMILE

W. L. Stidger, professor at Boston University School of Theology, died last August. Author of 53 books, he pioneered the first course in radio preaching at any theological school. In Sermon Stories of Faith and Hope (Abingdon-Cokesbury), he tells this incident:

One day, as an experiment, I followed a smile. I saw a newsboy smile at a man to whom he sold a paper. I followed that man, saw him infect ten people in one square. He got on a bus and smiled at the conductor. The conductor infected everybody in the bus. I followed that businessman to his office. He spread the contagion of that smile to six people standing waiting for an elevator. He had infected ten more people before we reached his floor. He infected the receptionist at the information desk, who continued to spread the infection. Later, I told the businessman what had happened that morning when he caught that smile from the newsboy, and we had a good laugh over the adventure... I told the story to 500 men at a Rotary Club luncheon—and started the contagion of smiles on a wider round. Try it.—Quote.

PRAYER DOES THIS—AND MORE!

Hyslop, speaking before the British Medical Association, once said: "The best medicine which my pratice has discovered is prayer. The exercise of prayer in those who habitually practice it must be regarded as the most adequate and normal of all the pacifiers of the mind and calmers of the mind and calmers of the nerves.

"As one whose whole life has been concerned with the sufferings of the mind, I would state that of all the hygenic measures to counteract disturbed sleep, depression of spirits, and all the miserable sequels of a distressed mind, I would undoubtedly give the first place to the simple habit of prayer.

"It is of the highest importance, merely from a physical point of view, to teach children to hold daily communion with God. Such a habit does more to quiet the spirit and strengthen the soul to overcome mere incidental emotionalism, than any other therapeutic agency known to me."

Beyond Our Own

Plans for a national Protestant television library are to be formulated shortly by the Protestant Radio Commission and the Protestant Film Commission, it was announced at a five-day television workshop sponsored by the Protestant Radio Commission with Station WHEN in Syracuse. A rotating plan will enable local religious organizations to service television stations with religious films.—

GERMANY. Nearly 5,225,000 Germans are still missing or detained in foreign countries as prisoners of war or civil internees, according to Pastor Hans Merten, head of the POW department in the Bonn government's Ministry for Refugee Affairs. He said the missing include 1,500,000 former German soldiers and 3,000,000 German nationals formerly living in Czechoslovakia, Hungary, and Romania. Pastor Merten reported that 500,000 POWs, of whom 400,000 are being held by Russia, are in postal communication with their families. Also detained in the Soviet Union, Pastor Merten declared, are 150,000 interned German women and 25,000 members of German auxiliary forces and Red Cross nurses. In addition, he said, 40,000 Germans are serving in the French Foreign Legion.

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS. — A total of 105,000 persons attended an 18-day revival campaign conducted in Boston, Mass., by Billy Graham, 31-year-old evangelist, it is announced by Harold John Ockenga, pastor of Park Street church, which sponsored the meetings. He said there were 3,000 conversions as a result of the campaign which had the support of 75 Boston area churches. —Watchman-Examiner

AS A RESULT of a fervent evangelistic campaign conducted by Billy Graham last fall, prominent Roman Catholic track star, Louis Zamperini denounced Roman Catholicism and accepted Christ as his Saviour. The holder of two collegiate records for the mile run, and famous for seizing a Nazi flag at the Berlin Olympics in 1936, Zamperini was shot down during World War II, spent 47 days on a life raft and two years in a Japanese prison. "It's difficult for anyone who came through the things I did to forget God," he says, "but I did."—The Covenant Weekly

CHICAGO. — The Temperance League of America, with headquarters in Washington, D.C., and the National Temperance Movement, Inc., with headquarters in Chicago, Illinois, on January 26 and 27, in Chicago, voted to unite in one great temperance movement in America under the name National Temperance League, Inc. point of stagnation in our growth in Christ; that each of us will have a burden for lost souls and a personal responsibility in witness of our Lord. Will you pray too, that God will purify our churches and make us a Glory to His name?

ElDoris Balzer
Wheaton College
Wheaton, Illinois

(We appreciate this first-hand sympathetic account of what transpired at Wheaton College. As the editorial in the Feb. 28 issue of THE MENNONITE insisted we are glad to join with Miss Balzer in praying for more of the movement of the Spirit. But we also insist that it must be according to her statement "when the Spirit works, God calls sin—sin, with no degree of it, and demands that every wrong be righted" and not according to the kind of gradual repentance implied in her next two paragraphs which contradicts what she has just said. It is ever the business of the true Church to speak clearly and decisively against all sin. Furthermore, it is our feeling that her statement that "revival is not an experience but a person—Christ and the probing God" is surely somewhat questionable. If she means only the human element when she speaks of experience then perhaps we can understand why she says what she does. But revival is God working in man as well as for man. The Incarnation of Christ, God experiencing human flesh, is what gives the atonement through His blood, meaning. Christ is God, but He is also perfect man, as the Church has always believed, and as such is the supreme experience of our race that is lost in sin. We are afraid that this tendency to lift a particular experience above the realm of the human is an attempt to lift it above criticism—a common tendency of most churches and especially the Roman Catholic Church. Let us never forget this: God's part in our experience is beyond criticism, but never man's expression of that experience except that of the Man of Calvary. In closing, we reaffirm our basic unity of concern with Miss Balzer "that each of us will have a burden for lost souls and a personal responsibility in witness for our Lord."—Ed.)

"VOICE OUT OF THE WILDERNESS"

Dear Editor:

I am a high school girl and have just lately started getting THE MENNONITE. I read them through from cover to cover and "take it all in."

THE MENNONITE expresses, to me, the ideals of Christian living. The high school I attend is no exception —it is somewhat like infidelity, and it takes quite a struggle on my part to withstand and resist the invisible chord that continually tries to draw me out of a spiritual realm into the worldly realm. THE MENNONITE is a great encouragement to stand for Christ and Christian principles.

News and articles from the mission fields are most impressive to me, and are such a challenge!

The editorials also, are very inspiring. Here is the statement that rather struck me, "The outreach of our concern for our fellowmen measures rather accurately the depth of our own experience." "The Lost Gospel," by Ronald von Riesen shows clearly the necessity of evangelism, and awakens one's concern for our fellowmen.

We are snowbound 10 miles from church and THE MENNONITE comes to us across these snowladen prairies, as a "voice out of the wilderness." So keep up your good work! The Lord will reward you.

A sincere reader,
Margaret Klippenstein
Rush Lake, Sask.

Dear Editor:

We have felt that you have the courage to say things that need be said.

Sincere greetings,

You Must Choose!

On all the earth two kingdoms now remain,
The kingdom of this world and of the Lord
The one, content no longer with the sword
That takes but one life, now with murderous rain
Blankets whole towns with ruin, death and pain.
The other is not seen, not yet outpoured
In visible might, yet here and now adored
By those whose hearts are bound by love's bright chain.

You must choose. You are no longer free
To dally with them both. The time's too late.
Our cities all must share in Sodom's fate,
And where's the ark to ride a brimstone sea
Except a manger? What except the Blood of Christ
Can quench the fire of this last flood?

GOD'S PRESENCE

To stand at night, near the Lakeside shore
When all is so dark and chill—
To hear the "swish" of the "whitecap" waves,
Thus echoing, "Peace, be still."
To see the moon with its golden light,
Through the fleecy cloudlets shine,
Is to stand in awe—to ponder anew,
God's nature and pow'r divine.

To stand and look on beyond that shore,
To the skyline's radiant light;
To hear the cars on the outer drive
Go "speeding" on through the night;
To pause and whisper a silent prayer,
For all who are passing by,
Is to stand in awe—with a greatful heart
And know God's presence is nigh.

Editorials

PROPHECY is being fulfilled today! In Amos 1:13 it reads "...they have ripped up the women with child...that they may enlarge their own borders." On Wednesday morning, October 7, 1949, eighteen-year-old Mrs. Mary Garcia, the young Latin-American mother-to-be, had just left her flat on the fifth floor of a moldering tenement-house in the heart of New York's East Harlem. She was going to the hospital to have her baby. She cautiously descended the worn marble stairs that concealed the age-weakened supports underneath. As she reached the third floor, the rotten landing collapsed, and she crashed through another landing to the first floor. It is a matter of fact that a number of landlords of the area have been fined and jailed since, because of failure to make their dwellings safe for people. Here is a typical illustration of selfish man exploiting his fellowman—endangering the very lives of people for a few extra dollars. This is a phase of prophecy we have completely neglected while trying to divine the future or point to the specific antichrist. There is something eternal about prophecy. It shows that man the sinner differs little from age to age. The temptation to use the souls of men, which are of infinite worth, to gain a few bloody dollars is not a relic of primitive times. There is a fundamental principle that applies far more widely than to landlords; it applies to irresponsible tenants as well, it applies to irresponsible labor as well as irresponsible management. It applies to the church as it hires personnel as well as to business. That principle is found in Mark 10:45: "For even the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." That principle simply stated is not to use souls but to serve souls and in serving them lead them to the Saviour.

WHAT IS THE MATTER WITH THE CHURCH of today? This question is being raised repeatedly in our Sunday school lessons as we read about the dynamic quality of the early church. One wonders whether Elton Trueblood in a message to the young seminary students at Rock Island did not have the answer when in his address entitled "Converting the Unconverted Christians in the Pew," he pointed out that the Christian church with its membership running into the tens of millions is our greatest mission field. We quote further from his message: "Many are ready and willing to be changed from paper members to real members . . . . A little tinkering will not do—the time is too late, the issue too great. There must be a revolution in the church. What is needed is a totally different conception of what Christian society is. Today people think, 'Oh yes, it is a fine thing to have a church in the community. It raises the moral standard. If some people want to go, I say let them go. I have nothing against it. I believe in religious freedom. I am even willing to give a little. Moreover, it is a good place to send the children on Sunday morning. Yes sir, it keeps them out of the house and gives dad a rest after a hard week's work. It is a nice place to go to on Easter.' People go only as observers, sing a little, put a coin into the collection plate and tell the minister how much they have enjoyed the sermon and the minister wonders what he has left unsaid because they should not have enjoyed the sermon. Such a church is not going to change the world.

"But there is a great searching alternative. According to the New Testament conception it was a militant order, not a group sitting on benches being entertained by one man. All were ambassadors, ministers, missionaries. It was a missionary band and not much else. They were not an audience. They merely had a briefing period once a week. In early Quaker days a Quaker was a missionary by definition. [The Anabaptists too were, everyone, a missionary.] Make the church an order—a militant order—no matter how the individual member earns his living. When Jesus gives us his yoke he means for us to use it to carry something. Expect members of the Christian society to be frankly different from the world. They often have to stand against the world. It is possible that the prisons will again become full of Christians as in early Christian history. Do not tone down the message. The Communists do not do that with their message. How often did Jesus warn instead of beg. He offered tears, danger, and asked them whether they were able to drink the cup. The church will have to become smaller before it can become larger."

Profanity is the effort of a weak mind, trying to express itself forcibly.

QUITE A NUMBER of our churches still use the plan of scheduling offerings for various Conference causes on certain Sundays or groups of Sundays during the year. The larger causes get several Sundays while the smaller causes get one Sunday or may even be lumped together on one Sunday. If a church takes seriously its obligation to its local constituency, the district conference, and the General Conference, it will refuse to let such factors as unfavorable weather, pet conference projects on the part of people or leaders, or even irregular attendance upon the part of some of its members, endanger such an imperative ministry as the church seeks to carry out in its various phases. As a Conference we have been led, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, to think that the work of the Kingdom prospers, not in proportion to the effectiveness of any specific board, whether it be the Board of Education, Publication, Relief, Home or Foreign Missions, or Mutual Aid; but, rather, in proportion to our support of the whole even though we may have personal

Vicarious Suffering

The Glorious Circle for the Vicious Circle

by Andrew Shelly

"For he hath made him to be sin for us who knew no sin . . ." (II Cor. 5:21).

THE cross of Christ is referred to in every book of the New Testament except three short epistles—Philemon, 2 John and 3 John. Certainly, the sacrifice of Jesus on the cross and His glorious resurrection, was the center of the messages of the early leaders of the Church. Throughout the Book of Acts we note these references: the recorded utterances of Peter, Stephen, Philip, Paul and others. In the Epistles, the same keynote is struck. And, if we were to choose one symbol of the Christian church, it would have to be the cross.

In a mission in which I worked in Philadelphia we had a sign: "We preach a vacant cross and an empty tomb"—the crucified and risen Saviour!

The heart of the message of the cross is the vicarious suffering and death of Jesus. Without this central truth, the cross has merely sentimental value. The significant thing was not a cross, but the cross! The "Christ of the Cross" gives the meaning! Jesus Christ, "who knew no sin" was made "to be sin for us." The guiltless suffered for the guilty, the just for the unjust, the righteous for the unrighteous!

If we would drink deeply of the full meaning of the cross we must go beyond the 'receiving-end' of it: we must realize that we have been "bought with a price," and we belong to another! This starts into motion a "glorious circle" of blessing: the more we give ourselves, the more we receive; and, the more we receive, the more we can and want to give!

There we have the "vicarious" aspect of the suffering. The word means "in behalf of," "instead of." The central truth of our faith is that "while we were yet sinners Christ died for us." To the Galatians (3:13), Paul writes: "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us: for it is written, cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree."

But, "vicarous suffering" has another side: our side! It is well that as we approach the Passion Week, we meditate upon the wonder of wonders that Jesus Christ shed His blood for our redemption. But, we also need to meditate on the meaning of the word "vicarious" for us—as a natural and logical outcome of our acceptance of the work of Christ in our behalf.

After Peter's great declaration at Caesarea Philippi, Jesus revealed more fully that which would befall Him. During that same interview Jesus uttered the words: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me."

George G. Pidgeon has written a book called Vicarious Living. In this book he has a chapter on "The Call For Redeemers." He quotes St. Paul: "Now I rejoice in my sufferings for your sake, and fill up on my part that which is lacking of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for his body's sake, which is the church." (Col. 1:24).

Pidgeon writes: "It cost God His Son to redeem the world from death; those who would round out His work and carry it to completeness in each generation, must be prepared to put their lives into the redemption of the lost. Life comes only from life; there is life for the dead-in-sin only in the devotion of other lives to their salvation." He says we need "men and women Christ-possessed . . . "

Some people try to avoid even the suffering which they deserve. Others are resigned to suffer that which they deserve. But, how many are willing to suffer that which they feel they do not deserve "for the sake" of others?

Is it not striking that in view of all this clear teaching of the Word of God, that we are so slow to realize our woeful shortcomings? Is it not tragic that frequently the "children of the world" are more willing to sacrifice than "the children of light?" How can we behold the Christ of the Cross in his vicarious suffering for us when we realize that the "children of the world" contribute on the average three times as much in money for such things as liquor as we do for the entire plans of Christ for His Kingdom? How can we explain our unwillingness to sacrifice in time and service when He was willing to "empty Himself" completely for us.

If we would drink deeply of the full meaning of the cross we must go beyond the receiving-end of it: we must realize that we have been "bought with a price," and we belong to another! This starts into motion a "glorious circle" of blessing: the more we give ourselves the more we receive; and the more we receive, the more we can and want to give! A few days ago Miss Carrie ten Boom, Holland, challenged a great mass meeting to explore more deeply the "Riches of Christ." Strange—or is it strange?—she advocated the same method Jesus did! How much more wonderful is this "glorious circle" than the "vicious circle" of those who would "lose their lives," and in the effort lose that for which they seek!

Let us—each one—this Lenten season go to the very heart of the glorious message of the cross of Jesus.

Dr. Hugh A. Brimm, executive secretary of the Social Service Commission of the Southern Baptist Convention, said the "only truthful liquor ad I have ever found is this: 'The road to ruin, walk in—wobble out—at La Victoria Bar, one and a half miles south of Estamica, New Mexico'."

From the Mission Front

India, From the Himalayas to Cape Comorin

by Emma Ruth

(This is the second article in recent issues of THE MENNONITE telling of the experiences of non-missionary personnel on the mission field. The material is taken from a letter by Emma Ruth to her friends in America. Miss Ruth is spending several years as music instructor at Kodaikanal, a school for the the children of missionaries.)

Kodaikanal School
Kodaikanal, South India
January, 1950

I WANT to tell you something of the wonderful trip I enjoyed during our vacation. Elizabeth Boehr, on the staff here, and I were agreed on what we wanted to see. It covered India from Darjeeling in the Himalayas to Cape Comorin, the southern most tip, where the waters of three seas are mingled.

Because of the season of the year, we went almost directly to Darjeeling (7,000 ft.), one of the oldest and most famous of India's hill stations. The view from there of Mt. Kanchanjunga (28,000) is one of the most magnificent sights in the world, I suppose. So near it seems, you feel you could put out your hand and almost touch those snowy white peaks and yet they are 50 miles away. Everyone hopes to get a glimpse of Everest while at Darjeeling, even though it is only a tiny peak a 100 miles away. We were no exception. We went for sunset view from Tiger Hill, but were met with a blank wall of grey fog when we reached the top. We almost despaired of seeing it, when just at sunset the horizon was swept clean as with one breath, and the whole panorama was silhouetted against the evening sky. The fluffy white clouds were rolling beneath us, as we stood in wonder and amazement, looking at this stupendous piece of God's creation. We went away humbly grateful.

Memorial to Faith and Courage

Coming south we had two days at Calcutta—the port which has seen the eager arrival of so many of our missionary friends or their departure after having spent so much of themselves in this needy land. At Lee Memorial, a mission school with some 500 children, and incidentally rooms for guests, we heard the story of the Lee family, who lost six children in one night in a landslide at Darjeeling. This home is truly a memorial to the faith and courage of the Lees. At meal time all the guests are gathered around a long table, family style. The family is rarely the same for two meals, for the guests come from all parts of the world on all kinds of missions. That contact alone was a thrilling experience.

Shiny 1949 Models Beside Oxcarts

At Hyderabad we saw the old and new intermingled, as you do everywhere. Shiny 1949 model American cars and creaking oxcarts in the same traffic. Our friends, the Hieberts loaded us—10 in all—into their station wagon and we made a quick tour of their field, seeing the wonderful work that is being done and enjoying real American food, including fried chicken and ice cream. At Cochin—west coast—we slept in a mosquito infested house (by mistake), but sat all day in front of the elegant Malabar Hotal, watching the endless variety of water-craft weaving back and forth on the beautiful harbor. There are always compensations. Travancore, famed for its tropical vegetation was all we expected and more—cocoanut palms, banana trees, rice fields of the greenst green, and water canals everywhere.

Oldest of Syrian Churches

It was in Kottayam where we saw one of the oldest churches of the Syrian Christians, who date their origin to the preaching of St. Thomas in 52 A. D. They have no explanation for the fact that they kept the Light hidden under a bushel, so to say, through all these centuries. Now they are getting busy.

The biggest thrill came when we stood—you can see the spot on the map—with our feet on the southern most tip of India, looking out upon the waters of the Bay of Bengal to the east, the Indian Ocean to the south and the Arabian Sea to the west. Though it is holy water—there is a Hindu temple right on the point—we couldn't resist dipping our toes in. A few sailing vessels and other boats were plying the blue waters. We stood watching until the sun had set behind the watery horizon.

Darkest Works and Brightest Fruits

At Madura, our last stop—only 70 miles from here—we saw the darkest works of Hinduism and the brightest fruits of Christian mission, more than a 100 years of work, side by side. How the two can continue to exist together is hard to understand. Everywhere you go you find the two campanion institutions of the church—the school and the hospital. The filth in the famous Hindu temple there, physical and moral, is about the greatest contrast you can imagine to the immaculate modern mission hospital and the schools. For Lent

A Heart-Searching Confession

by Jesse Ziegler

Congregation may join in reading whatever seems true to your own inner need for confession.

People: O Lord, as we appear in the white light of thy presence we become aware of our own sinfulness and that we are poor, and weak, and undone. We have turned everyone to his own way and forsaken thy way. We have sinned and come short of thy glorious expectation.

Minister: Father, have mercy upon us.

People: We come confessing that from the time that we first knew right from wrong we have made many choices of the wrong. We have hidden many such choices deep within us. No one knows the things we have done that make us unable to speak clearly with regard to sin—no one knows—but thou God, who seest our inmost parts, knowest us well.

Minister: Lord, have mercy upon us.

People: The days of high school and colleges contribute to the burden of our guilt and shame. We have dates seeking exploits rather than comradeship. We strove hard for office and neglected the kindliness we might have shown. We were often inconsiderate of parents who loved us.

Minister: God, have mercy upon us.

People: We confess that attitudes toward many of thy children ,our brothers, are not right. We believe forced segregation according to race is wrong but we easily acquiesce. We join in discussing the problems of unfairness to other races and then comfortably feel we have done our duty.

Minister: Father of all, have mercy upon us.

People: We have been participants in war-making ing society. We tried to stay out of participation, but thou knowest how far we failed. We helped to maintain high morale, we paid taxes on income, on railroad fares, and in many other hidden places. Our hearts sank when we heard of reverses to our armies and we secretly felt hope when our armies were winning. We had our expenses paid in college or seminary or C.P.S. with profits of war making. And then we looked at the fellows in the army and thanked thee that we were better than they while closing our eyes to our own participation.

Minister: Lord, be merciful unto us.

People: The lives of some who have given up so much for Thee remind us of how much we live for things. We catch ourselves figuring how many new things each pay will secure. We find ourselves buying things instead of new shares in the program of the church.

Minister: God, have mercy on us.

People: We delight in those things that are sensual even when we want to take delight in the spiritual. We look at persons of the other sex as stimulants for our appetites rather than as potential brothers and sisters in Christ Jesus. We have prostituted the beauty of thy highest creation to the satisfaction of our senses.

Minster: Lord, have mercy upon us.

People: We neglect those disciplines of the spirit which could help us to be more like Jesus. We get up too late to have morning prayers and are too tired to pray in the evening. We have so much reading to do that we leave our Bibles untouched except when we want to prove something. There just is no time in our schedule for meditation.

Minister: God have mercy on us.

People: We are ashamed as we consider our giving of money to thee. Our puny dollar bills come far short of being the minimum tithe. The Conference Budget isn't being met, programs are being cut—we suppose because we give dollar bills instead of a tithe.

Minister: Lord, be merciful unto us.

People: It is so easy to miss Sunday School. It is the one morning we can sleep, but we know our support should be given the Sunday School. We have become neglectful.

Minister: God, be merciful unto us.

People: We have often buried our talents and hidden our light under a bushel of timidity, or tiredness, or inferiority feelings.

Minister: Lord, be merciful unto us.

People: We find it much easier to conform our behavior and thinking to patterns of this world set by newspaper, radio, mail-order catalog, the expectation of society, than to have our minds transformed by giving ourselves to thee.

Minister: Lord, have mercy on us.

People: We become aware sometimes that we are contributing to the continued dismemberment of the Body of Christ not entirely on the basis of principle. Sometimes we get just an inkling that our pride and fear for security may be influencing us.

Minister: God, have mercy on us.

People: Most of all, Lord, we are aware of our sinful failure to spend time in witnessing to the Gospel and winning people for Christ who must miss so much unless they find Him.

Minister: God, have mercy upon us.

hended it not," is certainly true here. What a tremendous work is being carried on by the church for the healing of the body, mind, and soul of India. Yet it seems but a drop in the bucket, a tiny bit of leaven at work. Over and over again—north and south—we saw the Indians bowing down to wood and stone. And what horrible images they have of their gods—gods that are no gods. Continue to uphold the work and the workers in your prayers, that the Light may penetrate the "gross darkness."

We arrived back here in time to spend Christmas in lovely Kodaikanal, where it seems to be spring eternally. A few more days and our missionary children from Burma, Ceylon, Arabia and India will be converging on this place. We will be glad to see all of them again. School begins January 19. Many of you have asked about my return to the States. The Golden Jubilee of our mission in C.P., which I hope to attend, will be held late in December 1950. It also happens that I have a number of super piano students, who will be graduating in May '51. So that might be a reason for extending my stay into 1951.

It Is Being Done

JUST THE BEGINNING OF THINGS

In one of our Mennonite communities a lay evangelistic visitation program was undertaken. People went out by two's to call on homes. Fifteen teams went out one evening to call on people. That was just the beginning of things.

The pastor of one of the churches that took part writes, "I have found since that time members have been coming to me with questions concerning places which they might visit—also concerning encouraging reports as to contacts which they have had since that time with the one whom they went to see on the first assignment.

"There is no better training place than out in the homes of people whom members of our churches are anxious to win. I find them becoming so conscious of their inadequacy in Bible knowledge. I find them requesting prayer that as they go to make a certain call, words may be given to them and that they might be tactful in winning that one to a love of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

"Quite often after a visit or two a report is given with a probable suggestion as to what the deepest need of the individual may be. Often the request comes that the pastor follow up these particular calls with an effort to supply the type of nurture which may be needed most.

"I am of the opinion that this type of lay evangelistic effort should not be centered only in one week of the year, but it should be a continuing project."—Reported by Evangelism Committee preferences. While it is true that we are democratic in procedures, we must not forget that democracy stands or falls with responsibility. At Conference, through democratic procedures, our delegates reach decisions. If that democratic procedure is to mean anything, the churches represented should follow through. Freedom without responsibility all along the line leads to anarchy—the exact opposite of the Scriptural injunction to do all things "decently and in order." We offer two positive suggestions. Let each church consider sending in most of its gifts to General Conference Headquarters earmarked "to be divided according to percentage requested by each of the various boards and committees (see "Conference Stewardship Thermometer" on back page) that they may carry out their assignment according to the instructions, decisions, and regulations of Conference." Then let us, if we really mean business as a Conference church encourage our people to support the entire program of the General Conference by systematically calling attention to the variety of needs served through the Conference. This may be done by means of posters, public announcements, bulletin inserts, sermons and sermon illustrations, and themes for young peoples meetings and class meetings, men's and women's meetings.—J.J.E.

An Awakening Needed

For several centuries the Church and the Christian leaders kept the world in turmoil. The rulers and the rich and powerful wanted to maintain the "status quo" unchallenged; war was a pastime for kings; cruel injustices and human bondage existed in endless forms. But with the Church there was no compromise. Till about 400 A. D., the Church was pacifist; Christians refused to bear arms; Roman soldiers who became converted threw away their swords; the Christians preached a hearty sharing of possessions; their attitude toward property was in terms of strict stewardship—with wealth only recognized as it served the needs of men and the Kingdom of God. No wonder they turned the world upside down! We are not suggesting that the Christian today return to those early extremes,—but if the Church had continued its challenge of power, selfishness and injustice in the name of love and redemption, the evil growth of communism would never have found ground for its roots.

TODAY ITS THE COMMUNISTS

WHAT THEY SAY . . . . . about The Handbook to the Mennonite Hymnary

"ONE OF THE BEST HYMNBOOKS OF recent years is the one published by the Mennonites, a grand collection of the solid hymns of the Church with a good, but not disproportionate, representation of hymns and chorales of German origin. The present Handbook gives data about both the words and the music of each number in this book, facts about authors and composers, and helpful suggestions concerning interpretation and use, all very concisely stated and with no sentimental gush. The German originals are given, and in at least one case a Greek original, of translated hymns. Since a great part of the material in the Mennonite Hymnary is common to all standard collections, the handbook will be of value to those who use other hymnbooks."—The Christian Century.

YOU NAME IT

If you are a Sunday school secretary or a church treasurer or a secretary of a church on the Hundred-Per-Cent Plan, you will probably have learned from experience that it is always helpful, when you correspond about affairs of your church, to name the church.

You name it! Name it correctly. And we make this further suggestion that at the top of the page, before you indicate the date, write the correct official name of the church or the Sunday school whom you are representing. That will always make it possible for the preson to whom you are writing to identify this letter with the proper church so that all the correspondence in the file for that church is filed in one folder, and all of the records concerning money matters are in one account.

That's why we say: "You name it." Everyone will thank you for it.

HELP! HELP!

One of our conference book stores, the Mennonite Book Concern, Berne, Ind., has a surplus of 1950 Higley's S. S. Commentaries, which regularly sell for $1.50, but to move these, they offer them at 90c each. They also have a few 1950 Daily Talks with God, regularly $1.00, now 606c. If you can use either of these, send your order with check immediately to Mennonite Book Concern, Berne, Ind.

HAROLD UREY SPEAKS AT SEMINARY

HAROLD UREY, famous atomic scientist, who had a major roll in developing the atom bomb, gave his audience a chilling picture of tremendous military force on which the hopes of this nation are resting. While he failed to convince the members of his peace-church audience, nevertheless Urey revealed authoritatively, just how much this nation is depending on the false security of a terrible weapon of mass murder.

Aganetha Fast, recently returned from the General Conference Mission Field in China by airplane, presented a strong missionary message in chapel on Tuesday, March 7. To those who believe that there is no Christian missionary activity in China, the speaker reassured them that missions are very much alive in that country, of the Orient. It is true that the missionary personnel is greatly deminishing though by no means completely wiped out. But the glorious fact is that the converts who compose the Chinese Churches have taken upon themselves the duty of proclaiming the gospel. Therefore, in one sense of the word, the General Conference now has two thousand missionaries working vigorously in all parts of China.

Aaron J. Epp, son of the Elder John Epp, of Henderson, Nebraska, was installed as pastor of the First Mennonite Church of Chicago. President S. F. Pannabecker was in charge of the service and brought the morning message. The Seminary octet was present to render special music.

Lois Kreider started the craft class which is being offered this quarter as a regular course for credit. The instructor has a master's degree from Columbia University in this general area of work.

C. E. Rediger, who lives right here in the Seminary community, led prayer meeting, Wednesday evening, March 15. He is head of the far flung work of the Congo Inland Mission.

FREEMAN IN BIBLE WEEK SERIES

During the day he will also be available for student counseling. There will be evening services beginning at 7:45. The public is invited to the evening services which will be held in the Auditorium.

Miss Marie Regier spoke in chapel on Wednesday. She discussed student life and activities in China under the new political set-up of that country today.

President Miller and a men's quartet went to Avon last Sunday where they had charge of the morning and evening services in the German Presbyterian church.

Charles Boddie the colored lecturer who spoke in the auditorium last week presented an excellent message, very appropriate for the present time.

COORDINATOR VISITS BLUFFTON

DEAN LONG, coordinator for the North Central Association liberal-arts study, visited the campus Tuesday, March 14. He is vice president and director of adult education at Evansville College. The Bluffton College faculty is making an evaluation study this year, studying entrance requirements, freshman testing and orientation, and graduation requirements. Long met with committees of the faculty throughout the day and was the speaker at a faculty meeting.

Bertha Fast was a campus visitor March 12, 13. She spoke in College Church Sunday evening and in the chapel Monday morning.

Miss Humphreys, director of elementary teacher education in the state of Ohio, visited the college March 16 to assist in working out the new elementary teacher education program which is to be offered next year. This will be the first time that the college has offered preparation for elementary teachers in the last twenty-five years.

Plans are moving forward for celebration of the 50th anniversary of the college at commencement time. One of the features will be a Swiss Day, June 2. Details for the day have not been workd out, but it will be commemoration of the settling of several of the Mennonite communities by immigrants from Switzerland.

BETHEL FACULTY JOINS IN FOUR COLLEGE CONFERENCE

A CONFERENCE of four colleges—Bethel, McPherson, Kansas Wesleyan, and Bethany, took place Saturday, March 11 at McPherson College. Adel F. Throckmorton, state superintendent of public instruction, spoke on subjects of interest to both publicly and privately controlled schools. A panel discussion followed the address. The deans of the four colleges and Throckmorton constituted the panel. For the afternoon, the conference was broken up into sectional meetings.

A full length color film, "The Enchanted Forest," preceded by a fifteen minute concert by the forty-voice Junior Choir of the Bethel College Church, will be presented for the Bethel Goodwill Builders, March 24 at 7:30 p.m. in Memorial Hall. Regardless of whether enrolled or not in the Goodwill Builders Club, the general public is invited to attend this program. All children will be given complimentary tickets on arrival.

David H. Suderman, professor of music, served as judge for the vocal solos at the annual spring contest festival at Bellefont, Kansas, in the Windhorst High School. He served in the same capacity at the annual music contest at Whitewater, Kansas, held by the Butler County league on Friday, March 17.

The Donatelli Trio, consisting of soprano, flutist, and pianist, performed at the last concert of the season of the Bethel College Memorial Hall Series on the night of March sixth.

From March 19 to 26 we will have revival meetings. W. Unruh is to conduct the meetings. The cannery was at our church the 24th. Eight different churches took part in this canning project for relief. Ten head of beef were slaughtered and put up in 5,000 cans, I believe. Some 87 quart cans of lard were also put up. The basement of the church was used for the kitchen—cutting and cooking. Last Sunday evening a very good program was rendered in church to a large audience by the West New Hopedale Church near Ringwood. The Sunday school rooms have been finished—real improvement. A program was given by our local choruses; also other interesting numbers after which refreshments were served. Unruh spoke to us on the evening of February 24. He spoke especially to the church leaders and workers. In his message he pointed out that the task of the church and Sunday school is to "Go make disciples and teach them," and in order to do that we workers must be wholehearted disciples of Christ. The message of the church is to accept Christ and then make the appeal. The method should be like that of the first Pentecost: "They all spoke." Then he presented the Sunday school teacher training courses. He urged the Sunday school extension work and he made it very plain that the pre-school age children should have the best rooms of the Sunday school. He also presented the support of a peace worker.—Corr.

Christine Lukens of Beloit, who attended International Youth Camp at Boeth, Wales, selected by the World Council of Churches to represent the United States. Charles Sanders, a Cherokee of Stillwell, Oklahoma, who is studying for the ministry. All churches were well represented. The Alexanderwohl Men's Chorus brought, us a program Sunday, March 12.—Ralph Krehbiel, Corr.

Langenwalter retiring minister, delivered the charge in special installation services. D. C. Wedel, assistant to the president of Bethel College, also spoke. The new minister, who is accompanied to Wichita by his wife and three small daughters, is a native of Quakertown, Pennsylvania. David Livingstone of Africa

Part III Missionary Travels and Researches

(David Livinstone as a boy, grew up in humble circumstances. He began working in a cotton mill at the age of ten. He always studied while he worked. By the age of 27 he went to Africa as an ordained minister and a doctor of medicine. In his youth, he constantly studied nature, botany and biology. He learned astronomy. All this prepared him for his adventures in uncharted Africa. He has up to this point, sought a trade route to the Atlantic from deep in the heart of the continent. This failing, he now seeks a route to the East to the Indian Ocean. Ed.)

HE OPENED AFRICA

By Arthur G. Skeeles

Missionary Travels and Researches

WHEN David Livingstone and his family arrived in Cape Town, South Africa, in March, 1852, he found much excitement over war with the natives. Anyone who wanted to help an African was under suspicion. He had great difficulty in buying powder and shot, and even greater difficulty in buying a few boxes of percussion caps for his muzzle-loading gun. When he asked a country postmaster why he had been charged twice as much for some of his letters as for others, he was threatened with a suit for defamation of character; and rather than be delayed while the suit could be heard, he paid the postmaster thirteen pounds—a large sum for a man whose annual salary was only one hundred pounds.

Livingstone was delayed at Cape Town for nearly two months after his wife and children had sailed for England. He improved the time by learning from Sir Thomas Maclear, the Astronomer Royal, how to take accurate observations to determine latitude and longitude. He also found opportunity to preach in English, and confessed that he found it difficult, after preaching only in the native language for ten years.

The Whites Destroy His Property

The delays at Cape Town probably saved his life; for when he reached Kuruman in September he learned that a party of about six hundred white men had destroyed his home at Kolobeng. They brought wagons and carried off everything they wanted for themselves; they tore his books to pieces and scattered the leaves in front of the house; they smashed his bottles of medicine and drove off the cattle of the natives. They were determined that the natives should not be civilized.

He writes, "They told Sechele (the native chief) that they had come to fight, because he allowed Englishmen to proceed to the north, though they had repeatedly ordered him not to do so." Their anger was thus directed against Livingstone, and if he had been at Kolobeng when the attack occurred they would probably have killed him. The whites attacked the natives and killed sixty of them, but the natives had guns and fired back and killed thirty-five of the whites. This further angered the white men, for they said Livingstone had taught the natives to shoot them. Killing natives was a different matter, for as Livingstone wrote, "They kill the blacks without compunction and without provocation because they believe they have no souls."

Livingstone estimated that the articles carried away or destroyed could not be replaced for less than three hundred pounds—his salary for three years. He applied to the Government of South Africa and to the Missionary Society for compensation, but never received any.

Preaches as He Goes

After three months at Kuruman, Livingstone went north another way, avoiding Kolobeng, and spent some months in missionary work. Every Sunday he preached. On Sunday, May 15, 1853, he wrote: "Preached twice to about sixty people. Very attentive. It is only divine power which can enlighten dark minds as these." He wrote on another occasion: "When I stand up, all the women and children draw near, and having ordered silence, I explain the plan of salvation."

He acknowledged that the immediate results were meagre, but encouraged himself with the thought that "Our work and its fruits are cumulative. We work toward another state of things. Future missionaries will be rewarded by conversions for every sermon. We are their pioneers and helpers. They will doubtless have more light than we, but we served our Master earnestly and proclaimed the same gospel as they will do.

Livingstone was looking for a place to establish a mission station, but he did not find a suitable spot. Everywhere he went he saw the results of the slave trade. The people who were not murdered or made slaves were debased by the traffic. He was convinced that the greatest thing he could do was to open up a trade route to the ocean.

Seeking a Route to the Sea

On November 11, 1853, he started from Linyanti for Saint Paul de Loanda on the Atlantic coast. It was a journey of more than five hundred miles through parts of Africa which no white man had ever visited. He had with him twenty-seven natives to carry his small supplies of coffee, cloth, beads, and medicines, and a few ivory tusks to be sold at the coast. He either walked or rode an ox. He wrote that unless he sat up very straight, the ox would poke him in the ribs with his long horns when he threw his head around suddenly.

Much of the way Livingstone was ill—he records thirty-one attacks of intermittent fever—while frequent rains and streams to be forded three or four times a day kept him almost constantly soaked. He notes in his journal, "Sick all Sunday and unable to move.... I could do nothing but roll from side to side in my miserable little tent, in which, with all the shade we could give it, the thermometer stood upward of ninety degrees."

When they came to a threatening tribe, Livingstone had to meet the chief and conduct negotiations no matter how sick he was, for his native carriers were helpless. These tribes knew white men only as slave traders, and they were therefore suspicious and treacherous. More than once he was confronted with savage warriors who demanded that he go back unless he would give them a gun, an ox, or a man. The gun he could not spare, and a man (to be made a slave) he would not give. Once in a while he was compelled to give an ox, although he had only a few and could ill spare any.

He lamented the lack of books. He had with him a select and necessary few, including Thomson's Tables, a Nautical Almanac, and a Bible. On this journey, as always, Livingstone noted the features of the country, the plants and animals he saw, and the appearance and characteristics of the natives. Mountains and rivers were located by latitude and longitude.

Returning to the Heart of Africa

On May 31, 1854, he arrived at Saint Paul de Loanda, ragged and sick. He says, "The sensation of lying on an English bed, after six months' lying on the ground, was indescribably delightful." He was kindly received by the Portuguese authorities and by Mr. Edmund Gabriel, the British Commissioner for the suppression of the slave trade. Good food improved his health. He wrote letters and reports, and spent four months in comfort.

Livingstone was urged to return to England from Loanda. Perhaps he might have done so had it not been for the obligation he felt to accompany his helpers back to their homes. He had not lost one of the twenty-seven natives on the journey to Loanda, but he knew they would not be able to return without him. So on September 24, 1854, he started back to Linyanti.

Some days after leaving the coast, while visiting a Portuguese gentleman at a place called Pungo Adongo, he learned that the ship Forerunner, on which his letters and reports had been sent to England, had sunk off Madeira, all passengers but one being lost, and, of course, all his letters and reports. He therefore stayed some time at Pungo Adongo rewriting the letters, journals and reports. Further delays were occasioned by his sickness and the sickness of his men. It was September 11, 1855, when they reached Linyanti.

Natives Rejoice Upon Return Home

A day of thanksgiving was observed when the natives reached their homes. They had earned money at Loanda by helping to unload a cargo of coal, or as they called it "Stones that burned," for which they received sixpence a day. On the trip home all their money had ben spent, but they still had suits of clothing, with white and red caps. They dressed in these and paraded to the great delight of their friends.

It had been more than three years since he had left Cape Town; his friends were worried and well they might have been. At Linyanti he received a letter from Mrs. Livingstone asking what the "source of attraction" had been to keep him so long. He replied playfully, "Don't know what apology to make you for a delay I could not shorten. But as you are a merciful, kindhearted dame, I expect you to write out an apology in proper form and I shall read it before you with as long a face as I can exhibit. Disease was the chief obstacle. . . . I have written you by every opportunity, and I am very sorry your letters have been miscarried."

Mother, his father-in-law, had come into the region in 1854 in the hope of finding him, and had left a box of goods at Linyanti to await his return. The natives thought this box must be bewitched, so it was placed on an island in the river and a hut built over it; and there Livingstone found it safe when he came a year later. He must have greatly enjoyed the white shirts and woolen socks, the lemon juice, quince jam, tea and coffee. Some of the things had come from his family in Scotland.

The Challenge of a Children's Camp

by Ruth E. Pye

IT seems as though time is becoming scarcer with each day but perhaps it is only because we are able to see those things that need to be done a little better than we did at first.

This has been another warm week but last evening during the chapel service, the Lord sent us a beautiful thunderstorm and the children, instead of becoming frightened, enjoyed it to the utmost.

Our new campers arrived on Monday with about a third more boys than girls but fortunately the two Moody boys also arrived so we were prepared for it. Helen, Lois, and I are in cabin "two" with the older girls and we are glad for this opportunity to work with them although we do miss the little boys. Helen's only responsibility is camp crafts and she enjoys her work; it helps the rest of us very much to have somebody dependable in that department.

I think that all four of us experienced a very slight tag of loneliness on Sunday morning when the quartet left our camp for the Vineland Unit. They had arrived Saturday afternoon in time for the big picnic, gave their program in chapel that evening and were almost idolized by some of the little boys. The children were thrilled with their songs and I feel that their visit was very worthwhile if only from the children's point of view.

This new camp had a rather bad send off due to the fact that two of the older boys ran away the third night. Apparently they left as soon as the lights were out in the dorm and they must have had good luck in their hitch-hiking because they were back in Washington by mid-night. Needless to say, the counselors were even more on the job now than they were before.

Then, also, we have had an epidemic of "pink eye" and it has been necessary to watch the children very closely. One little girl awoke this morning and found that her eyes were pasted shut, another boy was in the same condition, and almost worst of all, one of the main counselors is now in isolation with it. She has very close contact with the little girls; that is likely the reason for this and also for the unwelcome guests she found in her hair yesterday. The girls' hair is checked each night but still these things seem to steal in. At any rate, the pink eye cases are put in strict isolation and taken home, if possible.

On Wednesday, Mr. and Mrs. Eberhardt, the matron of the girls at the Emergency Home, and I, visited Camp Reeder, the police boys' camp about fifty miles south of our camp. Needless to say, we thoroughly enjoyed the ride since that is the first we have been any distance from camp. Camp Reeder is situated on the Potomac River which enables good boating and water sports, but they have no religious program and although they have more money behind them, Camp Bennett still seems to be the choice of the two. But I was quite surprised, when I found that I was actually very anxious to return to camp and to the children. This work is deepening its roots in our hearts with each day and our unit will definitely not return to our home churches in the same condition as we left. It has been an education not to be found in books. In view of this, I would strongly recommend a unit here next summer.

Comments by the Editor-- "Wanted -- More Hilltops"

ONE thing that never leaves you the same is an experience such as Peter had on the Mount of Transfiguration. Once you have come face to face with God, and your soul has been stirred, you never again are quite the same. We need more of such experiences.

When life has been lived on the level, day in and day out, and there have come no hilltops on which new visions and vistas are seen, one's life may be a happy and contented one and a good one, but the humdrum reduces the vision and makes things quite ordinary.

There are hilltops in our experiences which are very valuable. For instance, a conference may be such a hilltop of religious experience. Student conferences are such; the "Y" conferences of college days and other special conferences serve as "hilltops" for us. Or a retreat may serve as a hilltop in our experience, something which we shall never forget. Your local church may have had a special week-end retreat to discuss problems and plans which somehow stirred you. Evangelistic services are intended to be hilltops. Special seasons of the year such as Easter and Christmas may well be our hilltops.

As we enter the Easter season, we may well make this a hilltop experience of new dedication, penitence,

First Impressions of Basketball

As Seen by a New Zealander

UPON entering the building, my first general impression was noise, varying in degree, with a steady babble of voices, interspersed with screams. After I had adjusted myself to this, I looked around and discovered that I was standing on the edge of a large floor. Men were running around on this floor in an aimless fashion, with apparently no purpose.

Ten Exhibitionists

After closer observation, I find that they seem to be chasing and throwing a large ball, somewhat larger than a man's head. Later I learned that the men throwing this ball ultimately try to get it through a rim with cloth hanging below it. This rim is a little higher than a man can reach. Ten of the twelve men on the floor are very scantily dressed, and they are the most active. The other two men, wearing garments of blue and white stripes, seem to be the governors of the game. The ten men, running around on the floor, whom for convenience's sake we shall call exhibitionists, seem to be rather closely governed by the men with the whistles, whom we shall call governors. They adhere rather strictly to the actions and gestures of the governors, and all action ceases when they wish it.

The Strange Behavior of the Spectators

There are also many people present here. They are seated on both sides of the open floor on which the exhibitionists perform. Their sole occupation seems to be watching the exhibitionists, especially the one who has the large ball in his possession. After watching them for a while I find that they are not as quiet and passive as they might be. As a matter of fact, the most fascinating aspect of these entire proceedings is the strange behaviour of the spectators. Although they do little conversing among themselves, they are vocally quite active, especially when the large ball passes through the aforementioned rim.

It seems as if this innocent ball is the key object of play, and its every move is followed with a great degree of anticipation. All children present indulge in vocal and physical activity. The adults present do likewise, exhibiting childlike behaviour.

Possessed with Ten Thousand Devils

I later observed another aspect of these strange actions. Two or three people get off their seats and present themselves in front of the crowd. Here they spend a short period of time indulging in the strangest behaviour. They yell and shout loudly and run and jump about like one with a fit or possessed with ten thousand devils. The purpose of this uninhibited display seems to be to stir the emotions of the crowd to a still higher pitch. When one considers the already emotionally aroused crowd, it would seem very unnecessary.

The bedlam and pandemonium evident at certain times is far beyond the power of words to express. The screams and shouts of the spectators are not always of approval but often of condemnation. Judging from the expression of some of the spectators, it seems as if they feel a lot more like shedding blood than like having a good time, which, I'm told, is the ultimate objective of this entire procedure.

So Quiet

Sometimes, at very rare intervals, and for only a moment, it is so quiet that only the muffled patter of rubber soles and the bouncing of the ball is heard on the floor. This spell of silence is always soon broken and the spectators again plunge into a united, frenzied state of wholesale insanity. These rare moments are comparable to the calm before the storm, often just before one of the exhibitionists is privileged to make an attempt at throwing the ball through the rim without any interference, that is, simply, what is known as a "free throw."

After a rather exhaustive study of the exhibitionists, it is evident that they compose two factions who fight to have possession of the ball. Five of these men try to throw the ball through the rim on one end of the floor and the other five try to throw it through the rim on the far end of the floor. Each group of five apparently works together as a team.

Screams of Derision

After one team succeeds in throwing the ball through a rim, the other team gets a chance to try the same thing, only through the other rim. This simple cycle seems to be the entire pattern of play. The men with striped shirts only control and govern this cycle. However, the crowd would also like to do so at certain times, as is evident by their screams of derision.

The exhibitionists are not all peaceful either. They struggle with great inner conflict and overt physical exhibition. At one time the scuffle became so violent that one man lay on the floor in terrible agony and suffering. Nevertheless, he very willingly got to his feet and continued to move about as before.

I later discovered that this entire proceeding is divided into what is known as "quarters," of which there are four; and broadly speaking into "halves," of which there are only two, consisting of two "quarters" each. Near the end of the last quarter the spectators become more and more frenzied, screaming and yelling and leaping up from their seats. Some we've actually observed jumping out on the playing floor.

A Formless Conglomeration

The facial expressions of these screaming, half-crazed individuals is difficult to describe. It seems impossible that any human beings could open their

NEW YORK CITY.—The American Bible Society, to safeguard editions of the Holy Scriptures, has stored well-printed copies of the books in fireproof buildings which include the Library of the University of Colorado at Boulder, Colorado; the Library of Dartmouth College, Hanover, New Hampshire and the Publication Library of the American Bible Society in New York City. For this safe-keeping program, up to October 25, 1949 in addition to its own publications, the Society had received Scriptures from the Bible Society of India and Ceylon; the China Bible House in Shanghai; the Czechoslovakian Bible Society; the Japan Bible Society, the National Bible Society of Scotland, the Netherlands Bible Society and the Norwegian Bible Society. Papier mache mats are also stored in fireproof warehouses in Vancouver, British Columbia. Bibles, Testaments and Portions of the Bible are stored in Hong Kong.

NEARLY 100,000 children were thrown into adult jails alongside hardened criminals last year, the Children's Bureau estimates. Youth were found in road gangs and serving sentences in penitentiaries. In thirty-four of the forty-eight states children were found in jails with grownups in spite of the fact that most of these states have laws protecting children from this kind of treatment. Institutions help to solve problems; but often they help to hide problems.

CONFERENCE STEWARDSHIP THERMOMETER

I am glad to report that receipts so far during 1950 have been coming in very regularly. The total of the receipts for each board or committee is as follows:

Board or Committee	Budget	January-February Receipts	Per cent received to date
Foreign Missions	$255,000	$42,141	17
Emergency Relief	178,250	20,524	11
Home Missions	59,800	15,181	25
Biblical Seminary	56,000	6,363	11
Board of Education	17,000	1,320	8
Peace Committee	10,500	1,286	12
Board of Publication	10,000	737	7
Ministers' Aid	6,000	20	—
General Treasury	5,115	1,014	20
Mutual Aid Board	11,850	626	5
W. M. A.	9,500	744	8
Y. P. U.	3,800	150	4
Doctrine and Conduct Committee	400	130	32
	$623,215	$89,816	14

While a little over 16% of the year is past, 15% of the total budget needs have been received. We must, however, remember that each individual board or committee has its own work to take care of, so we should try to keep the average for each, up to its requirements.

In behalf of the boards and committees we thank every donor who has contributed toward our conference work. May God bless us all as we work together and direct our interest and prayers to do His will.

Very Sincerely,
A. Theodore Mueller

The Reader Says

Dear Editor:

This is to tell you how much I appreciate your recent editorial in the February 28 issue of the Mennonite. It begins "Revivals are making the headlines..." and deals with the board social sins of mankind.

One of the convictions I've had become deeper and stronger during this year of experience at Louisiana State University is that one of the greatest needs of today is for Christians to become totally Christian in all areas of living—race relations, economic justice, perhaps in political life—as well as in areas of Sunday church attendance. Anything less than total Christianity (or at least an earnest effort in that direction) weakens Christian testimony and often nullifies it... This letter is written in an interesting setting. I am at Southern's University, Baton Rouge's Negro University, taking in part of their Religious Emphasis Week. The day-and-a-half spent here are interesting and challenging as former contacts with students and faculty here have been... Though slavery has long gone, the Negroes are still lacking so much freedom. When, for instance, Louisiana State U. can hire janitorial staff for the beginning pay of 28c an hour (on which to support a family) and when white people still carry with them much of the attitude of a superior race (desiring to keep the Negro "in his place") something is drastically wrong. And the Church? It, too, is segregated, even in the enlightened North.

Thank you again for that editorial which pointed up some of these basic issues.

Sincerely,
Edith Claassen

The Resurrection Level of Living

An Editorial Meditation

A STORY is often told about Mary the mother of Jesus that quotes her during the dark days between Good Friday and Easter dawn as saying, "We must adjust ourselves to a world without Him." Despite the great fact of the Resurrection of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, we are still adjusting ourselves to a world with Him left out. The Resurrection tells us that our redemption is an accomplished fact. The Resurrection tells us that all that Jesus taught and lived and died for, is as eternal and irrevocable as the Son of God Himself who lives and abides forever. Thus, when we stand at the open grave of a loved one or at the long-closed grave of one dear to us, let us not forget that for the Christian even death itself is turned to victory—that we have lost nothing but gained immensely. This Resurrection level of life is even intended for us on this side of death. We must adjust ourselves rather to a world with Him infinitely closer to us than when he walked on the shores of Galilee! That is the far-reaching significance of the Empty Tomb. Nowhere in this wide world or universe can we escape Christ, his love and His law. He is forever here. Because he is forever here, there is no situation in life to which He does not speak. Because He is forever here, there is absolutely no excuse for compromise of His eternal law of love and justice. There is no excuse for interim ethics or "being realistic" and taking up the methods of the godless in our relationships. The Resurrection has lifted all life to a timeless level. Every act comes under the aspect of eternity. In eternity righteousness and love are the abiding power of God. If we are not to adjust ourselves to a world without Him and bring upon ourselves destruction we must learn to live in Eternity with the abiding Christ now!—JJE

The Finished Work of Christ

by William H. Wrighton

WHEN Cecil Rhodes was dying in South Africa, he said, "So much to do and so little done." Christ had an infinitely greater task, yet He was able to say, "It is finished." John 19:30). He had purchased for us eternal redemption and finished the work the Father gave Him to do.

The expression, "It is finished," is one word in the Greek New Testament: Tetelestai. This word has in it the idea of purpose and end in view. We have incorporated the root of this word in our English "telegraph," "telephone," and "television," which also have in them the thought of distant objectives reached.

When Christ said, "Tetelestai," He was declaring the completion of the eternal purpose of God. Sovereign grace was in the plan of redemption; and Christ was delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, even though He was taken and by wicked hands crucified and slain. God spared not His own Son but delivered Him up for us. There are coronets of tender mercy for us but there was no tenderness for Him. "Sinners in derision crowned Him" and His garland was a crown of thorns.

"Is there diadem as Monarch
That His brow adorns?
Yea, a crown in very surety,
But of thorns."

Calvary is more primal than creation. Christ is the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. The atoning sacrifice of Christ was foreordained by the Father, and in Isaiah the prediction is stated with such divine certainty that it is presented as completed action: "But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities." Long before the sorrows of Gethsemane and the grief of Golgotha, our God had willed to give His Son to suffer, bleed, and die as the Redeemer of rebel sinners like you and me.

Many centuries before Christ cried, "Tetelestai," the Lord of hosts had cried, "Awake, O sword, against my shepherd, and against the man that is my fellow . . . smite the shepherd . . ." (Zech. 13:7). When Christ became the Lamb of God, there rested on Him the eternal obligation to take away the sin of the world, and this was possible only by His being made sin for us. So He said to the Emmaus disciples:" Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into his glory?" He willingly entered into the divine plan of redemption, saying: "Lo, I come: in the volume of the book it is written of me, I delight to do thy will, O my God: yea, thy law is within my heart." He voluntarily laid down His life: "I lay it down of myself."

God was not a passive spectator of the act of redemption, but was actively in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself. The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all.

The work of atonement for sin was the bringing to pass of the eternal purpose and plan of God's everlasting love and infinite grace. Tetelestai—the goal is reached.

The words, "It is finished," also announced that the personal propitiation for sin was now accomplished. Death is not usually thought of as an accomplishment; it is rather the ending of accomplishment—the cessation of effort rather than its successful completion. But at the transfiguration of Christ, Moses and Elijah spoke of His decease which He should accomplish at Jerusalem. (Luke 9:31). His death was not one of defeat, but of almighty achievement.

"It is finished" is not a forlorn, dying gasp, but the triumphant shout of One who has accomplished the master strategy of heaven. He has made peace by the blood of His cross—peace on earth among men of good will and peace in heaven, for God is well pleased for His righteousness' sake. Christ by His death has made it possible for mercy and truth to meet together, and righteousness and peace to kiss each other. He has put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself, and has borne our sin in His own body on the tree. His is now the victor's shout of the Lord strong and mighty, the Lord mighty in battle, who has met and vanquished Satan in his hour and the power of darkness. Now our Almighty Lord, our Conqueror and our King, has annulled the prerogative of the devil that had the power of death. Who is the King of glory? He is the King of glory.

" 'Lifted up' was He to die,
'It is finished!', was His cry;
Now in heaven exalted high."

"It is finished" was the Saviour's proclamation of a powerful dynamic. Christ was crucified for us; and we

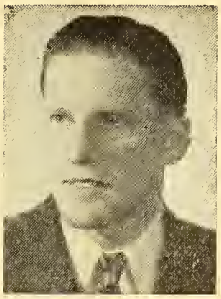
"I Am the Resurrection and the Life"

by Irvin E. Richert

THIS is Easter! Of all the days in the Christian calendar, this day is the most joyous one of them all, for on this one day hinges the hope of all Christendom! Every year during the season of Lent we always wait with growing anticipation for the coming of this day—Easter Sunday, on which we celebrate the resurrection of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ! All the bitterness of defeat which may have been felt in the death of Christ on the cross seems to vanish just like mist vanishes in the face of the early morning sun! For Jesus Christ was victorious over sin and death!



Irvin E. Richert
Pastor, Salem Church
Dalton, Ohio

Man has ever stood at the threshold of death and has cried out, "Is there any life after death?" Man wants to live and not die. Man desires the spring of youth and dreads the approaching winter of old age. Do we as Christians share this feeling of dread? We have hope that is greater than anything the world can offer us; a hope given to us by Jesus; a hope of eternal life with God. For Jesus said: "I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." (John 11:25)

In thinking of life after death, we often run into many different conceptions of what that means. Since this is a matter of faith and interpretation, my aim is to tell you my faith in these three Christian affirmations: Immortality, Heaven, and Judgment.

First of all, I believe in Immortality! Science tells us that matter is never destroyed; that it either changes its form or changes into energy. Energy in turn, changes into matter. They say that the secret of this lies in the construction and the working of the atom. Thus even though we say that our bodies die and pass away, the atoms which make up our bodies have merely been liberated into other forms of matter or energy. Thus we see something here which appears to be an example of immortality. But do we put our hope of eternal life in the seemingly endless existence of the atoms? This offers scant comfort to man on his death bed! No, we shall have to look elsewhere.

Does immortality lie in the realm of history? Some people think that it does. They will say that if a man lives a good, noble, outstanding life, he will live forever in the minds of succeeding generations. However true this may be, this answer is still as inadequate as the answer which science can give us. According to this, man still does not have a conscious existence after death. His atoms may live on and even his name may live on, but for him personally, death is still a blackout of conscious existence. Paul describes this condition accurately when he says: "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." (I Cor. 15:19).

Immortality does not lie either in the realm of the physical or in the realm of the historical, but in the realm of the spiritual. We believe that life eternal springs from God and therefore must be God-like. We know that "God is a spirit; and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." (John 4:42) Our blessed hope is a spiritual one.

My second affirmation is: I believe in Heaven. To me heaven is a place where God's children are together with him. No spatial terms can locate this place, nor does man know very much about it. The only thing we can go by at all is that which is recorded in the Bible. In one place Jesus describes it as as a place where there are many mansions. There has been some reference to golden streets and one can imagine that the Psalmist was perhaps vaguely but hopefully thinking about some heavenly realm when he sang about green pastures and still waters. We all have our own vague hopes about heaven but perhaps the only thing we can really deduct from the Bible is that it must be a glorious existence with God!

People often wonder what we shall be like when we come into the presence of the living God. Here again we know very little. We will be there as living spirits and the New Testament even promises that we shall have new imperishable bodies. No more is told us except that these bodies will not be mortal

When death seems a blackout of conscious existence, God in Christ commends to us the hope of eternal life—not that we should run away from this life on earth, but that we be spurred on in a richer life here.

From the Home Mission Front

The Mayfair Mission of Saskatoon

by J. J. Thiessen

Introductory Note: What a joy to see Mission workers help and develop another Mission. This article brings such a blessed story. J. J. Thiessen, has for years served First Mennonite Church, Saskatoon as pastor in addition to many other duties. The congregation carried on Sunday school work in this field for several years. Then Henry W. Friesen, Rosthern, known as a mission worker over Canada helped with the Young Peoples Organization of Saskatchewan. In the presentation of the church building, a fine mission spirit is manifested. In the volunteer labor from the community, the city and others we see more of the mission spirit in action. The Board of Home Missions had only a small part to do with this noble movement, but we praise the Lord for such a cooperative spirit.—A. J. Neuenschwander, Secretary, Wadsworth, Ohio.

IN the course of the last few years more and more Mennonite families are moving into the city. About 40 families from the districts of Warmen, Osler, Hague, and Aberdeen, have settled in the Mayfair district of Saskatoon. Some of these families have joined the First Church of Saskatoon. Others rarely attended church services but visited meetings that were being arranged in private homes in their district. In 1948 the Mennonite Youth Organization of Saskatchewan in cooperation with the local church engaged the services of Miss Erna Dyck, Waldheim, for the specific purpose of working among the children and winning them for Sunday school.

Langham Church Gives Structure

In 1949 the need for a church in the Mayfair district became apparent. At a mission conference in the Rosthern Bible School this need was made a special object of prayer. Later on when H. W. Friesen contacted the Bethesda congregation of Langham, Sask., with a view of purchasing their church building, which they no longer needed, this congregation was willing to donate the church to the Conference of Mennonites in Canada for use in the Mayfair district of Saskatoon.

Home Mission Board Purchases Lots

Lots were purchased in the city and paid for by the Home Mission Board of the General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America. During the summer the necessary preparatory work was done and the church building moved from Langham to Saskatoon. The dedication of the new Mayfair Mennonite Mission Church took place on December 11, 1949, with G. G. Epp, chairman of the Home Mission Committee, officiating. J. J. Thiessen, president of the Canadian Conference was in charge of the program. The attendance at the dedication services was very good inspite of the cold weather and a spirit of gladness and thanksgiving prevailed. The Rosthern Bible School was represented by two teachers who brought messages and a group of students who served with vocal numbers. On the same evening the Bible School rendered a mission program.

Four Groups Cooperate in Sponsorship

Considerable work and expense was connected with the work of moving and rebuilding the church. A special building committee consisting of three members from the First Church, Saskatoon, and three from the Mayfair group was in charge. Most of the labor was done by volunteers not only from the Mayfair district, but also from congregations outside the city. During the winter months some improvements have been made on the church building, but more will have to be done in spring and summer. The above mentioned committee in charge of rebuilding continues to function, and is assisting the minister in the administration. There is a small debt on the church now and the intended improvements will cause more expenditures. Contributions for this mission project would certainly be appreciated and should be sent to G. G. Epp, Rosthern, Sask., who is in charge of home mission work in Canada. It must be mentioned that the Home Mission Board of the General Conference, the Canadian Home Mission Committee, the Mennonite Youth Society of Saskatchewan and the local church of Saskatoon are cooperating in this mission work. May the Lord give His blessing to our joint efforts in winning many precious souls for Him.

Mayfair Mennonite Mission, Saskatoon 9003

The Weekly Program

Church services are being held regularly in the Mayfair Mission Church on Sundays at 11 A.M. and in the evening there is either a service or a Christian Endeavour program. The attendance in the morning averages 90, in the evening 50 and at C. E. programs it has reached 106. Sunday school is being conducted at 10 A.M. There are four children's classes, attended by 45 children, and an adult class of about 20.

Young people's meetings and singing practices take place on Wednesday night. On January 12, a women's missionary society was also organized with a membership of 15. They gather in the homes during winter, but intend to hold their meetings in church later on.

The preaching is being done by Frank Ens and other local ministers, with the assistance of a few students. Visiting ministers from outside are always welcome. May the Lord continue to bless this work.

The Greatest Christian Opportunity on Our Planet

by E. Stanley Jones

(The following is an article found in the Gospel Herald, official organ of the Old Mennonites, which they in turn reprinted from a periodical printed in India. As the editor of that publication explained to his readers, printing such an article of highly inspirational and informational value does not necessarily endorse every aspect of Jones' theological position.—Ed.)

WHEN I went to Japan for a month of evangelistic meetings, I went with inner hesitation. Mr. Kagawa had written to me that he had thousands sign decision cards in his meetings since the war—that Japan was ripe for Christianity. But he was Japanese and I was an American and we had fought a bitter war—could I do anything under the circumstances? I was more than skeptical.

It is true that the newspapers had carried the news item, given out before my arrival, that I had been a go-between at Washington before the war, trying to find a basis of peace, and that I had something to do with sending the cable from the President to the Emperor of Japan, and that I had advocated New Guinea for Japan's surplus population. Incidentally, it was news to most Japanese and to many Americans that the initiative for sending the cable had come from the Japanese and not from me. The Japanese requested me at Washington to ask the President to send it. This publicity made for a favorable reception. But it could not account for the response. There was something deeper.

Two Alternatives Left—Christianity and Communism

Japan for the first time in a long history had now met with a disastrous defeat which left her in ruins—politically, economically, spiritually. And especially spiritually, for the whole basis of her spiritual life had crashed—the belief in the near divinity of the emperor and of the Japanese people themselves as descended from the Sun Goddess, and of their superiority and destiny to rule. This has crashed and has left them inwardly confused and empty. Buddhism and Shintoism are too feeble to take over and reshape the ruins. There are only two possible centers around which their future may organize itself—Christianity or Communism. I do not like to put them in bald opposition this way, for Christianity is not anti-Communist as such—it is anti-evil whether that evil is in Capitalism or in Communism. Unfortunately Communism is filled with basic evils around some goods. One or the other will decide the destiny of Japan. General MacArthur told me that there was no more chance of Japan going Communist than of his jumping over the moon. It was the only statement I questioned in a long and deeply cherished interview with a very great man.

The Focal Point of a Decision

When I stepped off the plane at Tokyo about the first one who spoke to me was a news reporter who rushed up and said, "Sir all Japan is talking about Christianity, what have you to say about it?" This of course, was an exaggeration, but it was very revealing. I found that many of the pastors had not really awakened to the fact that Christianity, from being a sect on the margin of Japan's life, had moved to the center as the focal point of a decision, perhaps a national decision. They were too stunned and depleted by the awful events of the war to grasp the changed situation. When I asked a pastor of the first city we visited, Nagoya, 90 per cent of which had been destroyed, whether he wanted me to ask for decisions, his reply was, "No, the people will not sign anything in public." He changed his mind, prepared the cards and out of an audience of four hundred and fifty, one hundred and twenty non-Christians signed the cards saying they wanted to be Christians—one out of four. Incidentally this church was a prefabricated church sent out by Church World Service. In another place the head of a college thought the students would not respond and yet 250 signed cards. In still another place the school pastor thought they had reaped all they could reach so further efforts would be unnecessary, perhaps useless. But 355 made decisions. The pastors for the most part, with very notable exceptions, were only half awake to what had happened. You cannot blame them, for they had gone through a terrific ordeal.

A Prayer-Meeting Where the Bomb Fell

It is impossible to give a detailed account of the sixteen cities we visited in all three islands. But take Hiroshima where the first atomic bomb fell. I wondered what could be done there—a ruins. But from half to sixty per cent of the devastation had been restored by the amazing industry of the Japanese people. We were taken straight to the place where the bomb fell and held a prayer meeting which the newspaper photographers snapped, and which was printed under the caption: "I feel like falling on my knees," a remark I made which expressed my inward mood. And yet within that city the buildings were packed with spiritually hungry people and two hundred and fifty made decisions to follow Christ. And this is Hiroshima! A pastor walked over to me in the pulpit and before the audience said, after I had spoken on using calamity and sorrow, "Sir, the fire of the Holy Spirit is burning in the hearts of the people. It is our new beginning." The fire of an atom had left this city a cinder, but the fire of the Holy Spirit burning in the hearts of the people would rebuild that city and the country on better foundations, for it was the fire of a creative love. I bet my life on the fire in the hearts of the people against the fire released from an atom—it will outlast the other and recreate the world.

The Hallelujah Chorus from a Basement!

Take Matusyama, one of the places where the pastors were alive. The Governor's car was put at our disposal for the day. They charged admission of ten yen to get into our evangelistic services and decision cards were given to each one as he came in. The largest building of the city was packed with 1,500, and this is a city where only five buildings were left standing after the bombing. In two meetings, nine hundred and three made decisions. The Chamber of Commerce had a meeting with all the officials from the Governor down and the business men for me to give them my message. I listened with awe and inner tears to high school girls sing beautifully the "Halleluiah Chorus" in the concrete basement of their burned-out frame school, all that was left. The Halleluiah Chorus from a basement! That is the spirit of this people. Their singing is good but always appropriate. In Osaka in a crowd of 2,500 in an army theater where 520 made decisions, the chorus sang a Latin anthem, praying for Holy Mary to come and bless us—this in an evangelistic meeting!

In the frozen island of Hokkaido in the city of Sapporo, they charged admission of ten yen for the evangelistic meeting and packed it with two thousand people, mostly non-Christians. In the two days there, nine hundred and forty made decisions. Just what was involved in those decisions? We begged them not to sign the cards because others were doing so, not through politeness but only if they meant to follow Christ, be instructed and come into the Christian church as open baptized members. We put the brakes on, nevertheless they signed.

In Tokyo—1,800 Decisions

But Tokyo was the last place and the climax. In the Hibiya Hall with three thousand in attendance, there were seven hundred and fifteen decisions. Admiral Nomura, former Ambassador at Washington, was on the platform and I paid a tribute to his peace efforts and the crowd applauded. In the three days at Tokyo there were one thousand eight hundred and twenty who signed cards in the halls, churches, universities and schools. In all the tour a total of approximately 8,000 non-Christians signed cards. Cut it in half and say that only half of them meant it, though for the life of me, I could not see why they were not all meaning it to the degree they understood it, for they were desperately serious. They wanted something. They simply hung on your words for hours, scarcely moving.

Follow-Up—Weakest Spot

The weakest spot is the follow-up period. The churches are simply not prepared for this heavy responsibility which has suddenly been placed upon them. In our meeting for Christians we tried to get the pastors to train their laymen in visitation evangelism, for the pastors and the missionaries simply can't do it. The whole church must be mobilized. And help from Christians everywhere must be brought to Japan.

When I asked General MacArthur what message I could take from him to the American churches he said, "Tell them that the Christian Church has never met such an opportunity in five hundred years as it is now meeting in Japan. Where they have sent one missionary, now let them send a hundred. And let them lay plans big enough for this task. Japan cannot have a democracy without Christianity. The door will be open for another ten years." He spoke with the fire of a prophet.—Reprinted from the National Christian Council Review of India.

It Is Being Done

A SUCCESSFUL SUNDAY SCHOOL OUTPOST

IN Winnipeg students of our Bible College are doing commendable service in Sunday School Extension Work. On the outskirts of the city they found a situation where children were without Sunday school instruction. For two years they gathered children in homes of sympathetic parents and instructed them. This had to be done in small basements or rooms and was not satisfactory. They then got in touch with one of the trustees of a school class near this location and asked for permission to use the school for the purpose of giving Sunday school instruction to the children. The school board gave permission to use the school house with the understanding that any children who might wish to attend should be welcome, and that a charge of $3.00 per night be charged for the use of the building.

The Ladies Aid of the church paid this for some time. At present the work is so much appreciated by the parents that each family that sends children pays 50c per night to take care of the expenses. Classes meet on Friday nights. The work is growing. At Christmas, 18 children attended this Sunday school which is being held on Friday nights. This work may well be the beginning of a new congregation on the outskirts of Winnipeg.—The Evangelism Committee

FREEMAN TEACHER-TRAINING DEPARTMENT

STUDENTS enrolled in the teachers training department are now doing their practice teaching. This period started March 15 and will continue for a period of four and a half weeks. Six rural schools are being used for the first year students while the second year students receive their practice in the local public school. John Ewert, head of teachers training department, has charge of this work.

Irvin Kaufman, a local physician is teaching a course in hygiene during the spring quarter.

The agriculture classes took part in the Hoard's Dairyman cow-judging contest. The judges' placings will not be known until May 10.

The Academy debators will go to Orange City, Iowa this week to participate in the annual Inter-State Academy Debate Tournament held on the campus of Northwestern Junior College. On Tuesday they debated before the student body in a practice debate.

Our guest chapel speaker this week was John Schrag of Marion, South Dakota.

ROSA PAGE WELCH TO SING AT BLUFFTON

THE Booster Committee is planning to sponsor a concert Tuesday evening, April 11. It has secured the services of Rosa Page Welch, Negro soloist of Chicago, who will give a sacred concert in the First Mennonite Church. This will be the third appearance of Mrs. Welch in Bluffton. On former occasions she sang to large and appreciative audiences. Admission to the concert will be free. An offering will be taken to pay the expenses of the concert and to finance a special project.

College men had "open house" in their dormitories Saturday evening, March 18. Guests visited the rooms, after which a program was presented in the dining hall. Refreshments were served.

Sunday evening, March 19, College Church presented the film, "Barrabas The Robber."

Gerald Stucky, missionary to Colombia on furlough, spoke in the regular chapel service Wednesday morning, March 15.

BETHEL BIBLE WEEK CONVENES SIGNIFICANT PANEL

MUCH can be done about preventing mental illness and safeguarding mental health, experts explained in a panel discussion during one of the annual Bible Week sessions of Bethel College. The panel included T. L. Foster, head of psychiatric clinic of the nationally known Halstead clinic; Lee Fent, practicing physician of Newton; J. H. Langenwalter, retired pastor of the Lorraine Avenue Church of Wichita; Alfred Schroeder, Probate Judge of Harvey County; and, R. C. Kauffman and M. S. Harder, both from Bethel College.

The main events of the Bible Week program were two series of lectures given by Melvin C. Cammack, president of the National College for Christian Workers of Kansas City, Mo.

An institute to study the now famous Quaker Proposals regarding U. S. and Russian relationships was held at Memorial Hall Tuesday, March 21, with Richard Wood, editor of the Quaker publication The Friend, the main speaker for the evening.

Varden Loganbill, Joe Duerksen, and Harold Neufeld, pre-medical students of Bethel College, have been accepted as students at the medical school of Kansas University. It is expected that Howard Hershberger will also be accepted. This is a better record of placing students in medical schools than that prevailing throughout the country.

SEMINARY FELLOWSHIP ELECTS KREIDER

ROBERT KREIDER, Goshen, Indiana, has been elected president of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary Fellowship for the year 1950-51. A veteran of M.C.C. relief work in Europe, Robert Kreider is now in the history department of the University of Chicago. Vice-president is Paul Boschman, Petaigen, Saskatchewan; secretary, Stella Schrag, Freeman, South Dakota; treasurer, Sophie Brown. Committee chairmen are as follows; social committee, Frances Funk; welfare committee, Mrs. Frank King. Melvin Funk was elected as a member of the religious life committee and Helmuth Dyck as student book-club director.

R. C. Kaufman, professor of psychology at Bethel College, spoke on a recent Sunday night at the annual Bethel College alumni reunion of Chicago.

Last Tuesday our seniors finished the comprehensive examination which is required of every graduate of this school. These examinations cover the entire course of instruction and provide a vigorous review of the academic work of this school. The seniors, however, are not required to take examinations in their third quarter course of the graduating year.

BIBLE WEEK AT CANADIAN BIBLE COLLEGE

AN annual March event at the Canadian Mennonite Bible College is Bible Week held this year during the week of March 13 to 17.

The three men serving on this program of morning, afternoon, and evening sessions were: A. E. Kreider, Goshen, Indiana; Missionary John Thiessen from India, and J. J. Nickel from Langham, Sask. Kreider gave a number of lectures on the work of the "Pastoral Ministry" during the mornings, and in the evenings he based his messages on the Epistle to the Philippians. Missionary Thiessen spoke on the subject of missions, emphasizing the General Conference field in India. He showed slides to illustrate the work being done in the various fields. He also conducted a study of the Book of Hebrews. Nickel gave expository messages on the First Epistle of Peter. Special musical numbers were rendered by the students.

Besides the whle student body and faculty, local ministers and friends attend and enjoyed the series.

MENNONITE MEN FOR CHRIST

THE twelfth annual seal appeal of the American Bible Society is now under way. Sheets, containing one hundred bright red and blue seals have gone to several hundred thousand people. The letter accompanying the Seals again this year bears the signature of John R. Mott, one of the vice presidents of the Bible Society.

"The world's cry for Bibles must be answered now!" said Dr. Mott in part. "If we are to build a world of peace, the Lord must build, or we labor in vain. Failure to answer may in effect amount to giving active assistance to those atheistic beliefs which enslave men."

This year's seals are arranged in an interesting design, with the four center seals depicting the major phases of the Society's work—translation, publication, distribution, and encouragement of use of the Bible.

Each year friends of the Bible Society welcome the opportunity given them of spreading a knowledge of the Society's work, by the use of the Bible Seals on their letters or by giving a sheet to a friend who, in this way, may be interested in the promotion of the Society's great program of Scripture work.

THE FINISHED WORK OF CHRIST. . . from page 204

were crucified with Christ, yet we live, for Christ liveth in us. Ours is now the blessed opportunity to live in the victory of Golgotha. By His death, we crucify the flesh with its affections and lusts. Our sins are nailed to His cross; and by faith we accept the place of death for them and say, "Let them remain in the place of execution where Christ has placed them." That is the only safe place for sins to be left. Christ bore our sins, not that we might live in our old sins, but that we through His cross, might be dead to sins and live unto righteousness.

By His cross, He finishes His work in us as well as for us. Paul was stating this great fact when he said: "But God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world."

"For me, Lord Jesus, Thou hast died,
And I have died in Thee."

"I AM THE RESURRECTION" . . . from page 205

bodies. Once Jesus was told a story about a woman who had had seven husbands in her lifetime and the question was asked, "In the resurrection whose wife shall she be of the seven?" (Matt. 22:28). Jesus answered that in heaven there will be no marriage relationship but that we will be like the angels. This all points to existence on a spiritual plane.

Will we do anything in heaven? To some heaven is a place of peace and security; a rest for their weary souls. To others it is a place where we will find greater avenues of self-giving service for our Lord and King. This world is but the training ground for the greater work of heaven.

My third affirmation is: I believe in the Final Judgment. God is a God of justice and judgment as well as a God of love. If we believe at all that righteousness will eventually triumph over wrong, a divine judgment seems inevitable. Jesus himself described the day of judgment in the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew. On that day, he said, he would separate the sheep from the goats; the righteous going into eternal life and the unrighteous into eternal punishment. People often shrink from this grim picture, but it is unavoidable.

A non-Christian was once asked if he believed in hell. He replied: "I certainly do! Because I am living in it right now!" I believe he was right, because what is hell but separation from the living God? He was living a life separated from God and was in a state of hell. A Christian right beside him might be living in a state of radiant joy by having a close fellowship with his Lord! If this separation causes this much pain and anguish here on earth, would such a separation cause less agony in eternity?

However, we as Christians do not look upon immortality with dread—dread of the great judgment. Ours is a hope of joy and expectation! We are going to spend eternity with our Master in a glorious, heavenly existence! Christian, do you believe that? Can you keep from believing it?

This hope of eternal life is commended to us. When we are discouraged, fearful, or perplexed, let us pause for a moment and get a new perspective—a perspective with real depth. Measure our situation with the yardstick of eternity and see what a joy we will have; what inner peace will be ours, in the knowledge that God through Christ has saved us for eternity and for a purpose. He does not want us to run away from this life on earth, but he has given us this hope to spur us on in a richer life here. All our problems and difficulties will seem small and insignificant in the light of God's great promise!

"I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live."

Jottings

—Fairfield Church, Fairfield, Pennsylvania: All communications should now be addressed to Howard Y. Musselman, Orrtanna, Pennsylvania, instead of George Stoneback.

—Emmanuel Church, Moundridge, Kansas: D. J. Unruh, pastor of the First Church, Newton, Kansas, was the speaker for the evangelistic services held in the Emmanuel Church, near Moundridge, beginning Sunday, March 19 through Friday, March 24. His topics were: "Revival or Ruin," "Hindrances in Christian Work," "Work, Watch, Pray," "Walking in the Fear of the Lord," "Service, Willingly Offered," and "Separation and Sanctification." Special music was furnished each evening.—Mrs. G. H. Wedel, Corr.

—First Church, Nappanee, Indiana: The Gerald Stucky family was our guest Sunday, March 12. He presented the morning message. During the evening service both Mr. and Mrs. Stucky spoke and showed pictures of the work they are doing in our mission station in Colombia, South America. The young people of our church have a special interest in this missionary effort as they helped furnish a piano for this station. After a brief social period held in the church basement, Pyarelal Joel Malagar, a native of India, attending Goshen College, gave a challenging message on the subject "India's Millions,—Whither?"—Helen Yoder, Corr.

—Johannestal Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: James Unruh from our church, who is one of the staff at the Nevada State Orphan Home, spoke to us on the Sunday of March 5. Among other thing he brought out the point what liquor can and does do; out of the 105 children in the orphan home there is one orphan. The other children all come from broken homes or parents who no longer want their children. He also brought out what a little attention and love toward such children can and does do. We had our annual mission sale with which we again had the results of the quarter fund of the youngsters. Those who had some products to sell sold it there too.—Corr.

—Zion Church, Donnellson, Iowa: Union services are being held in our church on Sunday evenings during the Lenten season, all four churches in town taking part. The ministerial association of Donnellson has engaged the services of J. E. Hartzler of the Hartford Seminary for March 26 to 30. He also spoke at the high school Tuesday morning, March 28.—A. D. Krebill, Corr.

—First Church, Wadsworth, Ohio: The Sunday evening evangelistic services as well as the Thursday evening Bible study have been well attended. Pastor Neuenschwander has a class of young people taking catechism during the Sunday school hour and an adult class meets with him before the Sunday evening services. Preparations are being made for special Holy Week and Easter services.—George McBride, Corr.

—Grace Church, Lansdale, Pennsylvania: The W. M. S. held their monthly meeting by presenting a play, "The Challenge of the Cross," directed by Martha Fretz. Miss Margaret Slotter, our missionary the Kentucky Mountains, is home caring for her mother who is seriously ill. The second Sunday of each month our Young People have charge of the Gospel Mission Sunday school at 2nd and York Street, Philadelphia. Nineteen Young People attended this service last Sunday. Lois Stubbs gave a flannelgraph story, Doris Hagar taught the Scripture verse, Raymond Detwiler led in choruses, and Nancy Seaholtz was in charge. There's a Price

SO often one gets the impression that to follow the Christ is an easy matter. That to be a Christian is not hard—just a matter of making a confession of one's sins, accepting Christ, and living happily ever after. Quite the opposite is true. To be a Christian calls for the paying of a price.

There are today Christians behind the iron curtain who are facing the test of their faith. They have no hymn books, no churches, no Sunday schools, no fellowship with one another—because they are behind iron bars. Elmer Homrighausen, of Princeton Seminary, who visited such Christians several years ago, testified that he is less fearful for Christianity behind the iron curtain than for our popular easy going American variety. He went further to say there is so much fluff here and it is so hard to get down to the real thing.

The real thing is portrayed on Calvary's hill. The Cross, which we have made such a lovely ornament, must be seen for what it really is. For the Cross is not a lovely table decoration, a beautiful piece of brass, or a lovely decoration on a church steeple or on costume jewelry. The Cross is man's rejection of God and His way. It is man saying he will follow his own path. It is man saying the undying love of God is not for him. It is the terrible price one paid who brought down to earth, a flesh and blood portrayal of the Father. It is God confronting men and men rejecting Him.

That rejection continues, for men continue to reject the way pointed out by the Man of Nazareth. If it is a disagreement within a family, the way of the Cross is too oft ignored to settle the disagreement. If it is forgiving a personal enemy or a national enemy, too oft the way of the Cross is ignored. If it is a clash between racial groups or a conflict over economics, the way of the Cross is forgotten. Rather than pay the price of the Cross, men prefer their own devious ways and the troubles that forever follow.

There's a price, the price of the Cross, and every disciple of the Christ must be a cross-bearer if he would enjoy Christ's salvation. In our day, when there is so much uncertainty and suspicion, so much hate and fear, we need heroes of the Christian faith who will behold Calvary's hill and take upon themselves the Cross of their Lord bearing it cheerfully in all walks of life. We need cross-bearers who will pay the price in our home communities, in our mission fields, in relief and voluntary service, in the life of our nation, its business, and its politics. Cross-bearers who, regardless of the cost, will keep their eye on the Cross of Calvary and say He died for me, He died that I might have life and might follow Him.—E.L.

Program Materials for Easter

EARLY in March, the Easter program materials issued by the Young People's Union were sent out to those on the address list. These materials consisting of three possible programs are a worship service consisting of Scripture readings which is called "This is the Messiah." This program has two readers, "the Prophet" who reads from Old Testament several readings pointing to the Messiah, and "the Disciple" who reads New Testament fulfillment. Interspersed with appropriate hymns from The Mennonite Hymnary, the program becomes significant and interesting.

The second program is an Easter pantomine called "And Peter Remembered." This pantomine takes about thirty minutes to perform. It requires a number of properties and thirteen or fourteen people to carry it out. It is very effective as a program with a good reader and sufficient practice in pantomiming.

The third program is called "The Seven Last Words" and has as its setting the scene on Calvary hill. The characters involved in the drama of that black Friday make up a frieze as they are gathered about the cross on which hangs the crown of thorns. Then the characters, a Pharisee, a woman, a thief, a shepherd, each speaks on his reactions to one of the seven last words.

This program series was worked out by Kenneth Bauman, president of the Young People's Union. It represents much creative and imaginative work. It should be an excellent contribution to the program literature for Easter.—E. L.

Part IV Missionary Travels and Researches [Continued]

(David Livingstone as a boy, grew up in humble cirstances. He began working in a cotton mill at the age of ten. He always studied while he worked. By the age of 27 he went to Africa as an ordained minister and a doctor of medicine. In his youth, he constantly studied nature, botany and biology. He learned astronomy. All this prepared him for his adventures in uncharted Africa. He has up to this point, sought a trade route to the Atlantic from deep in the heart of the continent. This failing, he now seeks a route to the East to the Indian Ocean. Ed.)

But his journeys were not done. He had not found a usable trade route to the Atlantic on the west, but he hoped the Zambezi might afford a route to the Indian Ocean on the east. So on November 3, 1855, he set out with about one hundred and ten natives for another long journey through unknown country and among hostile tribes. It took him—according to his diary—nearly six months to reach the coast.

Difficulties were many. At some places he had to persuade by patience and good will, which was his usual method; sometimes he had to give presents; and on at least one occasion he had to frighten the natives by firing over their heads. Most of the way Livingstone walked. On one of his trips some years before he had overheard some of the natives say, "He is not strong, he is quite slim, and only appears stout because he puts himself in those bags (trousers); he will soon knock up." Livingstone on that occasion set a pace which kept the party at top speed for days together, until the natives were ready to acknowledge him quite as good a walker as they.

Days and Days of Walking

But on his journey down the Zambezi he got more than enough of walking. "Pedestrianism," he writes, "may be all very well for those whose obesity requires such exercise; but for one who was becoming thin as a lath through the constant perspiration caused by marching day after day in the hot sun, the only good I saw in it was that it gave an honest sort of a man a vivid idea of the treadmill."

His first stop was at Tette, a Portuguese settlement about two hundred miles from the ocean. There he left his native carriers, promising to return after a visit to England and go with them back to their homes. On May 20, 1856, he reached Quillimane at one of the mouths of the Zambezi, and after a wait of six weeks embarked for England. His perils were not yet over; for near Tunis the steamer on which he was a passenger broke a shaft and there was danger that the ship would be wrecked. But the ship anchored safely in the harbour of the Bay of Tunis, and the passengers were taken to Marseilles and then across France by train. He reached "dear old England" on December 9, 1856, having been gone sixteen years.

Honored in England After Sixteen Years

Many honours awaited him. The Royal Geographical Society held a special meeting for him on December 15th and presented a medal. Prince Albert, husband of Queen Victoria, granted him an interview. The Chamber of Commerce in Manchester gave him a hearty welcome. In Glasgow he was honoured by the University, the Faculty of Physicians and Surgeons, the United Presbyterians, and the Associated co-operative Cotton Spinners. The sum of two thousand pounds was raised by public subscription as a testimonial to him. Edinburgh conferred on him the freedom of the city, and he was asked to speak at a public breakfast and at another large meeting. He was honoured by the University of Cambridge, and the University of Glasgow conferred on him the degree of LL.D., and Oxford, the degree of D.C.L.

These honours were well deserved. He had travelled eleven thousand miles through Africa, most of the distance through regions never before explored. He had been the first white man to look upon Victoria Falls of the Zambezi—twice as high as Niagara. He had made important contributions to a knowledge of the geography of Africa, its people, climate and products. But he never lost sight of his aim. In speaking to the Royal Geographical Society he said, "The enterprise will never be completed until the slave trade is abolished and the whole country opened up to commerce and Christianity."

He had first planned to return to Africa in a few months; but when the Portuguese promised to provide for the natives he had left at Tette (a promise which was not kept), he decided to stay longer and write a book about his explorations and discoveries. This took him the greater part of the year 1857.

The book is entitled Missionary Travels and Researches in South Africa. It was published in November, 1857, and had a large sale. Livingstone received enough money to have made him comfortable for life. But he never thought of settling down to a life of leisure. He was impatient to be back in Africa—to unravel the mystery of that great continent, to plant missions and training schools at strategic points, to open the country to trade, and to stop the slave trade.

Difficulties in Obtaining Support

Just before he left Africa, Livingstone had received a letter written by Dr. Arthur Tidman, Foreign Secretary of the London Missionary Society, which reviewed Livingstone's exploits, and then said: "The Directors (of the Missionary Society) while yielding to none in their appreciation of the objects upon which for some years past your energies have been concentrated, or in the admiration of the zeal, intrepidity, and success with which they have been carried out, are nevertheless restricted in their power of aiding plans connected only remotely with the spread of the gospel. Of the important bearing of your researches upon the interests, not only of science, but of general humanity, we have the most entire confidence, and we would also cherish the hopes and belief that they will ultimately tend to the diffusion of Christian truth among the populous, but yet uncivilized tribes inhabiting the districts to which you have attained access.

"But your reports made it sufficiently obvious that the nature of the country, the insalubrity of the climate . . . constitute a very serious array of obstacles to missionary effort, and even were there a reasonable prospect of these being surmounted—and we by no means assume they are insurmountable—yet in that event the financial circumstances of the Society are not such as to afford any ground of hope that it would be in a position, within any definite period, to enter upon untried, remote and difficult fields of labour.

"In view of these circumstances, we should . . . regard your visit to England as affording a most favourable opportunity for conferring with you fully on your future plans."

As one reads even these extracts—the whole letter runs to six foolscap, hand-written pages — one wishes that Dr. Tidman could have dictated to a stenographer. If he could have looked over the letter critically, he would probably have phrased it more happily. But we can hardly blame him for not rewriting six pages, and letting it go forward to Dr. Livingstone.

This letter reached Livingstone when he arrived at Quillimane in May, 1856, although it had been written the preceding August. Livingstone was exhausted from his journey and desperately ill. He did not know that the London Missionary Society had faced a deficit of twelve thousand pounds, and for that reason was not in a position to undertake new fields of labour. He was hurt by the words, "Connected only remotely with the spread of the gospel." On his way home he wrote to a friend, "I suppose that it is intended to send me to some of the tried, neat and easy fields where I can wax fat. . . . The proposition to leave the untried, remote and difficult fields of labour as they have been ever since our Saviour died for man involves my certain separation from the London Missionary Society."

Central and Middle District

Our Plans for a Camp

by William H. Stauffer

The Central and Middle District Conferences have been working together for several years in a search for a Camp site so that they might have their own camp. Last summer, for the first time, a site near Niles, Michigan was seriously considered. Also, last summer a drive for funds was started resulting in the raising of a sum large enough to make early beginnings. Last fall, another site about 25 miles north of Goshen, Indiana was found and seriously considered. In January, an option was taken on 40 acres of land lying along Shavehead Lake and proceedings are underway to purchase this site. The following article by Wiliam Stauffer, pastor of First Church, Sugarcreek, Ohio, gives emphasis to the values of a camp and the possibilities a camp would have for the nurture and spiritual growth of our youth and our adults as well. Ed.

SOME of the richest memories of my life go back to camping experiences in the mountains of central Pennsylvania. It was my very good fortune to have an excellent Sunday school teacher who not only urged me to attend summer camp, but also offered to share in the cost. Somewhat indifferently I accepted her plea and money and spent two weeks at Camp Kanesatake in June of 1926.

That was really the beginning of my growing Christian experience. A good Christian home and a fine Sunday school and church with all of its activities had laid some very important foundations. But it was several years later at this Camp which I attended year after year for the next 12 years, where I made my personal commitment to my Lord which led me into the Christian ministry.

Sunset on an Indiana Lake 8995

This is far from being a singular or strange experience. Our country is filled with hallowed places marking the location of a summer camp where literally thousands have found their way into the Christian life. I think one dare go so far as to say that very likely summer camps have been as big a single factor in leading souls to Christ as we have. Any of us who have had experience with young people in such camps know the marvelous lift that comes from having a group of people unitedly seeking a common goal.

It is with this background that I come with much enthusiasm at the thought of at last being able to say that we have practically within our hands the beginnings of a camp of our own. We are in the process of taking a step that we might well have taken years ago, but somehow the time didn't seem quite ripe. Now it is. And we are ready and eager to go.

We believe that we have the united support of many boys and girls and men and women throughout our two district conferences. We are anticipating the development of a spot that will become sacred to the lives of countless numbers both young and old. Time will record such a place as the spot where many of our young people will have found Christ; and where many who are older will have returned and renewed and refreshed and enriched their earlier commitments to their Lord.

We are anticipating camping programs not only for juniors and seniors. We are planning for periods of spiritual enrichment on the part of young married couples for week-end retreats. We are looking forward to some type of family camping. This can be a place for Sunday school and church officers' and teachers' retreats. Ministers will find this an ideal spot for Christian fellowship. Actually, there is no limit to the possibilities in the moving forward in the Lord's great work with such facilities of our own.

The plans call for the possibility of many of our families building small summer cottages on a beautiful lake in a genuinely Christian atmosphere. Here we hope to create a place for Mennonites to have Christian fellowship together while enjoying their vacations. Along with resting their physical bodies from the streneous cares of occupation and profession there will be excellent opportunity to nurture their spiritual selves.

Here is an opportunity to have a small "colony of heaven" here earth.

Blessed is the man who is too busy to worry in the daytime and too tired to lie awake at night.

Beyond Our Own

A committee against liquor advertising, with headquarters at Pittsburgh is conducting a campaign against the liquor advertising in Life, Time, and Fortune, all under the editorship of Henry R. Luce. Luce is the son of a Presbyterian missionary to China and frequently speaks in Protestant church gatherings. Often he expresses himself in sound religious pronouncements, but his admission of liquor advertising to his magazines makes him one of the chief propagandists for liquor in the United States. It is estimated that his magazines carry liquor advertising into 15 to 18 million American homes. This advertising in 1948 brought him a revenue of approximately $12,712,000.00.—Gospel Herald

NEW YORK—Three million women and girls are preparing now for the third annual National YWCA Week, which will be held from Sunday, April 23, through Saturday, April 29. Theme of the Week is "A Better World Begins With You—Join the YWCA."

At present the Young Women's Christian Association of the United States of America comprises 1048 community and student Associations and YWCA work in 1550 rural and other areas.

NEW YORK—Paul Blanshard, author of American Freedom and Catholic Power will leave for Rome on Feb. 23 to "cover the Holy Year" for The Nation, weekly review published here.

An official of the magazine said Blanshard had been assigned to write a series of articles on the Vatican. General theme of the series will be The Vatican in World Political Activities.—Covenant Weekly

HESSTON, KANSAS.—The students and faculty of Hesston college will leave the campus on a three-day work campaign March 23, 24, and 25 to help raise funds for the completion of the new science hall now under construction. There will be approximately three hundred working in at least 18 different communities.—Mennonite Weekly Review

GENEVA—"The Hitler in our human breasts, whose desire is always to use his neighbor for his own purposes, must die," declared Kirchenpraesident Martin Niemoeller in the course of an evangelistic campaign which took him through Wurttemberg. Dr. Niemoeller condemned the attempt of humanity today to degrade man into "material." Christ had, he said, seen in his fellow-man only the image of God, and for that reason he had been able to forgive even great sinners.

During this campaign, Dr. Niemoeller stated his views with regard to the reproaches recently levelled against him. He had, he said, no sort of hostility to Catholicism or to his Catholic brethren: he simply thought it his duty to draw the attention of the world to the fact that 47% of all Evangelical Germans and only 10% of all Catholic Germans were living behind the Iron Curtain.—Covenant Weekly

GREECE—Celebrations commemorating the 1900th anniversary of the coming of St. Paul to Greece have been deferred from 1950 until June, 1951, and are now scheduled to coincide with the meeting of the World Council's Central Committee to be held in Athens in 1951.—The Ecumenical Courier

Book Notes . . . . . .

EASTER AND POST-EASTER READING

AT THIS highly important season of the church year it is well to spend time in reading books that will nurture our souls. For the thoughtful reader we would suggest five titles for consideration:

Beets, Henry, The Man of Sorrows. Eerdmans, $1.00. "A series of Lenten sermons including seven sermons on the 'Seven Words from the Cross.'"

Clark, Thomas Curtis, 1000 Quotable Poems. Willett, $2.50. Poets have been called "torchbearers of faith." Why not read poetry at this Easter Season? This book contains much religious poetry; e.g. "Gethsemane," "Crucifixion," "Calvary and Easter," "If Easter Be Not True," "My Risen Lord," "What does Easter mean to You?" and many others.

Heaps, Isabel Warrington, Five Marys. Abingdon-Cokesbury, $1.50.

"Mary, the mother of Jesus," "Mary, the Wife of Cleophas," "Mary of Bethany," 'Mary of Magdala," and "Mary of Jerusalem" are portrayed here . . . "The aim of the stories in this book is to deal reverently with the lives of Jesus and his friends, with care to picture no character as doing anything which is contrary to the written records, but with full play of the imagination in making such additions to the stories as will throw new light on the greatest character in all world history."

Weatherhead, Leslie D., Jesus and Ourselves. Abingdon-Cokesbury, $2.00. "Jesus is the only One in all history of whom any man or woman may say, 'He will understand me perfectly and tell me what to do.' The author of this book hopes that 'ere the readers put it down some may find themselves bowing in the presence of Him who is the Key to all our problems . . ."

Steere, Douglas V., On Beginning from Within. Harper, $1.50. This book is "concerned with the intensification of the life of God in the individual hearts of men." After pointing out the world's great need of "saints" and what a saint really is like, the author discusses the nurture of the inner life through devotional exercises and closes the book with a consideration of the "prospect of death as a power for awakening man to his dependence upon God."

Looking Toward Freeman

Conference is a time of opportunity for cultivating Christian friendships, becoming better acquainted with the work of the church, receiving spiritual inspiration, and being challenged to greater service for the cause of Christ.

I am looking forward to rich spiritual blessings at our next General Conference in Freeman, South Dakota, this summer. These are momentous times. On the one hand, there is hanging over the world the gloom of doom and destruction. But on the other hand, there are bright rays of hope as one sees the Spirit of God moving in convicting and transforming power in various places over the world. We have a responsibility to this age as the prophets of old to point out the danger of sin, call men to repentance and to turn to Christ.

The Program Committee is planning a fine program in which more attention will be given to the spiritual phase. It is hoped that some real heart-searching decisions will be made. The Evangelism Committee has suggested that the morning devotions stress evangelism. We as churches and individuals should be much in prayer for this conference for in proportion as we pray for the Spirit of God to move, only in such a measure will the conference prove a blessing.—Olin Krehbiel, Vice-president of General Conference.

In reading your editorial in the February 28 issue of THE MENNONITE concerning "Revivals are making headlines and the radio waves," I notice you in a rather wholesale manner condemn landlords. Perhaps if we gave serious thought to some of these things we might arrive at a somewhat different conclusion. I have never heard of any landlord

THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST is engaged in extremely dangerous business today. At a time when security is measured by the height of barriers and the amount of armaments, the band of true disciples is quietly yet persistently in the business of disarmament. The disarmament program is truly realistic. The first object is to disarm the human spirit—the very root of the world's disease. This is accomplished through prayer and persuasion whereby man is confronted with the only prescription that will cause him to pull down his fist lifted in defiance against Heaven and destroy his sword lifted in hatred and selfishness against his brother. The plan of redemption that called for the shed blood of Christ and that resulted in the Empty Tomb is intended to enable man to accept with all his redeemed heart the greatest commandment as the rule for his life—perfect love to God and man. When a man is born again he receives a new nature; he participates in the nature of God and in the Body of Christ called the Church. In that new nature he will face life as Jesus Christ faced life. (It is rank unbelief to profess to believe in the Deity of Christ and then refuse to obey Him in all things.) Participating in that new nature the true disciples develop an extreme sensitivity to sin wherever it is found whether in Russia or America, whether under capitalism, socialism, or communism, whether in the ranks of management or labor, whether in the Mennonite denomination or any other. On the other hand, they have likewise developed a blindness to color of skin, denominational barriers, political boundries, economic levels, and occupational status—those terrifying weapons of the armed human spirit which attempt to keep people estranged and "in their place." The Church of Jesus Christ is in the business of reaching over these chasms as the cross of Christ reaches over the chasm that separated man from God. At the cross the love of God reaches out to every human being alive today, beckoning each to return to God. Therefore when we raise a barrier of hate and selfishness we break down the bridge of the love of God—the Cross. There is nothing that a man can do, believe, or say that bars him from our love, prayer, and concern. We may have an intense hatred for the sin he commits or the godless philosophy he holds or even propagates. Yet because he is a soul of infinite worth in the sight of God, we can only love him and pray and work for his conversion. Mennonites for example, who have suffered so much at the hands of the Russians can be a real witness to this way by earnestly accepting the explicit command of Christ to love our enemies and pray for them. Of course, this is dangerous business in a world where political loyalty is measured by the degree of hatred for our enemies. We may expect Calvaries. Yet the "ministry of reconciliation" is positively the only constructive approach to the soul-destroying disease of estrangement and aggressive hatred which is plaguing the world and causing men to turn to Satan saying "thy Kingdom come."

THERE IS AN AREA OF ESTRANGEMENT developing in our own Mennonite Circles for which we ourselves need the ministry of reconciliation. There will be needed something more in the way of action than merely observing "Reconciliation Sunday." We hear of young people in some of our thickly settled Mennonite communities wanting to start farming on their own. When they look around for a farm that they might purchase they find the prices at a level that only the heavily landed and prosperous older farmer can pay. Prosperous individuals, in many cases, are acquiring more and more land. Some, we are told, are even moving the dwelling places off such land. Perhaps accurately and perhaps also in self defense they criticize the young people saying that they would have more money if they would not spend so much on tobacco and amusement. Granted that this may be true in some cases, does this automatically disqualify them from opportunity. We need to remember that even while we were sinners, Christ died for us. There is a place for the doctrine of the grace of God in economics as well as theology. Is it possible that there is going on in our very midst the type of thing that Jesus so severely condemned in the parable of the rich fool? Jesus never condemns the kind of frugality that shares the savings with the needy. He says "Thou Fool" to those who build bigger barns to increase beyond all reason their own basis of future security while fellow human beings in their very midst are denied any sense of security. While we are talking about reconciling the larger areas of enemity and estrangement in the world let us be prayerfully seeking the remedy for the estrangements in our very midst.—J.J.E.

THE CHRISTIAN WAY

This is a strange thing,
This is a paradox—
That going a little farther rests the soul.
That walking the second mile refreshes life!
It is stinginess of spirit that wears us out;
The anxiety lest we do more than we should, destroys us.
They are blessed and healthy and happy
Who are free to go beyond what is required of them.
That surplus,
That overflowing of the glass,
That doing of the undemanded,
That good measure, shaken together and running over,
Is what puts freshness and joy into existence:
It makes living like springtime,
And rippling waters,
And the songs of birds;
It is the truly Christian way of life.

"The Ministry of Reconciliation"

by Olin A. Krehbiel

WE are all familiar with the story of how Adam and Eve sinned by eating of the forbidden tree and then hid themselves from the presence of God, also how Cain killed his brother Abel and thus enmity and estrangement entered the world. Today we still picture mankind as being at enmity toward God and estranged from their fellowmen. However, in the Bible, God has also unfolded His plan for reconciliation. The apostle Paul tells us in II Corinthians 5:18-19, "And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation; to wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation."

What Is Meant by Reconciliation?

It means to bring two persons back into a friendly and harmonious relationship with each other. Some years ago a husband and wife did not get along very well and after a quarrel they separated and did not live together. But one day they were both called to the bed side of their son who was at the point of death and he was instrumental in bringing them back together again. They made up their differences, forgave one another for the harsh things which had been said and were united in a close bond of affection and fellowship once more.

There are two kinds of reconciliation mentioned in the Bible. In II Corinthians 5:20 we have the one type where Paul writes, "we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God." He is here talking about bringing man into a right relationship with the Almighty. The other type of reconciliation Jesus refers to in the sermon on the mount where he says in Matthew 5: 23-24, "Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee; Leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." This has to do with getting man into right relationship with his fellowman. Again and again in the scriptures we have these two things stressed, in fact we might say that the whole burden of the word of God is to reconcile men to the Lord and to others.

Why Is There Need for Reconciliation?

Ordinarily man is not a friend of God. We have all turned to our own ways. We are sinners. Take enlightened America and consider a single city like New York with its millions of people. How many would you say are friends of the Lord? The majority don't even think of the Creator on a Sunday let alone during the week. Many persons know about God and believe He exists and yet are not on friendly terms with Him. The demons knew Christ but were still his enemies. The very fact that men do not get along very well with one another shows that they are not right with God for in I John 4:20 it tells us, "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" One has but to look at the headlines of a newspaper with its murders, crimes, strife, cold and hot wars, etc., to see that man is estranged from the Lord and needs reconciliation.

Who Accomplishes the Reconciliation?

There are several ways in which reconciliations are made. One way is for a mediator or third person to bring the parties together. Another way is for one of the parties to make the first move toward restoring fellowship. In the case of God and man, it was man who committed the wrong and God who did the reconciling, as it says, "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself." Adam after his sin, ran away and hid from God. The Lord had no ill will against Adam but sought him for he loves men. However a holy God could not overlook evil and be just, so He paid the penalty and thus extended mercy. We might compare the problem which God faced to that of a parent whose child does wrong and who desires to forgive but must also be just and not condone sin. God taking on the form of man suffered punishment in our place that we might be brought into harmonious fellowship with the Father. The Lord is also the one who reconciles, the author of peace among human beings. In Ephesians 2:16 we read, "And that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby . . ." Here Paul is talking about both Jews and Gentiles being put on good terms with God and with one another by the saving work of Christ on the cross.

How Does This Reconciliation Affect Man?

He can either accept or reject the gospel of salvation, new life, and peace through Christ Jesus. After the last world war there were Japanese soldiers hiding out in remote island caves who did not know that the war was over. The Americans secured other Japanese to broadcast over public address systems announcing the news of peace. Some believed it but others did not and went on fighting. There are people doing the same with the good news of reconciliation which God has given to men to proclaim. Peace is both a privilege and a charge to men. After we are reconciled to God, He commits unto us the ministry of giving out the word

Mennonites Contribute Two Million Plus For "the Healing of the Nations"

AKRON PENNSYLVANIA.—Revealing the total scope of the M.C.C. program, reports on last year's work were given in the Annual Meeting of March 17 and 18. Direct contributions from the churches in the total amount of $2,286,384.48 (including material gifts) made possible the world-wide work of relief, aid to Mennonite refugees, peace witness at home and abroad, voluntary service, mental-health service, and various other related activities.

RELIEF: Rehabilitation Emphasis Emerges

With 156 workers in 17 foreign countries, continuing needs were served "In the Name of Christ." A considerable portion of the relief effort was centered in Europe, although substantial amounts of materials and funds were directed to alleviate needs in the Far East, Middle East, Latin America, and South America. During the year the rehabilitation emphasis emerged even more than in previous years, being manifested particularly in projects of community centers, children's homes, children's colonies, services to students, medical services, etc. Material-aid gifts, though on basis of individual case-need rather than mass distribution, have been substantial, amounting during the year to a value of $1,308,470.27. The spiritual witness has been emphasized not only in the general spirit and motivation of the work, but additionally in specific contacts, meetings, and relationships.

MENNONITE AID: Include Non-Mennonite D.P.'s

Mennonite refugee migration from Europe during the year may be summarized as follows: To Canada, 1,511; to the United States, 113. The emphasis in South America has been assistance in settlement, providing immediate maintenance and equipment needs, and longer term assistance in economic, educational, and religious concerns. No additional refugees have been brought from Europe to South America during the year. In Uruguay continued effort was made to consummate the land purchase to enable the people to settle more permanently. In Europe the staff has been busy interviewing and processing those eligible for migration to Canada and the United States. At various times during the past year the problem of eligibility of Mennonite D.P.'s for I.R.O. assistance created difficulty and delay in the program until cleared with officials. Since the number of Mennonite D.P.'s able to come to the United States was low, provision was made for the sponsorship by individuals in the U.S., of non-Mennonite D.P.'s.

PEACE SECTION: A Central Undergirding Value

Though lesser in proportion of total expenditure, the Peace Section endeavored to promote, both at home and abroad, one of the central spiritual values which has undergirded the Mennonite service expression of the basic nonresistant life. Peace teams at home and in Europe were directed to stimulate study and concern in this doctrine. Literature publication and distribution supplied resource for this study. Through contact with legislative developments and regulations, assistance could be given concerning the draft, etc.

VOLUNTARY SERVICE: Service Opportunities for 432

This program provided opportunity for 331 summer workers, 101 one-year workers, and others for various shorter periods, in over 20 different units at home and abroad. Projects included work in Bible school teaching, mental-hospital attendant service, construction and repair, personnel interviewing, children's home and children's camp work, medical service, community welfare, recreation, relief warehouse work, etc.

MENTAL HEALTH: Second Hospital Being Built

Brook Lane Farm, the first M.C.C. hospital, has been in operation during the year with average patient enrollment of 10, and average stay at the hospital of 35 days. A family atmosphere among its eleven staff members and the patient guests, is maintained and encouraged. Kings View Homes, the second mental hospital, to be at Reedley, California, is in process of building and will serve an enrollment of 32 patients when the first unit is completed. Concurrent with the development of hospital facilities is an increasing program of mental-health education and personnel training.

Menno Travel Service for 371

Menno Travel Service reports that a total of 371 individuals were served in 1949. Included were M.C.C. and mission workers, foreign students, American students traveling to Europe, and people traveling privately. Arrangements were also made for a number of persons who went to Paraguay and other South American countries. Through representatives in Amsterdam, Holland; London, England; and Basel, Switzerland, complete travel and tour arrangements can be made for persons going to Europe. This service is organized largely separate from the M.C.C., and is self supporting financially.

M.C.C. Work for the Coming Year. —to be continued Personnel Need

From time to time workers of various skills are needed in the M.C.C. work. At present there is need for a maintenance worker at the Akron headquarters. Anyone feeling a call to this service should write to the Personnel Office, M.C.C., Akron, Pennsylvania.

who refused to rent his house and also made it utterly impossible for a person who really wanted to have to build one. Yet this is the situation in labor circles today. Organized labor at any whim refuses to work and also refuses to let anyone else work. The actual result, in the present coal strike, with which you are familiar is that hospitals, churches, homes and schools are finding it difficult to continue. My understanding is that fourteen dollars per day is the base in coal mining and they want that increased.

In Matt. 23:23, 24 we learn that Jesus said to the scribes and Pharisees "ye blind guides which strain at a gnat and swallow a camel" as I understand your editorial the serious crisis of the day is overlooked in this matter of conversion —the new birth.

Landlords represent a group who in the main are our stable population. They are the ones who instead of spending their money for drink, or intemperate living in various manners, save their money and buy property. In so doing they are condemned. Wages have gone up tremendously why should not rents—

The Ministry of Reconciliation Through Relief and Peace

The Cross Crisis

by Vernon Neufeld

THE Lenten season is again drawing to a close when we have again been reminded of the suffering of our Lord and of his incomparable sacrifice. As we have read the story of the final week, undoubtedly many emotions have come upon us; certain events and episodes have impressed us forcefully. Our reading and meditating experiences are numerous and varied. An interesting yet sobering observation we might make regarding the Passion is the effect of the Cross Crisis on various people and groups of people in the story—how individuals stand or fall when a forceful event such as the crucifixion comes into their lives. For instance, of what significance was the Crisis to the crowd, to Judas, to Peter, to Jesus Christ?

Mennonite Life
VERNON NEUFELD
A Farmer
Shafter, Calif.

"Hosanna! Blessed is he who comes in the name of the Lord!" (John 12:13, R.S.V.).
—"Away with him, away with him, crucify him!" (John 19:15, R.S.V.).

These are the words that were spoken by the crowd at the time of the triumphal entry and the trial of Jesus. Whether or not the same people were present at both occasions, we do not know; but the contrast does reveal a lack of stability and consistency. The crowd was exuberant with the coming of the King who to them was their liberator, the Son of David; the crowd completely reversed its feeling within a very short period of time when the self-inflated bubble of hope burst with Jesus' arrest and with the agitation of the Jewish leaders. No deep-rooted, well-grounded faith is here demonstrated. The Crisis meant little to the people; then as now the crowd shouted for that which happened to be the popular.

"What will you give me if I deliver him to you?"
(Mt. 26:15 R.S.V.).
—"I have sinned in betraying innocent blood."
(Mt. 27:5 R.S.V.).

Perhaps Judas is the most tragic character in the Passion story. He was one who had potential enough to be included in the Twelve, one who had capabilities and talents which the Master felt to be of value for his work, but also one who misunderstood Jesus and His mission. The tragedy lies not so much in the betrayal, but in the fact that the disciple did not utilize his ability to conquer his great error. To Judas, the Crisis meant bitter remorse, defeat, suicide.

"Even if I must die with you, I will not deny you."
(Mt. 26:35, R.S.V.)
—"I do not know him." (Lk. 22:57, R.S.V.).

There are the unforgetable words of Peter—Peter, the Rock, the leader, the spokesman, the one who first seemed to understand the true mission of Jesus; yet Peter, the one who denied his Lord during the trial. The disciple had grown in his spiritual life; he had received a keen spiritual insight. The iron of his faith needed only the right temper to make it strong and unbending; the Cross and the days that followed provided this annealing experience. He faltered momentarily, but the Crisis made a man of Peter.

"For this purpose have I come to this hour."
(Jn. 12:27, R.S.V.).
—"Not what I will, but what thou wilt." Mk. 14:36, R.S.V.).

Jesus had known for some time what his mission in the world was, and He steadfastly set forth to fulfill it. Though difficulties and crises came into his life, He did not swerve from the road that He felt must be followed. Even during the Final Week Jesus was completely dedicated to the will of the Father. To Jesus, the Crisis was the fulfillment of a life's mission, the completion of God's plan for mankind.

Meditating on the influence of the Cross Crisis makes us wonder about our own spiritual lives. How are we prepared to meet trials and in what manner will they effect us? Is our faith built securely, or is it drifting with the tides of convention and popularity, is it self-centered, is it incomplete? When a Cross Crisis confronts and tests us, how will we fare?

May God help us that we stand firm on Christ the Foundation and that the fiery trials of life may serve to strengthen our faith.

MISSION BRIEF
SENDING A GIFT TO INDIA?

We are making efforts to return to the Mission Field in India this coming September or October. New immigration rulings of the Indian Government make it absolutely necessary to have an import license for everything that we take along with us. The application for this import license will have to be made soon. Therefore, if any one here in America wishes to have us take something along for one or the other of the missionaries of the General Conference Mennonite Mission in India, then kindly send such things to us not later than the first week in June. We must have everything in hand very soon so that we can place an application with the Indian Government for the import license. It takes a long time for these permits to be cleared so kindly do not send anything which can not be stored indefinitely. Before sending anything, please write us for instructions.

Our address through the first week in June will be: 4614 Woodlawn Ave., Chicago 15, Ill.

Your co-workers in India,

When a Missionary Had to Say "No"

by Arthur Keiser

THE spots on the face of our caller this morning and the stumps where there had once been hands revealed that he was a leper and had come from the leper colony, Agua de Dios. The advancement of the disease and the poorness of his dress indicated the desperateness of his journey to us, for he had probably "crawled through the fence" in leaving the leper colony illegally and spent precious money for what was to him a costly trip.

He was a likeable young fellow who features registered the mixed strains of Indian and Spanish blood so very common here in Colombia. His cheap clothing included a shawl thrown over his shoulders in a fashion very typical of the campesinos or country folk. His face was lined with sadness, but in his eyes there was an element of pleading and hope as he spoke. He told the following story:

"I sent a letter asking if you would receive my children in your school, but later decided to come in person. I have four children and the government is compelling them to leave the colony."

The Poor in a Pitiful Situation

This new ruling involves over one thousand children. Before, there had been hardly any restrictions against healthy people living in the colony. The result has been that there are more healthy people than sick living there. This is a good measure, but from the reports we have received no provision is being made by the government for those who have no place to go. Therefore, those who are poor and who do not have friends outside of the colony are left in a pitiful situation.

"I am very poor and have no place to send my children. The colony is the only home my wife and I have known. They must leave in two weeks. Will you receive the oldest boy and girl, eight and six, here at your school?"

I explained to him that we could not receive more than the forty children we have at present. He pleaded, but all I could say was no. Finally in desperation, unable to believe what he heard, he pleaded in a voice so low and filled with emotion that I had to ask him to repeat it:

"Won't you just take my girl?"

I had to say no. As this last thread of hope for the welfare of his children gave way he could bear his grief no longer so he broke down and cried. The only hope I could give him was that you folks are planning to send money to increase the school for one hundred students and that possibly then we could receive some of his children.

Would They Even Have a Stable?

I feel I understand better now the message that the great artist, Merson, caught in his painting, "The Arrival At Bethlehem." Mary is kneeling in the street exhausted from the day's journey as Joseph pleads with the innkeeper for a room for the night. Would these four children even have a stable to sleep in, a month from now or would they be roaming the streets?

The plea of this leper is a very familiar one, for just last week a mother had made the same trip under as trying circumstances clinging to the hope that we might be able to help her in her dire need. Almost daily we receive letters or people call personally begging us to receive their children here at the school. It is true that some are opportunists, but many are needy and sincere as our visitor this morning.

The need of these children goes beyond that of a home, food and education. Their greatest need is that of Christ. Many children never learn of His fulness, richness, glory and love, because they are led blindly into false doctrines. They never know Him as their personal Savior from sin, which is so rampant about us. To us this is the greatest need of all in the lives of the children that come to the school. We seek to point them to Christ who can meet this need.

In meeting the need of a few of the needy children in Colombia we can hope to have them in turn meet one of the greatest needs of the church here—that of dedicated, consecrated, and trained leadership.

Dear Reader: As you read this touching account of the father pleading in behalf of his two children, will you not make this a matter of prayer and give to the cause of missions so that we may be able to take care of more worthy children? They will not only be taught the three "R's" but will also be taught of a Saviour's love and eventually will give themselves to Christ. Only as YOU give will this be possible.

Howard G. Nyce, Exec. Sec'y.

LOS ANGELES SAYS IT CAN'T AFFORD LIQUOR: Councilman Kenneth Hahn has offered a resolution in the Los Angeles City Council saying that "WHEREAS in 1945 there were 72,465 drunk arrests, in 1946 there were 92,108; in 1947, there were 98,149; and in 1948 there were 101,930 and in 1949, drunk arrests equalled the population of Pasadena or Glendale," and "WHEREAS it has been estimated that 55% of the expense of the police department is caused directly or indirectly by the drink problem," something must be done about it. He says Los Angeles has spent $30 million in the past four years on the alcohol problem, and evidently he does not think the liquor revenue is worth that price.

A Plea From Arizona

by Anna Baerg

WE are again without a place for Sunday school on the Mesa. Last Sunday I took my car and went up there to get the children for the Sunday school. I had 14 in my car. They said they enjoyed it very much and asked me to come back in the evening to get them for evening service. I could not refuse them. I had only 9 children in the evening. They told me that one of the girls had been whipped at noon because she had gone with me in the morning. So you see it is sometimes not easy for them to come to the church services, let alone for them to become Christians. Heathendom still has a strong hold here.

There seem to be more heathen dances in Oraibi than there have been for a while. They come from as far as Winslow and Fort Defiance to attend them. One wonders how they can believe in such things, but to them their worship is very real. It seems to be demon worship.

We as missionaries have been praying and working for some time to get a mission school started. The Hopis are very anxious to see one started. Even some of the heathen say they will send their children if we should have one. Won't you pray that the finances may come in so that the Mission Board can see its way clear to start one?

For some time the burden has been on my heart for a house of worship on the Mesa. I feel sure that there are people in our Conference who know how to pray. If you are of those, won't you pray that the Lord will make the chiefs up there willing to give us a new grant of land, so that a new church may be built up there? Then too, won't you pray about the mission school I have mentioned? May I ask you to pray for one other thing, which seems to me most important of all, Won't you pray that the Lord will send a deep conviction of sin into these people's hearts and cause them to come for mercy and for our Saviour the Lord Jesus Christ?

or message of reconciliation. We are to be peacemakers and promoters of goodwill through the Lord Jesus Christ. This is the responsibility of the church or in other words the body of Christians. How well are we meeting this challenge of the ministry of reconciliation? It seems to me that this matter should be of particular concern to Mennonites who are the historic champions of peace and on this Conference Sunday we ought to think through, all of the aspects of the ministry of reconciliation. It is a tragedy when one person stresses only reconciliation of man to God and neglects the man to man relationships while another makes peace among men his chief concern but has little interest in getting men right with God. Our church should be leading out and showing the way to other groups in this whole area of reconciliation. Let us pray that we as members of conference churches will see a vision of the need and get under the burden of this great ministry of reconciliation.

Ministry to 500,000 Africans

(The essence of a report of the C.I.M. given at the Seminary by C. E. Rediger, executive secretary.)

THE Conge Inland Mission is a cooperative Mennonite undertaking in the very heart of Africa along the larger tributary of the Congo River. The work was begun in 1912 and is now carried on from four major mission stations. The physical plant in the Congo is valued at over $100,000 with an annual field budget alone of $21,321. At the present time, the Mission is seeking $35,000 for a much needed expansion of which $22,000 is already collected. The mission owns twelve missionary homes, three hospitals, three school buildings, eighteen smaller school units, one guest house, and one printing press. Three mission stations have electric lights. There are two brick kilms, and many other evidences of real equipment. In 1912 when the mission started, there was no evangelical Christian voice in that part of africa. The Congo Inland Mission introduced education into this area and today has an average attendance of 11,551 pupils. It has 329 rural schools and 467 native teachers. Frank Laubach, the famous missionary of literacy, toured the Belgium Congo in 1948 to step up the campaign to make it possible for people to read both Scripture and other literature.

An interesting development educationally took place in 1949 when the Belgian parliament voted to subsidize Protestant as well as Catholic schools. For many years these subsidies had been limited only to Roman Catholic people. In the territory served by C.I.M. there are 500,000 natives.

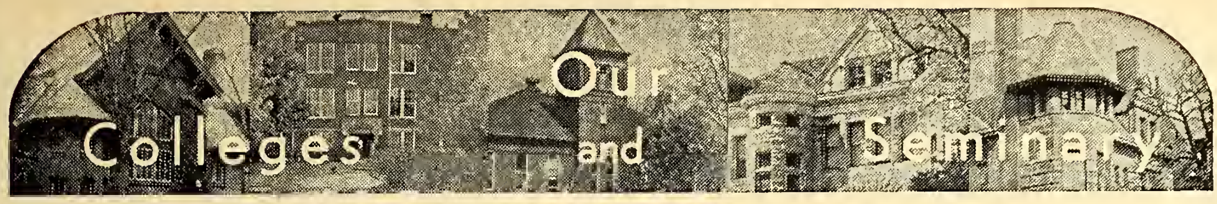
Medical Aid to 17,000 in 1948

As for medical work, in 1948, there were 17,091 people treated of whom 1,517 were hospital cases. In that one year 528 babies were born alive in mission hospital, and 329 of these were born at the Charlesville station. In connection with the medical work, devotional services are held every day at the hospital, and a very important Christian witness takes place at that level.

Describing the spiritual dimensions of the Congo Inland Mission, they now have, after forty years work, 12,000 church members. The mission has sent out over a period of years 38 missionaries. Christian preaching is going on at 300 different points in their particular territory. There are several hundred native evangelists.

The Challenge of Industrialization

Several of the very challenging developments within the territory of the Congo Inland Mission are: A large palm nut plantation has been started by Lever Brothers, a well known soap company here and in Britain; a large diamond mine has been started. This has brought an influx of people into the territory and the migration of folks from the rural to more industrial situations. The newly proposed expansion in part is to take care of the opportunity suggested by this development. May the Lord continue to bless this fine example of cooperative Mennonite missionary work carried on in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ.



Our Colleges and Seminary

BLUFFTON HEARS OF JAPANESE UNIVERSITY

MAURICE Troyer gave a Vesper address Sunday afternoon, March 26. Troyer was sent to Japan last summer to interview Japanese and American leaders there concerning the establishment of the Christian University of Japan. After his return he was appointed a vice president of this University, which is to open in April 1952. He is at present engaged in selecting a staff for the new school and in helping to promote a campaign to raise $10,000,000 in America for this project. The Japanese portion of the cost has already been over-subscribed. Troyer is an alumnus of Bluffton College and a former faculty member. He has been on the staff of Syracuse University, to which he is still giving half of his time.

Students have selected Lois Rich, Washington, Illinois as May Queen for the ceremony to be held in connection with commencement activities. Dorothy Hurley, Danvers, Illinois, was selected as Maid of Honor. Fred Liechty, Berne, Indiana was chosen to have a part in the ceremony as the outstanding senior man.

BETHEL HOST TO FOREIGN STUDENTS

THE foreign students from Mennonite and affiliated colleges met in a conference at Bethel Friday, March 31, through Sunday, April 2. Discussions of American social and educational institutions, an excursion to Tabor College, social meetings, visits to the Kauffman museum, and attendance at the performance of the oratorio "The Seven Last Words" on Sunday by the Bethel College A Cappella Choir, were the major items on the program for the three day meet. A conference of the presidents of the Mennonite colleges will take place during the same time.

Oil paintings and products of various crafts by Miss Lena Waltner, art instructor of Bethel College, make up the art exhibit placed in the show window of the Mennonite Conference Headquarters in Newton for several weeks.

Miss Waltner has done noteworthy work in painting. The pictures exhibited are well composed and express mood. They show originality as well as good technique. The landscape "Autumn" is painted after a sketch made of a view near McPherson, Kans. The still life showing sunflowers on a table is alive with vivid color.

An example of Miss Waltner's work in crafts is the effective color stenciling and silk screening on ladies' skirts. Glazed and hand-thrown pottery is part of the display.

SEMINARY STUDENTS ACTIVE IN EVANGELISM

STUDENTS here are assisting the Mennonite Bible Mission in making a house-to-house visitation in that community prior to the special pre-Easter meetings to be conducted by Don. E. Smucker.

A deputation of our students has started a series of five pre-Easter services at the Calvary Methodist Church of Chicago.

We were glad to have the Curriculum Committee of the Board of Education in session on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday of this week.

Sixty people attended the second annual Bethel College Alumni meeting in Chicago with Minna Regier as chairman of the meeting and Dean R. C. Kauffman as the main speaker. Faire Stucky, formerly of Hutchinson, Kansas, and now a physical therapist for Wesley Memorial Hospital of Chicago, was elected chairman for the meeting next year.

C. E. Rediger gave a thrilling picture of the Congo Inland Mission during the regular Vesper Service last Sunday.

FREEMAN HAS HELPFUL BIBLE WEEK

THE Bible-week messages presented by Jesse Ziegler, professor of psychology and Christian Education at Bethany and Mennonite Biblical Seminaries in Chicago, were an inspiration for practical Christian living. With the sensitive touch of a physican, Ziegler seems to find the "sore-spots" of contemporary spiritual life. Pointing out these tender areas, he proceeds in a kindly and understanding manner to point out the direction toward healing, and the Source of help.

J. D. Unruh is to leave for Nebraska and Kansas this week-end. His trip is in connection with M.C.C. work. Sunday he is to speak at the Henderson church for the morning and evening services. From there he goes to Newton and Hillsboro, Kansas.

"Icebound," a Pulitzer prize play by Owen Davis has been selected as the all college play. It will be presented the last week in April.

Mrs. Edmund Miller left for Chicago for a meeting of the General Conference Curriculum.

Last week the College Mixed Octet went to Mountain Lake, Minnesota where they presented a program to the students of the Mountain Lake High School.

The Ministry of Reconciliation Through Education and Publication

Jottings

—Menno Church, Lind, Washington: A weekly radio program bringing morning meditation began Sunday, February 26, at 7:30 a. m. over station KSEM at Moses Lake, Washington. Musical talent in the church is being used besides a message from Willard Wiebe, our pastor. Pre-Easter meetings are planned for the week April 2 to April 7, with Erland Waltner of Bethel College, North Newton, as speaker. The Ladies Mission Society shipped 130 pounds of clothing and 140 pounds of lard for relief on March 2. The film, "Power of God," sponsored by the young people was shown March 19.—Mrs. C. C. Claassen, Corr.

—Mennonite Zion Church, Arena, North Dakota: During these winter months our church services were not very regular. Some services were held at the Wm. Deckert home. Our Christian Endeavor programs will again resume, starting the first Sunday evening in April. Due to bad weather and blocked roads, these programs have not been held. Supported by the congregation, a D. P. family, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Hebert and Marie, have arrived in our community from Germany. This family has had and has seen many hardships and are glad to be here. The Mission Society has received a letter in reply to the box that was sent to the Elmer Dick family in Africa. They wrote that many souls have been won for the Lord but many are still in darkness and sin. Marie Regier, a missionary from China, was here on March 28.—Mrs. Bernard Deckert, Corr.

—First Church, Nappanee, Indiana: "Out of the Night," a sound and color picture of Chicago's Skid Row was shown here on February 26. This powerful film depicts the work of the Pacific Garden Mission in presenting the answer to this great problem in our nearby metropolis. George Straub, a representative of the Mission, showed the pictures and spoke of the work being carried on there. An offering for the Mission was received. The program was sponsored by the Loyal Bereans.

—Swiss Church, Alsen, North Dakota: Marie J. Regier was with us on March 30. The four Mennonite churches of this area are planning a youth conference for June 18 to 20. On March 12 a number of families of our congregation who had not been able to attend church services since January 1 due to the storms and road conditions, were back to worship.—Mrs. Dan Regier, Corr.

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: Miss Elizabeth Withrich and Robert Sprunger were united in marriage at the parsonage by our minister on March 12. A class in catechetical instruction for young adults has been in progress at the parsonage during the Sunday school hour and will be culminated Easter Sunday morning when our church body unites in Communion. Letters received here from Stan and Iona Hofstetter, a young couple from our church working on the relief field under M.C.C. tell of the great need of social and spiritual rehabilitation. They are now at Vienna, Austria, establishing an M.C.C. community center after having developed a similar project at Kaiserslautern, Germany. They are scheduled to return to this country in midsummer.—Ivan Badertscher, Corr.

—Garden Township Church, Hesston, Kansas: The S.O.S. Team from the "Back to the Bible" broadcast was in our church from March 8 to 19 inclusive. It was a time of joy for the Christians, and those who had not accepted the blessed Lord as their Saviour heard the truth preached in all its fulness. Many decisions were made for the Lord, for which we praise Him. The Look Out Committee has organized two groups which are doing visitation work. Sunday mornings during the Sunday school hour, our pastor, Victor Graber, has a catechism class. Mr. and Mrs. Menno Sperling and Art Jantz were added to our church by the right hand of fellowship.—Mrs. Ferd Neufeld, Corr.

—Buhler Church, Buhler, Kansas: On March 2, the Men's Fellowship had their first-meeting with eighty-four men present. Bennie Bargen of North Newton was the main speaker. Our pastor, Henry Fransen, with a carload of young men from this community went to the voluntary service unit at Gulfport, Mississippi, for two weeks work. In his absence C. H. Voth brought the morning message on Sunday, March 5, and Zimmerman of Hutchinson on Sunday, March 12.—Mrs. P. J. Neufeld, Corr.

—Meadow Church, Colby, Kansas: The Art Nickels and Jimmy, child evangelism missionaries to the British Isles, spoke in our church on the evening of March 1. They are formerly of Salem, Oregon. Sunday morning, March 5, a quartet from the Meade Bible Academy of Meade, Kansas, gave us a very good and inspiring program. Allan Wiebe brought a message on the "Spirit-Filled Life." The Girls' Ensemble of Berean Academy were with us recently also a quartet from the Oklahoma Bible Academy on March 31.—Mrs. W. H. Regier, Corr.

—First Church, Upland, California: Paul Roth of Canby, Oregon, is holding a series of meetings at our church. Among subjects used were: "Our Christian Calling," "What Makes a Christian," " What is Faith," and "Surrender the Secret of Victory." In the past month our congregation has donated food and clothing to the Estonian families. Also, comforters and blankets were donated by the Missionary Society.—Mrs. Fred Yoder, Corr.

—Faith Church, Greensburg, Kansas: A ground-breaking service was held March 5 on our new church site about four and one-half miles southwest of Greensburg. The men are busy working on the church basement.—Corr.

—Inman Church, Inman, Kansas: J. W. Bergen, Goltry, Oklahoma, served as guest speaker during our pre-Easter services, March 26 through April 2. Ed Wiebe presented the work of the "Go Ye" mission, Chauteau, Oklahoma, on March 15. Several members joined in fellowship with the Bethel Church to hear Viola Wenger on Tuesday, March 21. The Ladies' Missionary Society presented programs at the Bethel Church and the Home for the Aged in Inman during February.—Mrs. John Klassen, Corr.

—First Church, Hillsboro, Kansas: The N. E. Abrahams are our new sponsors of the Intermediate C. E. On March 5 Mrs. A. F. Tieszen from Newton told us of her experiences as interpreter for our government during the war. The Ladies Aid had Miss Alice Richert, who spent two years in Europe for the M.C.C., tell us of her work in hospital and orphanages. A group of women helped Grandma Anna (Penner) Bartel celebrate her 86th birthday. Several women of our church attended the all day Vacation Bible School Clinic in North Newton sponsored by the Kansas Council of Churches. On March 19 the Senior C. E. had the A Cappella Choir from Bethel College give a sacred concert in the high school auditorium.—Mrs. Wm. Bartel, Corr.

—FOR SALE: A thriving hatchery business in a Mennonite community. Over 100,000 egg capacity. For information, write J. W. Fretz, Board of Mutual Aid, North Newton, Kansas.

—Eden Church, Inola, Oklahoma: Sunday, March 19, the Good News Quartet of G.B.I. brought a very interesting program. Just the night before they sang for Walter Hannan who is a Youth for Christ speaker. Sunday, March 12, the quartet from O.B.A. was to bring a program but due to icy roads they turned over on their way to church. Mrs. Sol. Mouttet was in the car and was hurt, but is recovering.—J. Froese.

To Clarify . . .

SOME SAY: Why are the preschool teachers' manuals still not ready?

The answer: This portion of the course has not been completed due to the illness of the writer. It seemed ethical and best to the publishers that the writer who envisioned and began the course of three years for the preschool ages, should be the one to complete this portion of the series.

SOME SAY: Is it possible to use the three preschool pupils' materials and teaching pictures without the teachers' manuals?

The Answer: A brief guide has been prepared to aid the teachers in the use of these three preschool pupils' books and teaching pictures. These courses have been used successfully since they were released for sale.

SOME SAY: What mission work of our own denomination is included in this Bible study series?

The answer: There is a unit on China mission work in Grade III; a unit of mission work in India in Grade IV; on mission work in Africa in Grade V; on the work in Colombia, South America, in Grade VI; and a unit on work with the American Indian in Grade VIII. Grade VII has a unit on "Followers of Jesus in Church History and in the Mennonite Church."

SOME SAY: Since this series includes denominational mission materials, can it be used for community inter-denominational schools?

The answer: Yes, The mission-inserts in the pupils' books are so placed in the center of the workbooks that they can be lifted out by unfastening the staples and thus freeing the books of any denominational emphasis. The mission portions in the teachers' manual cannot be removed but can simply be left untaught.

"A United Mennonite Youth in Christ"

An editorial

CONFERENCE Sunday will have as its theme this year, "The Ministry of Reconciliation." (April 23). The term reconciliation has two meanings. One meaning is in regard to man's relation with God, the other has to do with man's relation with man. The term "reconciliation" is one used by Paul and is not to be found in the Gospels. Paul saw Christ's work as a work of reconciling men to God. But, even further, "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself." This would mean that God was actively seeking to break the divine enmity which separated men from God.

Also, and in direct connection, there is the labor of reconciling men to one another. This is a never-ending task. It is one that must go on among the most well-meaning persons who permit barriers to grow between themselves and others for some reason. Even the saints of the church, the pillars, are at times in need of such a labor of reconciliation.

Some would say that by being reconciled to God we would automatically take care of our reconciliation with men. One would hope desparately that this were true. However, all too often, the ones who are most deeply convinced that they are reconciled with God are ones who permit enmity in one form or another to exist between them and their fellow-men. They stand judged before the words of John who said, "If you hate your brother whom you can see, how can you love God whom you cannot see?" So, in reality to be reconciled to God and to one's fellow men is simply the two sides of the same coin.

The Y. P. U., a Task of Uniting

Such reconciliation suggests a united spirit. It calls for a united action. The motto of the Young People's Union has that as its central thought, "A United Mennonite Youth in Christ." The efforts of the Y.P.U. are in the direction of uniting youth in a work for Christ. For instance, there were sent out this year 10,000 copies of a Prayer Calendar. The purpose of the Prayer Calendar is to unite youth in their prayers for a common cause. The program of Voluntary Service has been of great interest to the Y.P.U. because in it there is the possibility of uniting in service. The labor of missions have received both interest and support, especially Colombia, South America, for it unites us in serving. This year program materials have been issued so that local societies may work with materials and ideas which will strengthen and unite local groups.

This coming summer, a Young People's Workshop will be held from August 18-23 just before General Conference. There the local problems will be discussed and leaders will have the opportunity to share their experiences and problems. At General Conference, the Y.P.U. is to hold its assembly when the decision to act for the future will be made.

Needed, a World-wide Ministry of Reconciliation

Of even greater importance in a day of strife is the need for a world-wide ministry of reconciliation. All those forces which work in the direction of achieving such reconciliation need our support and interest. This includes the labor of government, the reconciling influences in business and economics, and the work of the church. So far, Christian people seem able to unite and legislate in regard to such issues as prohibition and other vices of a like nature. There has been a lack in action so far as working in the direction of peace is concerned. The United Nations Organization has not been studied much in church circles. The proposal of a charter for peace and reconciliation has not been forthcoming from the church. Along with many others, there has only been a fear of communism without proper positive action.

Needed is a ministry of reconciliation which dares to enter these fields. If there are no prophetic voices here, the church has not fulfilled her task. When Amos came down from Tekoa to confront the ruler of the Northern Kingdom with the iniquity of the day, Amos was a prophet who freely entered into the field of statesmanship. We need Amoses who are ministers of reconciliation. We need Amoses who can point to the issue of the hour and call for a change of heart. Persons who are skilled in this field and who can speak with authority are ones who would be great ministers of reconciliation.

Personal Reconciliation and Social Reconciliation

Lastly, we need thousands of youth who have carefully thought out their religious convictions—who are intensely in earnest in regard to their faith in Christ. We need such persons who will not only see a personal commitment involved, but their social obligations as well. People generally see that to make a Christian confession requires clean personal living. They know personal habits of clean wholesome living are Christian. On a personal level high morality is a part of Christian confession and recognized as such. But, when the same person becomes a part of a larger social group, his responsibility, he feels can be relaxed. Therefore it is possible for a Christian to lay waste to a city in a bombing raid and continue to feel himself a Christian. It is possible for well-fed, fat Christians to say, "As for the people in Europe, let the dead bury the dead," which were the words used by one man who was completely satisfied that he was a Christian of Pre-millenial persuasion. It is possible for Christians to renounce any responsibility so far as the destiny of the nation is concerned, because we today are blind to our social obligations to Christ where we see our personal obligations to Him.

The ministry of reconciliation is greatly needed in many areas. These are a few which suggest the gigantic task of the church.—E.L.

Plan International University in Japan

by Ruth Miller

Administrative Assistant, The Japan International Christian University Foundation

MOST American students do not start worrying about the business of earning a living until they have a diploma in hand. In Japan students walk a harder path. They usually have to earn a living and an education at the same time. The result is a youthful grimness, which is unheard-of in America's amiable campus life, and an increasing number of break-downs. T.B., ever the enemy of young people who live on the verge of hunger and chronic fatigue, is becoming prevalent among Japanese students.

The picture is put pretty clearly in the recent words of Mrs. Kiyo Yuasa, American-educated wife of the president of the International Christian University, to be founded soon near Tkyo:

"Japanese students have been poor and miserable for so long they have forgotten completely the wonders of a happy campus. Colleges and universities now are only for study. They are stark, drab, cold, unfriendly. They do not inspire. They're simply horrible!"

Another side of the same picture is reflected in the words of Toru Matsumoto, author of The Seven Stars and A Brother is a Stranger, who returned to Japan recently to teach in a Christian college. Writes Mr. Matsumoto:

G. I. English

"Books in use today are almost exactly identical with those of my college days eighteen years ago. Shakespeare, Chaucer, Dickens, Hawthorne, Longfellow and Emerson are read aloud and translated verbally in class. But the English the students hear nowadays is not quite Shakespearean. One student could not understand why it was not good English when he wrote in a composition, "Dear Guy, what's up?" He had heard these words from an authentic source, the American G. I. in Japan.

Japan's unhappy young "dear guys" can hope for better books, better teachers, and a better life only to the extent that the rest of us are willing to help them. Japan cannot at present lift herself by her own bootstraps. Her economy is wrecked as the aftermath of a disastrous military defeat; her educational system is in the throes of a democratic revolution which it will take years to accomplish fully.

A Bold and Exciting Project

Meantime, friends of Japan in the United States and Canada have chosen this crucial time to begin a bold and exciting project—the establishment of the International Christian University. Many of the Japanese students who at this very time are having heartbreaking experiences will gain a new outlook and a stronger grasp on their own destinies as a result of this university.

Here is what this non-sectarian University, planned by twelve denominations and two interdenominational groups, plans to offer: a graduate school of education for the training of teachers in democratic Christian techniques; a graduate school for social workers; a graduate school of citizenship and public affairs. A liberal arts college will be included also. Later, as funds are made available, schools of medicine, engineering and law will be added.

A unique thing for Japanese students will be I.C.U.'s emphasis upon such non-academic features as the development of faculty homes and cooperative living centers on the 350-acre campus. Friendly and casual relationships between professor and student will be encouraged. This sort of thing is unheard-of among Japanese students, excepting the relatively few who have attended Christian schools. It is traditional custom for Japanese professors to draw a curtain of formality between themselves and their students. They deliver their lectures stiffly, turn on their heels and depart. Japanese youth has been taught facts from books, but has been cheated out of the great democratic privilege of thinking for itself. I.C.U. will be a formidable opponent of this out-moded system.

I.C.U.'s sound core of Christianity will be maintained by its all-Christian faculty. Campus religious life will center around a University Church which will be an integral part of the architectural plant, and a continuing source of enlightenment and guidance to both students and teachers. This church will be supported entirely by the campus community. Its pastor will be the I.C.U. vice-president in charge of campus religious life.

Giant Scroll of Contributors to Japan

The opening of I.C.U. in April, 1951 awaits the raising, in the United States and Canada, of $10,000,000. This sum is now being actively sought, and indications are that North America's Christian people will not fail the youth of Japan who have so little and need so much. Our Christian young people will have their own opportunity to contribute to this historic enterprise during the week of April 16—23, when a special Youth appeal will be made. The name of each young person who contributes will be placed on a giant scroll and taken to Japan as a living symbol of good-will.

Christians the world over expect great things of I.C.U. It will offer higher education of a better type and in pleasanter form than young Japanese scholars have yet seen. In the words of the new University's president, American-educated Hachiro Yuasa, "I.C.U. hopes to contribute its decisive share to the total regeneration of the Japanese people and to the complete political and social evolution of the Japanese nation."

David Livingstone of Africa

Part V. Missionary Explorer

[The Story thus far: David Livingstone grew up as a youth in very meager circumstances. He was pretty much self-educated finally answering a call to enter mission work. He went to Africa under the London Missionary Society and quickly became an explorer-missionary invading the depths of Africa unreached by a white man before. He married the daughter of Dr. Robert Moffatt, famous missionary. He sought outlets to the sea both West and East to the Atlantic and Indian oceans. He returned to England already famous for his work as an explorer.]

LIVINGSTONE'S new backer was the British Government. While he was in England, Livingstone wrote to Lord Clarendon saying that he meant to make further exporations in Africa. He did not believe these explorations would encroach upon the rights of Portugal, but would benefit trade and enhance the good name of England. He suggested that he would be willing to enter the employment of the government.

Accordingly, Livingstone received a commission as consul for the east coast of Africa, south of Zanzibar, and the unexplored interior; and he was made commander of an expedition to survey and report upon the country near the lower Zambezi. Six other Englishmen were under him, including his brother, Charles, who was "General Assistant and Secretary."

Lord Clarendon offered to provide whatever Livingstone might deem necessary, and so instructed the Admiralty. Livingstone requested only very modest equipment, including a light-draught paddle steamer. This steamer was taken in sections which could be bolted together.

The expedition left England in March, 1858. Mrs. Livingstone accompanied her husband, but she was ill much of the time on the voyage down the west coast, and from Cape Town she went back to Kuruman with her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Moffat, who had come down to see the Livingstones. The children were left in England to go to school.

Cape Town Testimonial Dinner

At Cape Town Livingstone was given a testimonial dinner at which the governor presented him with six hundred guineas in a silver box. This was in pleasing contrast to the insults and difficulties he had experienced in Cape Town on his visit there in 1852.

By the middle of May, 1858, the expedition was at the mouth of the Zambezi where the paddle steamer was unloaded and assembled. This boat was called the Ma-Robert the name give by the natives to Mrs.

Livingstone, whose oldest son was named Robert.

The expedition achieved very important results; but it was beset with difficulties and disappointments and tragedies. Livingstone had high hopes of opening the Zambezi to navigation, locating a mission station, substituting lawful traffic for the slave traffic, and demonstrating to the people of England and to his good friends in the government who had backed the expedition that there was opportunity for profitable trade in Eastern Africa. Not one of these hopes was immediately fulfilled.

The Ma-Robert was the first disappointment. It was soon renamed the Asthmatic because of its loud puffing. It took a day and a half of hard work to cut wood enough to feed the boilers for a day. It did not have power enough to make speed against the swift currents. It leaked from the beginning, and was soon so full of holes that it had to be patched every night. Livingstone asked the government to send him another and better boat, but in the meantime made what explorations he could with the Ma-Robert.

On his first voyage up the Zambezi he found at Tette the survivors of the men who had come with him from the interior of Africa nearly three years before. When they saw him they said, "The Tette people often taunted us by saying, 'Your Englishman will never return,' but we trusted you, and now we shall sleep." As the men were established in the community and had gardens to cultivate they were not anxious to return to their homes immediately, so Livingstone first explored the Zambezi to see whether he could go most of the distance by boat. He found rapids about thirty miles above Tette which could not be passed by the Ma-Robert.

Discover Shire River

During the year 1859 Livingstone and other members of the expedition discovered the Shire, a northern tributary of the Zambezi, and made three trips up the river, on the last trip discovering Lake Nyasa. Along the Shire River he found a country that promised to be healthful for Europeans, and was suitable for growing cotton and other crops. He wrote his friends in England that colonists should be sent out to settle in this region.

In 1860 Livingstone went home with the Makololo. A number had died while he was in England; some had married and preferred to stay in Tette, but all who wished to return were taken back. The trip took nearly a year, and was without special significance, although Livingstone added to his knowledge of the geography of the country and of the plants and animals found there. On their way back they embarked in the Ma-Robert at Tette November 23, 1860; but four weeks laters the boat sankon a sand bar. They went the rest of the way to the sea in boats furnished by a Portuguese trader.

Slave Traders Invade Country

One unexpected and horrifying discovery made on the trip to the home of the Makololo was that the first trip Livingstone had made down the Zambezi more than three years before had opened the country to slave traders. They brazenly announced themselves as "children of Livingstone," and told the natives that they had his authority to take whatever they wanted. Regions that had been densely populated when he first passed through them were now deserted. Around the villages were scattered hundreds of skeletons. The natives that survived were sullen and dangerous. Several times the members of the party were mistaken for slave traders and threatened with attack.

Early in 1861 the new steamer, the Pioneer, arrived. This was a much better boat than the Ma-Robert, but drew four feet of water when empty, and five feet when loaded with fuel and supplies, so it frequently got stuck on the sand bars. However, in this boat Livingstone was able to explore the Rovuna, which flows into the Indian Ocean about seven hundred miles north of the Zambezi, and also to make several trips up the Shire.

The Universities Mission

The year 1861 also saw the beginning of the Universities Mission, as it was called. It was sent out by the Church of England (Livingstone had been sent by the London Missionary Society), and was sponsored by the Universities of Cambridge and Oxford. The movement that resulted in the sending of the mission had its beginning in an address which Livingstone made at Cambridge University on December 3, 1857 He closed his address with these words: "I go back to Africa to try to make an open path for commerce and Christianity; will you carry out the work which I have begun? I leave it to you."

He spoke these words with much earnestness, then suddenly sat down. There was silence for a moment, then his audience broke into great applause.

Slaves Freed

The first workers for the mission arrived early in 1861. There were six white men and five natives from Cape Colony, headed by Bishop Mackenzie. Livingstone was most enthusiastic about the mission. It seemed to be the fulfilment of his hopes for Africa. He had found what seemed a suitable location in the region of the Shire River. If the missionaries could train native workers and develop agriculture and trade among the native tribes they could transform that part of Africa. Livingstone took the mission party up the Shire in the Pioneer, although such a trip was not directly connected with his duties as head of the government expedition. After leaving the boat they saw a large party of slaves passing the village where they were stopping. When the slave drivers found themselves confronted by Englishmen they ran away and left the slaves, which were promptly freed from the chains that bound the children and the slave-sticks that held the men. In a day or two other slaves were freed. Thus the mission found itself with more than a hundred natives whose lives had been saved. It looked like an auspicius beginning. One of those liberated was Chuma, who accompanied Livingstone on his last journey. A girl then liberated was a teacher in a school near Cape Town a number of years later, and a valued Christian worker.

Beyond Our Own

Because of the enthusiastic way in which Church of the Brethren families in America have sponsored ninety German high-school students for a year's stay here, 100 more will be brought to this country. All students will live "as one of the family" with the host families approved by the Brethren Service Commission. The students will attend high school for one year and engage in typical American youth activities.—Gospel Herald

Members of the congregations of the Church of the Brethren from coast to coast have been asked to miss one meal a week and contribute the money thus saved to the Brethren brotherhood fund which is used principally for overseas relief, home and foreign missions.—Gospel Herald

after all, when repair work is needed on the house or other property, labor is up instead of at the old prewar price.

In condemning landlords and later on in your editorial "economic exploitation" which of course only applies to the frugal section of our people, the communist or Socialist party line is followed. Is that what we want? Is it not profit that comes to the church in form of contributions that sends missionaries virtually all over the world. We should perhaps remember that which Jesus taught in Matt. 25:14-30 concerning the talents. Our need today is for more people to invest the things God has given them in homes, in churches, in missions, in the things that benefit man rather than the ways of Satan.

Our young people as well as our older people need to be impressed with frugal living rather than spending their money for entertainment, drink, tobacco, and all manner of evil.

We know that becoming a Christian is a serious business—it means a real change, an inner change to Christ. Christ changes man from a man of hate to a man of love, patience, and Godliness. Love does not condemn man for being frugal and purchasing a house for his fellowman—may we remember this.

Yours sincerely,

Conference Boards Plan New Method of Financing Publications

AT the Mountain Lake meeting of the Council of Boards the delegates assembled considered for a second or third time a proposal by the Board of Publications for a new method of financing the conference church papers.

Briefly, the plan may be stated this way: For maximum usefulness it becomes increasingly clear that our conference papers must get into every home in the Conference—if necessary, the expense to be shared by the various Conference boards participating in the plan.

Now for some more details:

Question 1.—What is the present situation?

Answer 1.—A circulation of about 9,000 of which approximately 7,000 get it through the One Hundred Per Cent plan adopted by approximately 75 churches.

Question 2.—Has the 100 Per Cent plan been successful?

Answer 2.—Yes, as far as it goes—but it doesn't go far enough! Seventy-five churches, both large and small, have joined the 100 per cent plan over a period of about eight years. Increasing costs of printing make it necessary to distribute this cost over as large a number of readers as possible.

Question 3.—How will this increase the circulation?

Answer 3.—Assuming a Conference population of about 48,000 persons, and approximately 4 persons to a family, the circulation might possibly be increased from 9,000 to 12,000—a very considerable increase in the number of contacts through which our General Conference undertakings can be promoted.

Question 4.—How many churches are not on the 100 per cent plan?

Answer 4.—We have approximately 240 churches in the General Conference of which roughly a third have joined the 100 per cent plan which means that in 165 churches no systematic coverage on conference undertakings is available.

Question 5.—How will the proposed Universal Subscription Plan be financed?

Answer 5.—Every board of the Conference has already approved a plan whereby the total cost of the increased printing be distributed among the various boards on some equitable basis, since each of the various boards and committees uses our Conference papers as the advertising medium to keep our people informed as to what is being undertaken.

Question 6.—When will the new plan go into effect?

Answer 6.—It has seemed wise to bring this before the Conference in August for a general discussion from the floor and to get direct authorization from our churches through their regularly appointed delegates, to initiate this plan in Conference publications. If accepted by the Conference at Freeman next summer it is hoped to put the plan into operation January 1, 1951.

Question 7.—Will the individual churches be required to join the Universal Subscription Plan?

Answer 7.—No—it will be entirely voluntary. The church will be invited to submit its list of addresses to which the Conference papers should go, and the local church will be invited to contribute a nominal amount per member, but the payment is optional and whatever the churches do not contribute on this basis will be distributed among the various boards in equitable proportions, unless the Conference at Freeman instructs otherwise.

I was a Stranger and you did not welcome me: --Jesus

THE MIGRANT SITUATION in America: In one area, an early fall freeze left 7,500 jobless and sleeping in vacant lots. In one camp, two migrant mothers died in child birth due to a lack of medical care—an all too common occurance; each left six children. Mounting unemployment is making the migrant "labor market" over-crowded. As migrants move into the northern areas during the next few months each church group and community should lead the way in welcoming them in their area, making community health and educational facilities available, tracking down "tide-over" jobs, and doing everything possible to guard against a recurrence of last winter's migrant disaster.

The Reader Says

Dear Editor:

Just received the March 14 issue of THE MENNONITE and found the reading of some of the articles rather confusing. First I read the article, "Evangelism—Then and Now," in which the writer calls present day methods of evangelism as "inadequate," "ineffective," "unwholesome," "without the sanction of Jesus Christ," and "demoralizing." Then right on the opposite page I continued to read the article, "A Marvelous Moving of the Spirit," telling how this "inadequate," "unwholesome," "unsanctioned," and "demoralizing" present day evangelism brought about a marvelous moving of the Holy Spirit in the hearts of men in the evangelistic meetings at Berne, Indiana, with the result that many people came under conviction and found Jesus Christ as their Saviour. Something must be wrong somewhere. Either the writer of the article, "A Marvelous Moving of the Spirit," gave us a false report on these evangelistic meetings, or else we must disbelieve the assumption that present day evangelism is "inadequate," "ineffective," "unwholesome," "unsanctioned," and "demoralizing."

The writer of the article, "Evangelism—Then and Now," also calls gospel tracts as "cheap tract literature." Dare we as Christians call any writing which sets forth the necessity of being born again and the plan of salvation as "cheap literature"? Certainly the price that our Lord and Saviour paid for our redemption was anything but "cheap."

I do not believe that I could have

EVANGELISM IS COMING in for a lot of discussion in these days. We read somewhere that about the time man has convinced himself that the day of mass evangelism is past another great revival breaks out and proves that he is wrong. This is what is happening in our time. Even in some of the larger denominations, the leaders of which two or three decades ago hardly used the word "evangelism," there is a growing concern for the winning of the lost. For example, Bishop Fred P. Corson of the Methodist Denomination was heard to say at the recent evangelistic crusade in Philadelphia, "Why are we wasting time with the gadgets and nonentities of church activities when we could be out going after souls?" Another Bishop, Gerald Kennedy, said "Evangelism is the one word that sums up our ministry, and any revival must begin with the ministers even the bishops." We have called attention in these pages to the amazing successes of England's Rector Green in high Episcopalianism's Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York City as well as the fruits of Billy Graham's work. Last issue carried the story the thousands who made clear decisions for Christ in the ministry of E. Stanley Jones in Japan. Recent issues of THE MENNONITE have carried the moving stories of a mass evangelistic movement in the Berne Communuity as well as radiant accounts of visitation evangelism in several of our Eastern District Churches. This points up a concern that has been growing in the thinking of many in our churches as to what God's will for us is in the matter of methods of evangelism. On the part of some there has been the tendency to decry mass evangelism; others are just as sure that mass evangelism is the only method. The same could probably be said of both visitation and personal evangelism. To pit one method over against another so thoughtlessly is hardly wise. In examining the historical sweep of the New Testament in relation to this problem we see an integration of all three methods—an integration which is historically and psychologically sound. Jesus began with an emphasis on personal work as he called his disciples about him. Of course he drew the crowds too and invited them to follow but not with too great a direct result. Then he sent out the twelve and the seventy in teams corresponding to what we call visitation evangelism. Finally, the Holy Spirit came, as promised, at Penetcost; and there was obvious mass evangelism. Note clearly, the success of the mass movement depended upon the personal evangelism and systematic visitation evangelism carried on in the course of three years previous. And, let us not forget days in prayer, teaching, preaching and sacrifice that was involved in this preparation. All this helped to lay the groundwork for a mighty movement of the Spirit of God. From all this we draw two evident conclusions. First, evangelism that stresses only the personal and the visitation without praying and working for the larger breaking forth of salvation among the masses definitely falls short of the whole will of God. Second, evangelism that concentrates on the mass-meeting technique without carefully preparing the ground so that there is a general knowledge as to the radical change in life implied in the acceptance of Christ—such evangelism, we maintain will only fill the churches with baptized pagans. (At this point we have much to learn from the Church on the mission field). We started this by saying that evangelism is being discussed a lot today; we are well aware that we have added to this. So much are we aware of this that we are under obligation to add that unless we follow up such discussion with actual prayer, careful teaching, soul-winning, both in the personal and visitation setting as well as in the mass meeting, we will be in the position of those who say "Lord, Lord" and do not the things he commanded.

CRITICISM IS OFTEN A CONFESSION IN DISGUISE

IN A RECENT CONVERSATION, a European pointed out in graphic illustration the point at which Christianity and communism are having the death struggle in Europe. "Imagine," he put it, "that you and your neighbor have been getting along equally well. Both of you are Christians. Both of you have comfortable residences. Then war comes, and with it, bombs that destroy your neighbor's house, but leave your house untouched. Supposing this situation is multiplied till one-half the homes in this formerly comfortable city are destroyed and the other half are livable." In a war-ravaged country this situation must be multiplied by the number of strategic cities. But now come back to the original illustration which is probably a conservative one. There are two attitudes that the individual with the untouched house can take. He may help his neighbor by sharing his residence. Or he may disclaim any responsibility saying that others can help. But the fact is, others have their neighbors to help. Given enough people without shelter alone (to say nothing about food and clothing) and enough people who are irresponsible stewards of the ample shelter they possess, there exists a social powderkeg. Where Christian love does not operate of its own free will, there force will inevitably step in and take things into its own godless hands. We are deeply disturbed about the spread of this force in the form of communism. We are carrying the witch-hunt off to every nook and cranny except to the right place—our own selfish hearts. We are told for example that the churches of our nation have given assurances to 25,000 Protestant D.P.'s of Europe, but so far have refused to follow up with the money to bring the D.P.'s here. This is the Communist element in the hearts of Christians of America; unless there is a radical change soon we too are promising without keeping our promise. As Christians under God who is omnipresent, we believe that a needy person doesn't have to be next door to be our responsibility. If American Christians fail to keep their word by failing to underwrite their promises with dollars, they are imitating the double-talk of the Communists who openly profess to be atheistic. In such a situation every word of condemnation of Communists, true though it be, turns out to be a boomerang.

SINCE WE HAVE HEARD that the President and the Secretary of State have been flooded by letters and petitions from Roman Catholics to not only continue the Vatican Mission but make it an open ambassadorship, and since only a trickle of Protestant mail is reaching them we print the following statement of concern prepared by a group of Protestant leaders:

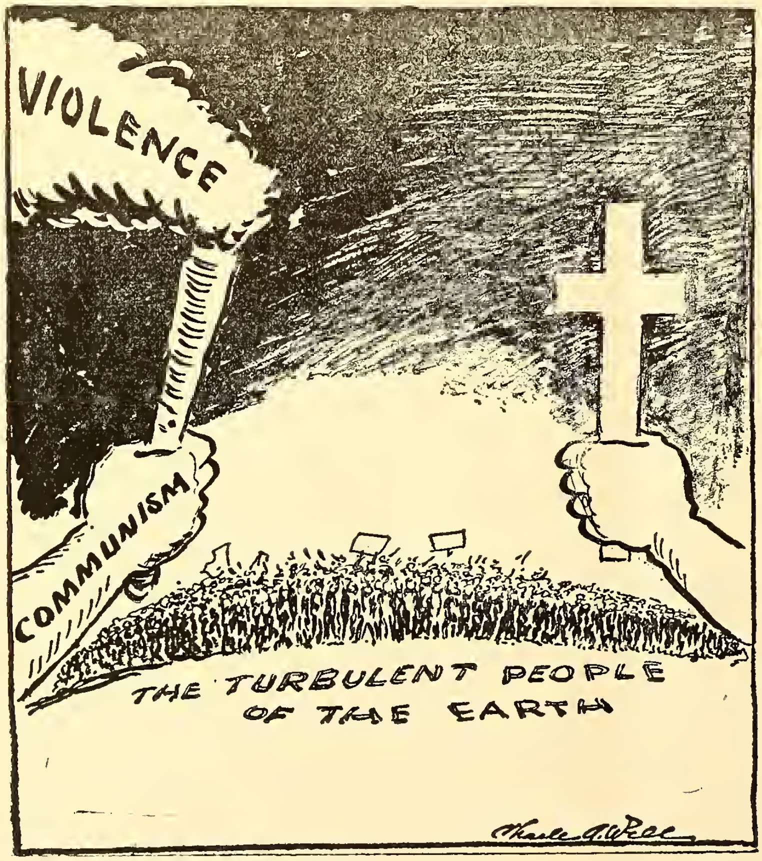
"The resignation of Myron C. Taylor as the President's representative to the Holy See is an occasion for recalling the President's twice-given assurance that the arrangement was a temporary one. On January 5, 1946, in a conference with a delegation of Protestant leaders, the President stated that the appointment of Mr. Taylor was a 'temporary expedient' in the interest of peace, that it might terminate at an early date, and would certainly terminate with the signing of the peace treaties. In a second conference, held on November 14, 1948, this assurance was reaffirmed. On January 20, 1950, immediately after the announcement of Mr. Taylor's resignation, a letter was sent to the President in behalf of the delegation, reminding him of these conversations.

"In its issue of February 4, America, the ably edited Jesuit magazine, comments that ' all through the nine years of the mission's existence . . . such bodies as the Federal Council of Churches (the National Association of Evangelicals has objected strongly, too) have continued to raise the same stale and groundless clamor' against it. This seems, therefore, an appropriate time to restate briefly the considerations which to America appear as 'stale and groundless' but to us as dynamic and weighty.

"What is really at stake is the basic Amercian principle of the separation of Church and State. It is the acceptance of this principle which has been the historic bulwark of religious freedom in America, which has insured a policy of equal treatment of all religious bodies by our government, and which has afforded an equal opportunity to every church to develop its own inherent possibilities without either dependence on, or control by, the State.

"The maintenance of diplomatic relations with the Vatican, whether openly recognized or camouflaged under some such title as 'personal representative of the President,' confers on one Church a special status, not held by other churches, in relation to government. It is thus directly contrary to our historic principle that all churches should have the same status in the eyes of the State.

"The observance of the principle that all religious bodies shall stand on the same level in relation to the State has fostered in our country a spiritual climate favorable to good will and harmony among them all. The departure from this principle by the President of the United States has had the unhappy effect of creating needless tension among them. Nothing would do more at the present juncture to improve the climate of inter-faith relations than for our country to make it completely clear that it will not again compromise our historic principle by putting one Church in a preferential position in relation to governments."—J.J.E.



THEY WILL FOLLOW ONE OR THE OTHER

By Charles A. Wells

There is something of an inevitable choice moving through present world trends. Hundreds of millions of people in vast and seething Asia and in tortured Europe have awakened at last to the realization that they are an equal part of the human race—that they are no different from and are entitled to the same earthly rights as an American millionaire or a princess of England. They simply will no longer endure the inequalities of the past. The majority have neither the ability nor the training to make full use of their opportunities, but they want the right to try and most of them will only be able to lift their standards of existence that fraction which seems so small to us but is such a miracle to them. The Communists have made great strides in offering these pressing throngs the means and leadership to achieve their longing. But the Communists will do it by fire and destruction while Christian teachings offer the same hope through brotherhood, justice and Christian sharing. As time moves on, the world makes the choice.

"Lord, Show Us the Father"

by Abe M. Wiebe

"MASTER," said Philip, "show us the Father: that is all we need. Have I been so long among you, Jesus answered, and yet you, Philip, do not know men? He who has seen me has seen the Father."

The request made by Philip is universal. What is more basic than the cry of man, "Show us God and we will be satisfied"?

"From Green-lands icy mountain,
From Indias coral strand,
Where Afric's sunny fountains roll down their golden sand,
From many an ancient river, from many a palmy plain . . . "

has come the cry, "show us the Father; that is all we need."

The request of Philip has in it an element of curiosity similar to the curiosity manifested by Israel when God appeared on Mt. Sinai to present the ten commandments to Moses. Curiosity is powerful and insistent, but does Philip's request end with that? Or was there a deeper longing, such as, "Reveal God to us and our hearts shall have peace"? St Augustine wrote in his Confessions, "Thou hast made us for Thyself, and the heart is restless until it rests in Thee." The Psalmist also expressed this deep longing of the heart. "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God. My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God." But how can the heart of man rest and have peace until it knows God? Therefore man cries, "Show us the Father; it is all we desire and are in need of."

Abe M. Wiebe
Pastor, Bethel Church

Men have attempted to satisfy this deep longing by substituting various "idols." But like the prophets of Baal, their cry is not answered when they franctically call upon their god. The true God is not so difficult to find, but man have trampled under-foot their deepest longing because they realize that when man comes to know God and to fellowship with Him there is an inevitable change. This involves self-crucifixion, self-denial, and sacrifice. Do you still want to know God?

Jesus prayed in his high priestly prayer, "And this is eternal life, to know Thee the only true God and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent." God has from the time of the Garden of Eden sought to reveal Himself to man through various ways. In His creation of nature, through the conscience of man, by His dealings with man in history, by His spokesmen—the prophets, and through the infallible Word He has revealed Himself. Yet in the time of Jesus not only Philip, but many others also were seeking for a more perfect understanding of God. Then God revealed Himself. "God who of old spoke to our forefathers in many fragments and by various methods through the Prophets, has at the end of these days spoken to us through a Son, who is the predestined Lord of the universe, and through whom He made the world. He brightly reflects God's glory and is the exact representation of His being, and upholds the universe by His all-powerful word."

In Jesus Christ we behold the exact representation of God the Father. Again we return to the words of Christ, "He who has seen me has seen the Father." Or could we conclude, "He who knows me knows the Father"? To many people, even church goers, Jesus is yet unknown. So long has He been with us, and yet some Americans do not know Him. Not knowing Him, they do not know God, our Heavenly Father! Our personal religion rises no higher than our knowledge and concept of God, and our experience with Him. Therefore, shall we briefly meditate upon Jesus, and thus see God.

We see Jesus turning water to wine, instantly curing all who were afflicted by disease, driving out the evil spirits, and restoring to life one who had been dead four days. Through Jesus we behold God as being omnipotent—all powerful.

We see Jesus cleansing the temple that religious men had made into a den of thieves. We see his penetrating eye pierce the shallow cloak of self-righteousness worn by those who professed Godliness but denied the power thereof. Unerringly Jesus assessed their profession and laid bare the thought and intents of their hearts. God is omniscient—all knowing. He is also a God of holiness and justice.

Jesus breaks loaf after loaf to quell the gnawing hunger of the multitudes. God is a god of compassion, not only to the individual, but also to the masses. Let us not forget that God's heart goes out to the millions who are suffering in our world.

Jesus is riding into Jerusalem and as he views the religious city, the bleeding heart of God cries out, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem! You that murder the prophets and stone those who have been sent to you! How often have I desired to gather your children to me, as a hen gathers her chickens under her wings, and you would not come!" God has always invited man to come to Him. The words stand out in bold relief, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." God is seeking the fellowship of man; yea, in the cool of the evening, while it is yet day.

Jesus purposely waits at the well of Jacob, there to give the water of life to a despised woman, and through her to a so-called inferior nation. God is no respecter

From the Mission Front

Ambassadors of Christ

by David and LaVeta Habegger

IT was eight years ago that I left home here at Busby, Montana, to finish high school in Berne, Indiana. At that time I did not realize that I would eventually return and be a missionary among these people with whom I had lived. At that time I was not even considering the ministry as a life work, but God led me through various experiences that in the end brought me back home again.

It has been very much a home-coming to return to the place in which I grew up. There are many here whom I have always considered as friends and it has been good to see them again. I have especially enjoyed being among the hills again and feeling the sense of freedom in this open country. They have always been a part of me.

The work here is very familiar to me, yet it takes on quite a different aspect since I have a responsible part in it. I now feel every advance with more joy and every backset and hindrance to the work with more heartache. To return to this work was not the easiest decision to make as there are many areas of work that would have been easier.

LaVeta and I have been spending much of our time in studying the Cheyenne language. Even though I grew up among the Cheyennes, I never learned much of their language because all of my playmates knew English quite well. Since quite a few of the Indians know English, it is more difficult to learn the Cheyenne because it is much simpler to use the language that is the easiest one in which to make ourselves understood. However, there are quite a few Indians that know almost no English.

The children really enjoyed their gifts at Christmas from various Mennonite churches, for many of them would not have received any gift at all if the churches had not sent them. But it is our hope and prayer that the Cheyennes will all receive the gift of God, which is salvation through Christ Jesus, and that they will come to know the joy that comes from a gift that lasts eternally. For it is this gift that we have come to offer to them as ambasadors of Christ.

by LaVeta Habegger

SINCE we arrived at Busby in October we have spent much of our time studying the Cheyenne language. Although most of the children of school age and young people know English quite well, the language is needed to be understood by most of the older folks.

Shortly after arriving here an elderly man came to the door and began speaking Cheyenne. My English in return meant nothing to him so finally he, with sign language, indicated he wanted paper and pencil. To my great surprise he wrote in very legible English the word milk. Later I was told he had been taught to write a few such things by his son so that he could trade at the store. Thus I was able to help him in this situation; however, ordinarily the barrier is great when one is not able to understand or be understood by another.

On the other hand, Charlie Yellowrobe, similar in age, attended a government school when young so that he reads and speaks English quite well. Although he is handicapped by a speech defect, his willingness to speak on Sunday mornings on a passage of Scripture in the Cheyenne language has been greatly appreciated.

February and March have been months filled with illnesses. On March 15, funeral services were held for little Linwood Roundstone who was three months old and had pneumonia. It was the most simple funeral I have ever attended. The casket was made of rough lumber and painted white by the father and a single wreath of paper flowers made by the mother was laid on top. In contrast to the white way of conducting such a service, the mother removed the scarf from the baby's face in preparation for the viewers and the father helped carry and nail the casket shut. The mother is a Christian while the father is not. So often this is true among these people, and many times it takes some tragedy before some are approachable with the gospel.

The name of Christ has been heard, but because the allurements and temptations of heathendom are great and many are unwilling to cast off the evil in their lives, they are like those in Jerusalem of old to whom Christ said, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, . . . , how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, and ye would not." Luke 13:34. However, the Gospel has reached the hearts of some, and we are looking forward to a baptismal service during this Easter season.

The Master said, "Go ye . . . . " Only a few can go in person, but all can heed this command and go in prayer.

SHOW US THE FATHER . . . Continued from p. 237

of persons; He has no racial boundaries.

Jesus stoops to write on the ground while the woman taken in adultery fearfully stands by. After the accusers sneak away, their own consciences smiting them, Jesus utters those immortal words, "Neither do I condemn thee, go, and sin no more." God will accept anyone that comes to Him in the right attitude of heart and mind; "He that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out."

Jesus is in court, the court of man, on trial for our transgression. He is condemned! Beaten, despised, and rejected, He—THE SON OF GOD—treads the road to the place called The Skull. As the light dims and the earth shivers in horror, there appears, as it were, in bold letters a word written across the cross—the single matchless word—LOVE. God is love.

"Master, said Philip, show us the Father, that is all we need." Do you know the God that Jesus revealed? When was your last experience with Him?

Too many people consider missions as a revolving door; they want to go through with it but on the other fellow's push.

"The Field Is The World"
M. C. C. Keynote for 1950

AKRON, PENNSYLVANIA. — Challenged by the review of last year's work "In the Name of Christ," and thrust forward into the open door of new opportunities by the continuing Christian responsibility in the face of today's need, the Mennonite and Brethren in Christ church groups, in the M.C.C. Annual Meeting, March 17-18 again confirmed the plan to continue in this work in the coming months insofar as resources enable. A keynote in the thinking was "The field is the world," calling for work of material and spiritual help both at home and abroad.

ABROAD:
The Spiritual Plus Into Sharper Focus

In the relief effort, work of rehabilitation nature is envisioned as one of the present and continuing challenges. The distinction between Christian service and mere social work will appear even more evident; that is, the spiritual "plus" which is over and above material aid, will come into sharper focus. While this may reflect the trend, particularly in Europe, the physical need in the Far East and Middle East areas continues in appalling proportion, and the most that can be done will not supply the need fully, but can only be a token and symbol of Christian concern and help. Here, in particular, relief needs are related to conditions brought about and accompanied by ideological tensions, and in this darkness the light of Christian help must shine.

It seems clear that needs of Mennonite immigrants and refugees also require continued assistance from the North American brotherhood. Those newly settled in South America lack resources for basic industries and means of proper economic development, as well as serious limitations in educational, medical, religious and other phases of life. Those who remain in Europe as refugees continue to look hopefully for help in resettlement in a new homeland or care in Europe. Then too, there are continuing contacts with the older established Mennonite churches in Mexico, Holland, Germany, France, Switzerland, and Austria, and with newer churches in Java and India, and sooner or later again, in China.

Menno Travel Service has expanded as a helpful, self-supporting agency, serving both M.C.C. personnel, other church workers and individuals. Likewise, a parallel emerging service to be operated on cost basis is that of accommodation shipping and purchasing for both M.C.C. and other church interests abroad.

AT HOME:
Voluntary Service and Mental Health

The challenge to provide voluntary service opportunity in the homeland to use services of persons who volunteer, comes even more strongly with the shift in emphasis and general contraction of the program abroad. Various types of projects are being continued, chiefly those of exploration and experimentation as in past years. The Voluntary Service work in Europe is to be coordinated administratively with the Relief Section, and that in Mexico with the Mennonite Aid Section.

With Brook Lane Farm moving toward capacity operation, and in terms of finance, self-supporting and covering as well the mental-health overhead expense, all mental health contributions from the churches can be applied to the Reedley building program. With continued favorable development there, the building may be completed by next fall or winter. There is opportunity and challenge for continued expansion of the mental health facilities and work as rapidly as resources enable.

In the Peace Section, general services of peace literature promotion, contact with legislative developments, liason with other peace groups, and peace education through Summer Peace Teams and institutes are envisaged. The need for a strong peace teaching and witness emphasis at this time of uncertainty and tension was particularly expressed.

Book Notes . . . . . .

Evangelism According to Christ by Gaines S. Dobbins, Harpers, 1949, pp. 224, $2.50.

THIS book is in reality an exposition of the Gospel of John in terms of "evangelism," The net result is an "Evangelism According to Christ." For convenience and plan Dr. Dobbins divides the Gospel of John into two parts; "Christ Can Save the Sinner," (Chapters 1-9), and "Christ Can Keep the Saved," (9-21). With systematic and measured skill he moves through the Gospel of John painting a word picture of Christ, the master Evangelist, presenting himself and his message to sinners of every social strata. The values for present day evangelism are pointed out as each portion is developed. Applications are realistic and practical. Both of the above truths and convictions with their far reaching significance must be not only clearly understood but personally experienced by the Christ-like evangelist. This book instills a passion for the lost and a desire to make evangelistic efforts Christ-centered as well as Christ-motivated, and Christ-like. The reading of this book may be combined with a study of the Gospel of John.—Jacob T. Friesen Toward the Great Awakening, by Sidney W. Powell, Abingdon-Cokesbury, 1949, 173 pp. $2.00.

THE author writes with the burning conviction that evangelism is the most urgent task of the day. Through evangelism alone will God be able to heal our land. He points out that history shows that there have been alternating periods of religious fervor and apostate darkness. We have just come through a period of apostate life, relegating Christ's teachings to the sphere of the impractical. Untold suffering in two world wars has come as a result. The day for a new awakening is dawning. The author warns, however, that this awakening will not come automatically nor through clever planning, but by prayer and suffering. Ministers must preach with a bleeding heart. Pastors must possess the living presence of Christ and be able to impart it to others. The church will be impotent, he says, unless laymen, women, and youth work to win the lost. The author is convinced that now is the time for a new awakening and that in this propitious day a total mobilization of the church is needed to bring to earth God's power to change life. Every pastor should read this book. You will not be the same after reading it.—W. F. Unruh

From the Mission Front

A Life in Christ -- Chinese Version

by H. J. Brown

THE second year of our K'ai Chow mission, a boys' school was to be opened. Among the student-applicants there stood a nine- or ten-year-old boy, Wang Wan Chue. He did his work faithfully and finished the grades and the Hua Mei high school. Thereafter he attended other mission schools. Later he came back home to assist in the mission work at K'ai Chow. He found his preparation too limited and longed to go to the Theological Seminary at Teng Hsien, Shantung. However, his family had only two acres of land, and could not begin to think of supporting him. The mission also had no more budget money to spare. Mrs. Brown and I brought this matter to God in prayer. Later we came to the conclusion, that we should help him though it cut down on other legitimate things, in order to prepare this young man for the ministry.

We had opened a Bible school in K'ai Chow. Teachers for the same were hard to find, so it was a happy day, when Wang Wan Chue after graduation came home and took up teaching in this school. Even after S. F. Pannabecker had returned to America, he continued teaching and, with Chang Ching, carried the responsibility of the whole school. The year before, both of them had been ordained in our church, so that time we had seven ordained elders in our mission. Finally, after Pearl Harbor, the Japanese forced the Bible school to close. Our hearts were rejoicing to hear, that Wang and Chang both joined other volunteer preachers in going out into the villages with the Message of Life.

In a Dangerous Position—Equal to Task

Later Wu found his assignment as superintendent of the Tung Ming and Chang Yuan counties too difficult and therefore resigned. For a time the General Committee was up against it; but after prayerfully considering it chose Wang Wan Chue as his successor. He accepted this very difficult and at the same time dangerous position, proving himself equal to the task. When we returned to China in the year 1947, he was still at his post. All financial support from America had long since ceased to come. With the little grain from his few acres of land and some small contributions from these churches he continued to carry on the Lord's work.

He lived in Tung Ming, but made frequent trips to the churches of Chʻang Yuan, faithfully performing his duties as elder. Since the General Committee was reorganized, on which he continued to serve as a member, and we had brought some funds along from America, things began to go better, except for some Communist raids. The M.C.C. made Tung Ming a center of distribution; thus our church there became known for miles and miles around; but, through Communists' raids the workers also had to suffer much. Wang was sickly at this time. The M.C.C. gave him and the other church workers each a warm overcoat; and the General Committee advanced the quarterly salary, so the workers should have something to eat. This money they immediately invested in grain; but when the Communists came in they took all their grain away; they also searched their rooms for clothing. Since it was in the cold of the winter, the workers were wearing their overcoats. These the Communists compelled them to turn over to them, saying, that since they had received them as a gift, they did not belong to them.

The Mission Had No Such Funds

Wang really was a sick man. My heart always overflowed with pity when he came to Kaifeng for the General Committee meeting. Since he was very poor, I offered to pay his hospital bill, and urged him to have a physical checkup. We feared, that he had T.B.; but the doctor described it as pleurisy and a very much run-down condition. Besides using medicine he was advised to eat more nourishing food, and if at all possible, take a rest-treatment in some secluded resort. I paid for his medicine, but he could not afford either better food or rest-treatment. The Mission had no such funds, and we personally could not take care of such bills, especially since we had similar relations to all of the workers.

In 1948 his health improved some; but then came new trials. The Communists were again in the country around Kaifeng. When he was on business to Kaifeng they took him captive, relieved him of his better clothes and money. For three days he was kept prisoner with a number of other people. Every day some were tried and shot. A fellow prisoner talked about his own hopes of getting freed. because he had friends nearby, who would intercede for him. Then he turned to Wang with the question: "What friend have you?" Wang replied: "I have no friends among the Communists, but I trust in God and my Saviour Jesus Christ." The other man answered: "You poor man!" On the third day Wang was one of the first to be set free.

One daughter and one son of his were with us in central China as mission students. They are very promising students. At home there now is left his wife with the oldest son, married, and a baby-boy. This family needs our prayers. Wang Wan Chu has lived for the cause of Christ and the church. Now he has gone to his reward!

Christening: Minister's Manual

THE minister's handbook has been officially christened: "The Minister's Manual."

This comes as an action of the special committee appointed to prepare the manuscript for a new edition of what, in the past, has been called by various names. The official title of one edition was "Forms of Service," and later it received such nicknames as the minister's handbook, handbook for ministers, and perhaps others.

The happy thought, however, has nothing to do with the title, but with the fact that it is promised for delivery in time for our General Conference. The printing is being done by the Brethren Publishing House at Elgin, Illinois, (Church of the Brethren), the same printer that printed the Handbook to the Mennonite Hymnary. It is expected that the linotyping will be finished within the next few weeks after which the main printing process is to begin.

Few lessons in life are more difficult to grasp than the fact that the greatest victories of history like Calvary to the human mind have been miserable defeats; and, that the smashing victories in the eyes of men have really proved to be defeats that mankind could not afford.

To Clarify . . .

SOME SAY: Why are the preschool teachers' manuals still not ready?

The answer: This portion of the course has not been completed due to the illness of the writer. It seemed ethical and best to the publishers that the writer who envisioned and began the course of three years for the preschool ages, should be the one to complete this portion of the series.

SOME SAY: Is it possible to use the three preschool pupils' materials and teaching pictures without the teachers' manuals?

The Answer: A brief guide has been prepared to aid the teachers in the use of these three preschool pupils' books and teaching pictures. These courses have been used successfully since they were released for sale.

SOME SAY: What mission work of our own denomination is included in this Bible study series?

The answer: There is a unit on China mission work in Grade III; a unit of mission work in India in Grade IV; on mission work in Africa in Grade V; on the work in Colombia, South America, in Grade VI; and a unit on work with the American Indian in Grade VIII. Grade VII has a unit on "Followers of Jesus in Church History and in the Mennonite Church."

SOME SAY: Since this series includes denominational mission materials, can it be used for community inter-denominational schools?

The answer: Yes. The mission-inserts in the pupils' books are so placed in the center of the workbooks that they can be lifted out by unfastening the staples and thus freeing the books of any denominational emphasis. The mission portions in the teachers' manual cannot be removed but can simply be left untaught.

Bethel Host to 42 Foreign Students

FOREIGN students from ten different countries attending Mennonite and affiliated colleges in the United States were brought together in a conference at Bethel College Saturday and Sunday to discuss their views about America. Of the 42 students attending the largest number was from Germany.

Their stay in the United States does much in developing a true conception of world relationships, the students expressed during their discussions. It was regretted by individual students that due to financial pressure most of them can stay only for a year, which is hardly enough time to get the complete benefit of their visit. Another regret is that a number of the students won't be able to continue their education when returning home, due to lack of means.

The Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges which has implemented the foreign-student exchange program, met on Saturday. It consists of the college presidents who had come from different parts of the United States for the meeting.

The foreign students had the opportunity of hearing a presentation of the cantata "The Seven Last Words" by Du Bois by the Bethel College a cappella choir, conducted by W. H. Hohmann on Sunday. Soloists in the cantata were Leona Enns, soprano, Robert Senner, Bethel College graduate teaching music at the Buhler high school, tenor, and John Gaeddert and Novalis Toews, baritones.

Bernard C. Clausen, pastor of the Euclid Avenue Baptist Church, Cleveland, Ohio, will speak at a Bethel College Booster Reception and Program, April 28, given for friends who have made or will make gifts to Bethel College between May 1, 1949, and April 28, 1950.

The Booster Reception begins at 7 P. M. with a light lunch. The Bethel College A Cappella Choir and the Junior Choir School of Bethel College Church will provide special music for the program which will begin at 8:30.

Miss Bertha Fast of Mountain Lake, Minn., Director of Voluntary Service Work for the General Conference, visited Bethel College last week, interviewing students interested in voluntary service, and making plans for peace teams this summer.

Gerald Stucky, a General Conference missionary to South America, and Bethel graduate spoke in chapel last week. His mission is at Cachipay, Colombia.

Students from Grace Bible Institute of Omaha, Nebraska gave a program of songs and messages in chapel last week Friday. Small men's and women's ensembles and a speaker impressed the hearers with their free and cheerful way of delivering the message of the cross.

HUFFMAN ADDRESSES SEMINARY

J. A. Huffman of Winona Lake, Indiana, was the leader of the prayer meeting this Wednesday evening, prior to his chapel address to the combined student bodies on Thursday morning. He spent some time describing the very unique School of Theology which meets at Winona Lake every summer and with which he has been associated for many years. After these introductory remarks, Huffman presented a message dealing with Christ's suffering on the cross for the sins of the world.

Among the special pre-Easter services being conducted by staff members and students at this time are the following: Marvin Dirks is preaching at the First Church of Berne, Indiana, from Palm Sunday through Easter day; S. F. Pannabecker has been preaching a series of special Sunday night pre-Easter sermons at the Eighth Street Church, Goshen, Indiana; Don. E. Smucker has a series of Holy Week meetings from Palm Sunday through Easter at the Bible Mission of Chicago; Ronald von Riesen is the special speaker for the Holy Week services at the First Church of Nappanee, Indiana.

Spring vacation is from April 1 to 10. We pray the Lord's richest blessing on our students as they return to their home churches and families for a period of fellowship and relaxation.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE

FIVE staff members were in charge of union pre-Easter services in Karrod, Ohio, April 2-6. Those taking part were I. W. Bauman, Paul Shelly, Lloyd Ramseyer, Harry Yoder, and Howard Raid. President Ramseyer was the speaker for the noon hour services in Lima, Ohio, April 3-6. The meetings were sponsored by the Allen County Ministerial Association. Services were in the Market Street Presbyterian Church.

A series of one act plays is being presented by the speech department. "Potters Field" was the first one, given March 31.

A Missionary Institute is to be held April 14-16. Several missionaries will lead the discussions. The meetings are financed by income from the Memorial Fund.

A Day at Bethel

by Barbara Tieszen

DEAR Sue,

Next year at this time you will be here at Bethel preparing yourself for your lifework. Since you have asked me so many questions about college life, I have decided to tell you about a typical day here at Bethel .

Take yesterday. My alarm went off at 6:10, but I turned it off, rolled over and got in another fifteen minute snooze. Elsie dropped her hairbrush which made a terrific clatter, and a good thing too, because that really woke me up and then I had only twenty minutes to get to breakfast. It is a good thing I am rooming at Carnegie and don't have that long walk to breakfast like the girls at Leisey Home. I dashed into the dining hall, in the basement of Memorial Hall, with the last stragglers and was seated just barely in time for the morning devotions, led by one of the ministerial students. He read a Scripture passage, led in prayer, and thus spiritually refreshed, we then gave our attention to our bodily need. Neither Elsie nor I have a zero hour class, but Marie does, three time a week. That means she has to go to breakfast or else she would never in the world be wide enough awake to recite at 7:10. We, Elsie and I, tidied our room and then went to the library. There wasn't enough time to start studying before the 8:00 o'clock class, so I looked at the Better Home and Gardens magazine for a few minutes before going to history class. There are fifty of us in that class so we don't get to recite everyday. I feel inferior to some of those upperclassmen taking history, but yesterday "prof." asked a senior several questions he couldn't answer. It must have been my lucky day, for he asked me about the very treaty that I had reviewed the night before. I have English the second hour. Yesterday we had quite a discussion about "Macbeth." We felt that Miss Becker had much more to tell us than we had been able to cover in class. Several of us lingered for a few minutes after the recitation to ask her to meet with us Saturday evening for some extra discussion. She consented, and we are quite thrilled at the prospect. I am glad to be at a small school where the teachers take such personal interest in their students.

Chapel was especially interesting yesterday for we had an outside speaker. It is always relaxing to go to chapel and replenish our spiritual reserves. We are required to attend, but I wouldn't dream of missing chapel, for chapel always sets the tone for the whole day. We also had a visiting quartet. We enjoyed them, but really they weren't a bit better than our own musical organizations. The Dean made one of his usual pungent announcents, something about a panel discussion to be held in chapel next week. Several of the students are going to have an opportunity to present their views on the core curriculum; those are the required subjects in the college courses.

I am gathering material for a term paper in history, so the next two hours I had free I spent in the library. It is a fine place to study —except—for the organ music which drifts right down through the floor from the chapel above into the library reading room! I am getting used to it, and now I can study right through, practice scales and all; but I will certainly be glad when we can move into the new library building.

Yesterday I had a laboratory period right after lunch. After lab,

I had to catch the bus into town to do a little shopping and to pick up some clothes at the dry cleaners. I caught the five-fifteen bus to the campus and had a few minutes to fresh up before dinner at six. At dinner my favorite meat, beef roast, was served; the rest of the meal was delicious too—string beans, mashed potatoes and gravy, salad, and fruit and cookies for dessert..

I dropped in at the inn yesterday and guess whom I met there! Larry, do you remember him? I knew he was at Bethel this year, but we don't have any classes together, so I hadn't met him since the retreat last summer. He is taking a pre-med course, and is working very hard. He says the most of his classes are prescribed, but he enjoys them so much that he doesn't mind. He has joined the Student Volunteers and hopes to be a doctor in India some day. The inn is the best place to meet friends and exchange experiences.

Thursday is club night, and last night I attended F.T.A. (the Future Teachers of America Club). Dave gave a talk on the construction of objective and essay tests, and he certainly knew a great deal about it. He must have studied almost as hard for that talk as I do for my class recitation. After club I had some studying to do in the reserve library down in the basement of the Administration Building I was so fascinated by the queer illustrations in the book I was using, I hardly noticed the time pass, until Elsie tapped me on the shoulder and said that it was almost closing time. We started for the dorm right then and got ready for bed. As so often happens most of us hall mates congregated in one of the rooms and talked over the days events. When we started talking about the past, Dorothy sent us into hysterics telling about the time she came to the campus as a little girl and got lost in a crowd of visitors. She sees everything in a humerous light. After finishing the present and the past, we began talking about the future. May announced her engagement before Christmas, and now she is always full of talk about house plans, color schemes, recipes, etc. We were just begging her to tell us about her Christmas dinner with her fiance's folks when the lights blinked and we knew it was time to scoot into bed. Elsie and I took time to read the message for the day in the Upper Room. The lights out and I ought to say we went right to sleep, but that wouldn't be true, neither would it be a typical ending to a typical day. We chatted for fifteen minutes, and then Elsie was so sleepy she answered with a Hmmmm—soon we were both sound asleep.

I hope to tell you more about Bethel when I see you during Easter vacation.—Your friend, Jane

Activities of The Student Christian Association

by Barbara Miller

THE Student Christian Association of Bethel College is founded on the principle of giving guidance to college students in the growth and development of their Christian thinking and living. With this in view, the organization's purpose is to lead students to faith in God through Jesus Christ; to lead them into service in the Christian church; to promote their growth in Christian faith and character, especially through Bible study and prayer; and, to influence them to devote themselves in united effort with all Christians, to making the will of God effective in human society.

Members of the S.C.A. are divided into smaller groups or commissions which meet bi-weekly. The Christian Life and Faith Commission studies and discusses various religious problems and questions suggested by the members, Ministers, missionaries, and professional men are invited to speak at their commission meetings. A round-table discussion follows the main topic.

Holiday parties and Sunday afternoon recreational periods for the children of the orphanage in Newton, the making of favors and cards for patient's trays at Bethel Deaconess Hospital and helping at the M.C.C. clothing center are some of the activities carried on by the Social Service Commission. Part of this work can be done during the regular commission meeting but students give of their free time to carry on much of the activity.

The Campus Life group investigates and attempts to solve various social problems or questions rising on the Bethel campus. Often members of the faculty or ministers are asked to present their viewpoints on an issue. Closely connected with this commission is the Recreation Commission. This group sponsors all-student recreational evenings, supervises the evening's entertainment at S.C.A. picnics, and helps with other student recreational functions. Members of the commission meet to learn new games and activities which they feel would be worth-while introducing to the students.

Two committees also function in the association. The publicity committee is responsible for submitting news articles to the school paper, posting bulletin board signs and publicizing special events. It is the duty of the program committee to plan and schedule the bi-weekly S.C.A. chapel. Commission and chapel periods alternate each Wednesday morning during the hour set aside for regular week-day chapel which is held the other four days. Inspirational service, all-musical programs, and guest speakers have helped make these S.C.A. chapel meetings a time of withdrawal from studies into quietness of communion with God.

Each October a week of special religious services, known as Christian Life Week, is sponsored by the S.C.A. and Student Volunteer groups. This year Cecil Hinshaw, a field-secretary for the Fellowship of Reconciliation, spoke during chapel period each day and held special meetings each evening. He was also available for private consultation and group discussions during the day.

An all-student relief drive is sponsored yearly. The proceeds are used for some projects which is voted upon by the group. Last year the money was sent to Mainz University in Germany. There, the most needy and undernourished students were given extra food. An exchange program of correspondence was also set up between the students of Bethel and Mainz. This year the Bethel students contributed $958.00 which will be sent to a teachers' college in Germany. Visual aid and other teaching supplies, books and magazines, and student scholarships will be made available to students there as a direct gift from Bethel students.

The S.C.A. opens student activities each September by sponsoring an evening of fellowship which culminates in an inspirational service around a crackling bonfire. That same week of registration finds new students being welcomed by upperclassmen. This is part of the "Big Brother" and "Big Sister" program which continues through the year.

Cabinet members who are elected by the association members, consist of executive officers and commission leaders. They meet weekly to discuss and evalute the various activities and plans of the association.

Each fall a cabinet all-night retreat and an all-membership evening retreat are held. Plans for the year are discussed and set into active movement. Each commission holds fall retreats where members may become better acquainted and have the opportunity of presenting their opinions as to the group's tentative projects. A spring cabinet retreat affords time for evaluating the accomplishments and failures of the past year and provides an orientation period for incoming commission and executive leaders.

The Bethel College Student Christian Association is a part of a cluster conference of near-by colleges and universities. This cluster conference, in turn, belongs to the Rocky Mountain Student Christian Movement. Each summer delegates from the various colleges meet in Estes Park, Colorado, for a week of study, meditation, and fellowship. From all over the world, these regional conferences combine into World Student Christian Federation. Thus, Bethel students join hands with their brothers in far-away places, striving to bring peace and friendship among the peoples of the globe.

Mission Interest of the Student Volunteers

by Alma Smith

WHO are the Student Volunteers and how did they originate? The National Student Volunteer Movement was organized in 1886. It began with a small group who were interested in mission service. The motto of this organization was "The Evangelization of the World in This Generation." It was begun upon the basis of certain convictions as to the universal Saviourhood and Lordship of Jesus Christ. These convictions have been maintained through the years. Some of the methods of work have changed due to new situations in the world which have brought about changes in the methods of mission work, but the fundamental convictions remain unaltered.

Bethel College organized an S.V. Band in 1909. It was begun with only nine members. These nine were foreign missionary candidates who signed pledge cards stating "It is my purpose, God permit, to become a foreign missionary." The group of volunteers has grown until today there are 64 students preparing for full or part time Christian service, either home or foreign.

Fellowship meetings are held each Thursday evening with special emphasis on foreign missions. Specific problems of missionaries are discussed. Often returned missionaries bring light on foreign mission work of the past, and also a challenge for future service. Occasionally, slides are shown which give a clearer concept of duties and needs of various fields.

Each Monday, Wednesday, and Friday after supper students gather in the prayer room. These meetings are led by students and prayer is offered for special requests presented to the group.

Upon request groups are sent to surrounding churches to share with them the wonderful salvation which Christ has given to all who accept Him. Groups go to the old folks' homes and hospitals at Goessel and Newton to sing and minister to those who are ill. Deputation groups go out over vacations to visit churches in Oklahoma, Colorado, Nebraska, and Western Kansas. The programs given on these deputation trips stress Christian service, especially foreign missions. Usually three groups are sent out each year. A great blessing is received through fellowship with fellow Christians.

Each fall and spring a retreat is held to withdraw students from the usual routine of daily work. They enjoy the beauty of nature and receive new strength and come back to the campus with a new zeal for service.

Leland Brubaker was the speaker at the annual Mission Rally this fall. The theme for the rally was "God needs young people to uncover the darkness beyond."

The main project for the past two years is purchasing a motion picture projector and generator for the India Mission field. Another project in which the Volunteers have served is week-day Bible school work.

During the Christmas season, the group brought Christmas dinner bundles for two needy families. These dinners were distributed on Christmas Eve.

Through these various channels the Bethel College S.V. Group seeks to promote the Spiritual welfare of its members by mutual fellowship and to assist in all ways possible in exemplifying and the spreading the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Twenty Members in Student Minister's Fellowship

by Harris Waltner

THE dearth of male students who were studying for the ministry passed over during the school year of 1945-46, and Bethel College found its-enrollment enlarged by several ministerial students. Some of the men were older students who found that they were facing vital issues as they contemplated entering their life-commitment to the ministry. They found themselves in need of time for discussing the problems which confronted them in their work. A large number of churches without pastors called for the service of young men, and the experiences in serving these churches was an index of the great work confronting future pastors.

Several of the interested men instigated a program which came to fruition during the second quarter of the 1945-46 school year. The Fellowship was inaugurated at a meeting of the student ministers. The following statement of purpose was formulated:

1. To meet for spiritual fellowship.
2. To study our problems in relation to theological questions, church work, and personal work.
3. To encourage us in practical Christian work.

With this purpose in mind the Student Minister's Fellowship was prayerfully launched, a group of thirteen students. The Fellowship met informally for their bi--monthly meetings.

This year the Fellowship has twenty members. The meetings are informal. At these regular meetings various discussions and topics relating to the Fellowship and to the work of the minister are shared. Frequently members of the Fellowship lead in the worship and discussion. At other times local ministers or members of the faculty share their experience of some related topics. Recent Fellowship meetings have witnessed discussions on problems on the small rural church, pastoral visitation, peace education in the church, the program of our conference, etc. Occasionally local ministers of denominations other than Mennonite are invited to present a picture of the work in their congregation and denomination.

Within a radius of 200 miles of Bethel, there are a number of churches who do not have regular ministers. This has given opportunity for the members of the Fellowship to serve in various churches. Among the churches that have been served regularly or occasionally are the following: Goessel, Hopefield, Greensberg, Fredonia, Elbing, West Zion and First Church of Christian (both in Moundridge), Meade, Canton, Walton, Johannestal, Tabor, Inman, Deer Creek (Okla.), Mennoville (Okla.), and the First Methodist Church of Walton, Kansas.

The Fellowship has in the past years sponsored a bi-annual Newsletter which is sent to all former members. This has been a means of keeping in contact with those who have gone on to school and those already in their charge. This reciprocal exchange of experiences has been most beneficial to all the young men.

Through this common sharing of experiences, through these periods of prayer, worship, and instruction, this group is commiting and preparing itself to meet the command of our Lord. "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." (Matt. 28:19, 20).

Peace Club Faces World of Strife

by Marvin Ewert

IN our world where force, and the threat of the use of force, have become so paramount in the relationships between men and their fellow-men and nations and other nations, it is imperative that we as Chrisitians, show the world that there is yet another "way." This "way" is conreived in the teachings of Jesus, and is guided by the application of the principle of love.

The activities of the Peace Club are dedicated to the establishment of a deeper understanding and appreciation of the power of peace and love. The group endeavors to give a definite peace witness to all those with whom they come in contact. The group meets regularly twice a month. At these meetings various problems which arise in giving a peace witness are discussed. Often outside speakers, including members of other races, are asked to help discuss these problems. The group is also active in distributing literature on questions arising in connection with peace. The group also cooperates in conducting peace institutes on the campus.

The work of the peace club is not limited to the campus. The group is interested in conducting services, dealing with the problems of peace, in surrounding churches. Either all-day institutes, or one-session services are arranged. In the past various churches have been served in this capacity. It is the hope and prayer of the group that through its witness many may be convinced, and those already convinced strengthend in the way of peace and love. Remember always the words of Jesus, "Blessed are the peacemakers for they shall be called the children of God." (Matt. 5, 9).

Beyond Our Own

ISRAEL—Revival of the Sanhedrin, supreme judicial body of the ancient Jewish State, was urged by Israeli Minister of Religion Judah L. Maimon at a meeting of rabbis in Tiberias, northern Israel.

Rabbi Maimon proposed that the revived Sanhedrin include 71 members—23 from Jerusalem and the rest from other parts of Israel. He said that the new Sanhedrin might be empowered to deal with proposed changes in Jewish law and also exercise other types of authority.—The Ecumenical Courier

NEW YORK—Protestant and Catholic churches throughout the country will join in observing Rural Life Sunday this year on May 14, it was announced here by Benson Y. Landis, secretary of the Committee on Town and Country.

Rural Life Sunday, the fifth Sunday after Easter, which has its roots in the Rogation Days, is a day set apart for emphasizing the meaning of Christianity for rural life.

Church services marking the day ask for God's blessing upon the seed, the fruits of the soil and the cultivators of the earth, and for the consideration of justice for agriculture and the spiritual values of rural life.

Rural Life Sunday was first observed in 1929, at the suggestion of the International Association of Agricultural Missions. Plans were worked out by the Home Missions Council and many other religious bodies.

A special order of service, prepared by Gaius Glenn Atkins, has been published by the Committee on Town and Country. Copies can be obtained from cooperating home missions boards or from the Committee, 297 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N.Y.

COLUMBUS, OHIO. A "Masterplan" designed to eliminate cutthroat competition among city churches and to gear their work into every phase of city life was blueprinted here by the National Convocation on the City Church.

One way in which the more than 400 delegates, from 32 denominations, at the Convocation expressed their determination to revitalize Protestant city life was by establishing a permanent national agency to deal with Protestant city church planning.

The new body, to be known as the Joint Commission on the Urban Church, will be sponsored jointly by the Home Missions Council of North America, the Federal Council of Churches, and the International Council of Religious Education.

ATLANTA, GEORGIA.—Per capita giving in the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. (Southern) in 1949 was $52.64—largest figure of any Protestant denomination having a membership of 250,000 or more.

Largest per capita giving of any denomination affiliated with the Stewardship Council, regardless of size, was $148.21, received by the Free Methodist Church. This represents a contribution of $2.85 per week per member. The Presbyterian total breaks down to a little more than $1 a week per member.

WALDENSIANS PRESS FOR FREEDOM

Catholic attempts to label Protestant missions in Italy as procommunist have been hotly denied by the Italian evangelical churches—Waldensian, Baptist and Methodist.

The controversy followed the stoning of conservative Protestant missionaries from Texas reported to have taken place near Rome during December, 1949.

The Protestant groups protested "throwing suspicion against the religious mission of Protestantism in Italy with totally unfounded accusations of political contaminations," and further scored the "transparent confessional and political interests" involved in the accusations.

The churches, representing some 60,000 Italian Protestants, also urged the Italian people "to see to it that the rights and duties of citizens as provided by the constitution of the Italian republic are respected."—The Ecumenical Courier

Church World Service in 1949 shipped material aid valued at over $8,000,000 to more than 50 war-stricken countries, according to Dr. Robbins W. Barstow, executive associate. He said that 15,000,000 pounds of wheat, milk, lard, and other farm products had been shipped abroad, as well as 5,000,000 pounds of clothing, shoes, bedding, and other items. Medicines, hospital equipment, and other special supplies accounted for an additional 4,000,000 pounds. In addition to these goods, nearly $3,000,000 in cash was appropriated or forwarded for many different projects such as repairing and re-equipping churches and church institutions, strengthening indigenous Christian leadership, and underwriting youth programs and religious ministries among refugees. Pointing out that emergency needs "are still far beyond resources," Dr. Barstow said the 1950 program envisages a basic need of more than $4,000,000 in cash and at least 36,000,000 pounds of supplies.—Watchman-Examiner

In World War II, 325,000 Americans were killed. In the same period 355,000 persons were killed in accidents in this country.—Watchman-Examiner misunderstood the article on "Evangelism—Then and Now." It was too clearly stated.

The Reader Says

With evangelistic meetings and revivals sweeping our country with the result of the salvation of thousands, certainly we as Christians ought to thank God for every soul that is brought to the knowledge and experience of the saving grace of our Lord and Saviour.

The time is short. Our Lord's coming is not far hence, and many are not yet saved.

Dear Editor:

Thanks for publishing in THE MENNONITE: "First Impressions of Basketball. As seen by a New Zealander." Those are also my impressions. The game as such is alright. But why in all decency must that "Indian pow-wow" exhibition take place. There surely is nothing Christian about it. I am surprised that Christian institutions tolerate it.

"Alles, was ihr tut mit Worten oder mit Werken, das tut alles in dem Namen des Herrn Jesu, und danket Gott und dem Vater durch ihn." (Kolosser 3:17.)

Would there by any possibility to pray before, during, or after such a game, "giving thanks to God"? And that "In the name of the Lord Jesus." What will the Lord Jesus think of such an exhibition?

Looking Toward Freeman

JOHN HENRY JOWETT once asked the question, "Was there anything lacking in the suffering of Christ?" And his answer was, "Only one thing was lacking—the story needs a teller; the gospel needs a herald, and the gospel of a broken heart demands the ministry of bleeding hearts."

For this WE are accountable. We are accountable as individuals, as churches and as a Conference. The Conference sessions at Freeman will be a success or a failure in the measure in which it inspires every delegate and visitor to recognize this responsibility not only for himself, but also to carry it home to his church or constituency. The Apostle Paul, writing to the Corinthians, says, "I have a stewardship entrusted unto me." We believe that the General Conference of the Mennonite Church has a stewardship entrusted to it which is peculiarly its own. Unless we accomplish this stewardship, it will remain undone.

Harvey Reeves Calkins once framed an unforgettable truth when he coined the phrase, "To have is to owe." Surely, the Lord has richly blessed us, and sometimes we need to face the question which Paul asked of the Corinthians, "What hast thou that thou didst not receive?" Having received so abundantly, surely we owe much, very much, to the causes of the Kingdom of God. May the next session of the General Conference inspire us, enlighten us, and motivate us to be faithful to the utmost in carrying out our stewardship toward the Gospel of God's redeeming love to all races and peoples.

IT IS A TRAGIC FACT THAT most people got their first glimpse of television, one of God's most recent secrets unveiled to man, through the window of beer joints if they happen to have the conscience that prohibited them from going in. Programs appropriate to such a setting, make up the substantial portion of presently scheduled television programs—wrestling, boxing, and wild-west movies televised. Now television is coming, more and more, into the home after it has geared itself to the above audiences. The immediate results, irrespective of the content of the programs, is reported for example in this week's Seminary news found on page 274. There is a sudden and decided drop in the grades of the boys and girls at school. Their is a decided drop in the circulation of the books at the public libraries. Add to this, the fact that the nature of the programs is at a consistently low level, and the sum total of the factors add up to something somewhat terrifying. We do not feel that a ban on television sets in Christian Homes is the answer to the problem. Nor do we feel that we have to resign ourselves to helplessness in the face of the problem. As in so many other modern conveniences we as Christians must make television a servant rather than a master. This has an implication for the type of programs we select. If we happen to be among the few responsible for planning the programs our responsibility and opportunity is multiplied by the number of people we serve. When we are on the receiving-end we have a responsibility to react positively and negatively to the type of programs being televised. We would suggest a simple technique which might well apply to the radio as well—keep several penny postals on the radio or television set and let the producers and stations know when you specially appreciated a certain program and also when you found a particular program distastefully unchristian. Finally, in view of the tremendous opportunity of communication through television, we are convinced that God is now calling qualified men and women to the special ministry of preparing for or performing on television. Radio has given one "voice of the Lord" millions of outlets. Who can predict what the "word made flesh" with the advantage of seeing the redeemed personality back of the voice can mean in bringing Christ to the masses?

MANY CHURCHES OF OUR CONFERENCE ARE CONTRACTING A DISEASE. It is the disease of painless giving. Quite consistently we read reports of churches sponsoring sales for missions, sales for this, and sales for that. We have heard that churches of other denominations even get to the point of paying their minister with the proceeds of church suppers. We read recently of one of our churches —not an unusual case—that had a mission sale at the church which netted a sum ranging in the hundreds of dollars. They also had an offering, and—you guessed it —it didn't amount to a fourth of the proceeds of the sale. But, some may ask didn't the hundreds of dollars go to missions? Of course it did. But is it a gain for the Kingdom of God? Few, if any of our churches tithe their aggregate income. They don't reach the biblical minimum. If in that situation part of the gifts were given for value received, does that represent the kind of sacrificial giving that Jesus taught. If we really mean to follow Christ the second mile, then it would seem that the money spent to purchase materials for such sales should be spent for clothing or materials directly usuable in Relief or on the mission field, the time we use to sew for others of our own group be used for preparing clothes or other needy items for missions and relief, and the money that we use to buy back these items for ourselves be contributed toward the shipment, distribution, and support of the people who give the Christian witness with the gift. But we hear some say, "Just think of the fellowship that is engendered in such a project; look what it means to a group of men, women, or youth, to work on such a project. Furthermore, you can get some people to participate who otherwise would have no interest." As for the fellowship, we must say that the church is interested not in just any kind of fellowship. Fellowship is valuable to the church only when it is built around the kind of unselfish living we have seen in Jesus. Furthermore it would seem that there should be much more meaningful ways to introduce people to the Church and her work than such a method that puts two strikes against the Church before she has even shown her true mission.

THE PRE-CONFERENCE Directory of the General Conference officers, the district conference officers, the churches, membership, and pastors is incorporated in this issue of THE MENNONITE as a detachable supplement. Delegates to the coming General Conference at Freeman, as well as pastors, may acquaint themselves with the extent and nature of the Conference organization by the use of this supplement. Churches without pastors, and desiring to know what pastors may be available will find the list of ministers without a charge, of some help. Ministers who may be making application for a clergy certificate prior to traveling to conference can quote this as the official directory that gives their status as a minister. A separately published directory will come out after Conference incorporating the new list of officers as the result of the elections at Freeman and at the various district conferences this spring and summer.

WHENEVER we have reached the point of name-calling in discussions we are saying the argument is closed, the last word has been spoken (by ourselves of course) because our thinking has stopped and there really is nothing creative left to be said. This is happening among individuals, nations, and even among churches and church members. It happens because we set our will and word over against the will and word of God as clearly set forth by the Living and Written Word.

My D. P. School -- A Little Children's U. N.

by Agnetha Duerksen

SORRY . . .", says the inspector, shaking his head, "but the law says no Displaced Person will get permission to emigrate to the U.S. without some ability to read and write." Simun Colich sits for a minute, and then, determined to overcome this obstacle, turns and asks, "Wo ist Schule?" ("Where is the school?")

Simun is one of our Yugslovian illiterates in the D.P. camp at Grohn. He is like so many others who at 35, 50, or 60 can neither read nor write. But Simun is determined. We, however, have no classroom. Already there are six classes and only four rooms. So class is set up in the tank room. Benches are secured, a teacher has volunteered, and a few more illiterates join Simun, and the class is in progress.

After Eleven Weeks

After five weeks of hard work and perspiring, Simun learned the alphabet and could write "Simun Colich" in a large scrawl. "Es ist so schwer," ("It is so difficult") he would say when I asked him how he was getting on. Day after day he plodded along studying his English primer in the tank room. Finally, after eleven weeks, he passed the test! But the next day Simun was back, intensely occupied in learning more English from his book.

Not all were as faithful as Simun. But many were like him—and realized this was their only chance of ever emigrating. The only time they missed school was on church holidays. One day old Igor said, "Nicht kommen Montag. Ich beten." ("I will not come Monday. I pray.") Not all were as fortunate to pass their tests as Simun. There was Anna, a Polish lady, who was without friend, without a single relative. She was completely alone. She had been in school for several months. Then she failed. All hope seemed to crumble. For days she went without eating and cried constantly. "God has not heard my prayer," she said. I tried to help and comfort her. Now while she is again waiting for her answer, she continues to pray and study her Polish primer.

It is not always easy to help these people see the importance of learning English. Often it takes a lot of encouragement. Somehow, they think it will take care of itself after they get to America. Actually, it is only a very small per cent of our camp population that makes use of the opportunities offered in a D.P. school.

Seven Nationalities in One Classroom

Our school is different from others. For one thing, we have seven nationalities represented in our classrooms. In a D.P. school you may have the entire Katchof family — dad, mother, Nina, Rita, Peter, and little five-year-old Sergi. One day I found ten year old Demitri instructing his parents during the lunch hour while the classroom and blackboard were free. Demitri had been attending English classes only a few days.

Our curriculum differs from regular schools. For one, the English must be simplified. In the adult classes we use a Linguaphone with good results. It is similar to a record player. It plays what is in the book, and the pupils read along with it, first silently, listening, then aloud alone. Some of the people carry on a conversation after several weeks of intensive coaching. For our children's classes we did not have many materials, but with the help of an artist and some ingenuity, we made flash cards, wrote stories, mimeographed lessons for the children.

I am afraid Thorndike would not always have approved of our word list as we use it in our reading lessons. In our work with the children our emphasis is always good pronunciation and the meaning of the word. We were fortunate in securing an emigrant teacher who is able to translate the English into the native tongue of the different nationalities.

After Easter - Relaxation or Contemplation?

by Elbert Koontz

THERE is always the tendency for people to lapse into the usual after some great experience. This tendency is also true in the life of every Christian. There is a time in the life of each Christian which he recalls as a great religious experience. Following such times there has also been the tendency to let down and go about the usual tasks in the usual way.

This is also true in the life of the church and of the church year. There are certain seasons and occasions in which the work of the church is exalted and a feeling of great power comes to the lives of the members of the church. One such season we have just passed—the Easter season. It is an easy thing for us now to feel that this important time is over again and we can now settle down to the tasks of reality as they are presented to us. Such were the feelings of the disciples after the strenuous week before the crucifixion of Jesus. They were so concerned about the things that were taking place that they did not get the full meaning of the events as they transpired. All they could realize was that their friend and leader was being mistreated and was eventually put to death in a cruel and heartless manner.

Now they could relax their tensions and get back to the reality of things as they actually were. This had been a great experience for them and also a great disillusionment, so they thought. This is what prompted Peter to say, "I go a-fishing." (John 21:3). The others were also anxious to relax and go back to the actual things of the world, so they too said to Peter, "We also go with thee." The two disciples as they made their way to Emmaus (Luke 24:13ff.) were also ready to relax.

Perhaps we have been too much concerned about the activities that are to be carried on in the work of the church and our individual lives. We feel that if we are not constantly seeking to have great things done and much activity, we are not accomplishing much. This often applies to church activity as well as other fields. We need to have times of meditation and contemplation—a time to take inventory of the things that have taken place. Following the times of great activity and excitement there is an important place for contemplation and getting back to the actual. We see the values of this in the lives of the disciples relating to the two incidents referred to above.

In the reference to Peter and the other disciples going fishing (John 21:3,ff), we see the disciples dealing with the problem of providing for their daily bread. They were working at their original occupation, undoubtedly pondering the things that had happened to their Leader. As they came to the shore from their fruitless fishing trip, to their surprise Jesus was there. Then it was that they knew Jesus could be with them and was with them in their daily walk and occupation. His presence was with them and they knew it not. So it is with us, we may not realize the presence of Jesus with us in our daily walk; but to our amazement we discover Him standing on the shore when we look for Him. And we discover Him in reality when we ponder the things that have happened for us.

As the disciples made their way to Emmaus (Luke 24:13ff) they too had that "let-down" feeling. The scripture tells us that "They talked together of all these things which had happened." They were reviewing the things that they could not forget and were fresh in their minds. They also "Communed together and reasoned." Throughout the busy week preceding they seemingly did not have time to commune and reason. They were too busy with activity. After the activity was over then they could commune together and reason together. As they did this they too discovered that Jesus was in their midst. Because of this experience they caught the true meaning of the things that they had lived through, and now it took on meaning for them and they saw the new life that Jesus actually brought to them.

It takes times of reflecting and silence for us to come to understand the deeper things of God for us. As we have passed through the Easter season perhaps we too have been so busy with the activities that we have not had time to "Commune and reason" together about the things which it means to us. In this period following Easter, let us not relax and become complacent about the things that have happened. Let us rather take time to reflect upon them. As we do this we too will discover that Jesus is with us and is ever present, willing, and ready to reveal to us new truth and inspire us to greater fields of usefulness for Him.

SUMMER BIBLE SCHOOL TEACHERS TAKE NOTE

The American Bible Society has some excellent materials to offer daily vacation Bible schools. First, there is the Junior Bible Society Record, the new quarterly magazine planned for boys and girls. Then there is the world-map certificate that has been designed to be educational as well as emphasize the lesson of stewardship. Any daily vacation Bible school which contributes to the world wide work of the American Bible Society will be entitled to receive a certificate for each child in the school. Other materials include the alphabet and a scripture verse in braille and a booklet quoting John 3:16 in twenty-three different languages. If you are interested in samples of this material, write Miss Rae Howard Serio, Field Secretary, American Bible Society, 45 Astor Place, New York 3, New York.

From the Mission Front

From North China -- First News in Five Years

by William C. Voth

SINCE shortly after the close of the Japanese war no news came from the General Conference Field in the Tamingfu area of Southern Hopei. The Communists took control of that area when the Japanese left. The 500-student mission high school closed after one year of trying experiences. We had a 90-bed mission hospital, which also closed after all medicines and equipment had been "borrowed." The Christians could not use mission property because they could not pay the required taxes. The property was then used for public purposes. Economic conditions have been deplorable and the crops were poor last year. As far as we know about six of the small country churches discontinued services, some kept up worship services in the homes.

Now we just had word that the government had opened a hospital in the mission hospital buildings. Our Chinese Christian doctor, after several years work elsewhere went back home and is now working in that hospital. Almost the whole staff of nurses and helpers are of our church members. Thirty of the congregations continue to function. The Bible School at Kaifeng Honan also continued this year. Fifteen Bible school students have divided into four teams to go throughout the field to fen hsing Chiao Hui, that is to revive the Church. We praise the Lord for His Spirit's work!

One sad note comes in the news that recently one of our best evangelists died. This is indeed a heavy loss to the church. He was a seminary graduate, a good man of great faith and courage who carried on dauntless through many difficulties and hardships. May the Lord raise up another man in his stead, of faith and full of the Spirit.

From a few of the churches around Kaifeng comes the news that a total of 70 were baptized during the past year. But we do not have reports from the churches further north.

Our Ch'engtu work has fared better than anticipated. In the spring and summer of 1948 our missionaries who left North China went to Ch'engtu Szechuen. When in search of a dwelling and while looking for a new field of work, the Lord directed it so that the house we could rent was in the northwest part of the city. Then we suddenly became aware that we were placed in the midst of a large area with a population of about 150,000 which was without any preaching outposts. We began services in our home with a few Chinese friends and neighbors. After a few services the room became too small. We looked for a place for a chapel but the only place we could find was a tea-shop, so we made a deal; and then tea was served in the mornings and until three P.M. After that and in the evenings we used it for evangelistic services. Some of the people said: "This is the Gospel for the common man, and they bring it right to our tea-shop." Now we have three chapels in Ch'engtu with continuous good attendance. Four of our missionaries are there to continue the work.

The first baptismal service took place in Ch'engtu last June, when the local church was organized. The last 18 were baptized on Christmas day just the day when the turnover (to Communists) took place in that city. In spite of the tension outwardly that day, the morning service and the joyful afternoon Christmas program were well attended. How wonderful the Lord had led and blessed! For all this we praise His Holy Name!

(Bro. Voth wrote this by request for publication for the Lutheran Chinese News—Howard G. Nyce, Exec. Sec'y.)

Life has more meaning when shared with another, but one must possess something worth sharing to give life meaning to ourselves and others. The greatest thing in the world, Christian faith, must be shared to keep it. Before you can give away your faith, you've got to have it. A wise colored man said, "You can't give away what you haven't got, any mo' than you can come back from where you ain't never been."—D. Carl Yoder.

Western District
S. S. CONVENTION — APRIL 23

W. E. Kirschke

MAKING the Sunday School Vital" has been selected as the theme for the annual Western District Sunday School Convention to be held at the Buhler Church, Buhler, Kansas, April 23, 1950 with sessions at 2:30 and 7:30.

Other features of the program are a report by the field worker of the Western District Conference, W. F. Unruh, and music by the Ladies Sextet of Pretty Prairie and the Young Men's Chorus of Alexanderwohl.

Waldo Harder, principal of Berean Academy, Elbing, is president of the Convention, and Doris Andres, Newton, is secretary.

D. P.'s Rechristened Delayed Pilgrims

AKRON, PA.—A number of non-Mennonite D.P. families have been taken by Mennonite sponsors in the U. S., particularly since the number of Mennonite refugees able to enter the U. S. has been small. Recently the number of these non-Mennonite immigrants has been larger, giving opportunity for more sponsors to accept families. Sponsors must provide housing and employment for the D.P.'s.

C. Warren Long, pastor of the Willow Springs Congregation at Tiskilwa, Ill., in which several non-Mennonite D.P. families were taken, wrote to his members, "(The D.P.'s) are coming to us seeking freedom and an opportunity to make a new home and live in peace. This is our opportunity to minister to a needy people 'In the Name of Christ.' These people are Displaced Persons. May we regard them as Delayed Pilgrims. We are expecting four more families to come to us some time during the month of April. Let us rally with our church families who are taking them. Let us help with our prayers, counsel, and material aid."

Individuals or congregations desiring to sponsor a D.P. family should write concerning their interest to the Mennonite Aid Section, M.C.C., Akron, Pennsylvania.

Recent word states that Canada has liberalized its attitude toward admitting Displaced Persons having had German citizenship. Details on this are not yet clarified, particularly the manner in which this may affect Mennonite immigration to Canada.

PROGRESS AT KINGS VIEW HOMES

Latest reports indicate that good progress is being made in the construction work on Kings View Homes, the M.C.C. mental hospital at Reedley, California. Work on sewage disposal, foundation, rough plumbing, and floors is completed, and side walls are now being erected. The building, as approved by the State Mental Hygiene Department and the State Fire Marshall, is to be a one-story structure, made of pre-cast concrete.

There is immediate need for additional volunteers to assist in con-

Church of Mennonite Evangelical Christians

ASUNCION, PARAGUAY
March 28, 1950

LAST Sunday was of special importance to our Mennonites here in Asuncion. On March 26, the Mennonite church in Asuncion was born. We named it Gemeinde evangelisch - mennonitischer Christen in Asuncion.

We have had several meetings of church members belonging to churches of different Mennonite groups and from different places. At one meeting a committee was chosen for the purpose of working out a constitution. At another meeting this constitution was temporarily accepted, after a few minor changes had been made. A time limit was set before which all those who wanted to join the church could present their church letters or baptism certificates.

On Sunday morning, March 26, the people gathered at our home. There were 22 persons that could take part in signing the document and others helped to enjoy the hour. After song and Scripture reading and prayer, I brought a short sermon. Then followed a period of free testimonies repentance, faith, and experiences with the Lord, designed to learn to know each other better. After the signing of the document we elected a church representative. The church constitution really calls for a board of three, but since the group felt that in a short time the number of the group would increase considerably, they wanted to wait until a future date to choose the church board. After the singing of a hymn the newly organized church asked the eight baptismal candidates to give their testimonies. Five of these had attended a five months prepartory class and three others were grown persons with whom I had private consultations for several weeks. All professed to have a living faith in our crucified and risen Lord. It was a joy to listen to them. The congregation voted to accept them and asked me to baptize them next Sunday.

In the afternoon we had our regular service also thanking God for people who were willing to "stand in the gap." (Ezekiel 22:30). In the evening at the M.C.C. center young and old gathered around the piano for a period of hymn singing. The day was of special blessing to those who had attended in the morning. And now we pray that the Lord, whom we trust to be our foundation, will also be our architect and contractor in the building of His Church in the lives of our people here in Asuncion. We ask for your intercessory prayer in behalf of the work here.

The Lord has blessed us in so many ways here in Paraguay, that it will be hard to leave. At one of the meetings the people almost begged that we should stay. It is hard to say no, but we feel that the work requires full preparation and that we need to get it now. We are leaving Asuncion fully aware of the fact that the Lord might lead us back again.

[NOTE—It is indeed gratifying to note how harmoniously the Mennonite constituency has been worshiping together for several years in Asuncion, Paraguay. This group is made up of families and individuals from the Mennonite Brethren, Evangelical Mennonite Brethren, and General Conference. Since neither group was strong enough to form and carry on a separate organization, they have followed the Master's prayer in John 7 and formed a united Mennonite congregation. The Board of Home Missions provided for the Minister for the past year and a half. Plans are under way whereby the Mennonite Central Committee, which represents all groups, is to assist the local Congregation in finding an Elder who will carry on in this cooperative effort for the glory of Christ.—A. J. Neuenschwander, for Home Missions.]

To Clarify . . .

SOME SAY: Why are the preschool teachers' manuals still not ready?

The answer: This portion of the course has not been completed due to the illness of the writer. It seemed ethical and best to the publishers that the writer who envisioned and began the course of three years for the preschool ages, should be the one to complete this portion of the series.

SOME SAY: Is it possible to use the three preschool pupils' materials and teaching pictures without the teachers' manuals?

The Answer: A brief guide has been prepared to aid the teachers in the use of these three preschool pupils' books and teaching pictures. These courses have been used successfully since they were released for sale.

SOME SAY: What mission work of our own denomination is included in this Bible study series?

The answer: There is a unit on China mission work in Grade III: a unit of mission work in India in Grade IV; on mission work in Africa in Grade V; on the work in Colombia, South America, in Grade VI; and a unit on work with the American Indian in Grade VIII. Grade VII has a unit on "Followers of Jesus in Church History and in the Mennonite Church."

SOME SAY: Since this series includes denominational mission materials, can it be used for community inter-denominational schools?

The answer: Yes. The mission-inserts in the pupils' books are so placed in the center of the workbooks that they can be lifted out by unfastening the staples and thus freeing the books of any denominational emphasis. The mission portions in the teachers' manual cannot be removed but can simply be left untaught.

SEMINARY—CONCERNING HEBREWS AND TELEVISION

HERE in Chicago, it is never possible to have a great Christian climax without being reminded of the Hebrew children who have another pattern. During the Easter season the Jews of Chicago are now participating in their annual celebration of passover. This dramatic service reminds the Hebrew children of how wonderfully God delivered them from the bondage of the Egyptians. Much of the celebration of the Passover is taken place directly in the homes of the Jewish people with the bloodless shankbone on the Passover table as a mere shadow and symbol of Jesus Christ, the Pascal Lamb of God who alone can atone for sin and redeem our souls.

All around us at the Seminary another very modern gadget is coming in with its revolutionary impact upon living. In this case it is the gadget known as television. In this immediate neighborhood there are many stores which now feature television with Chicago having a number of stations. Hundreds and thousands of sets are being purchased and already the effect upon the grades of children in school and the circulation of library books has been so marked that the school officials have been calling conferences to see what can be done about lessening the time which the children are giving to television. Let us pray that this modern invention can be used for the glory of God.

At the First Church of Chicago of which Aaron Epp of Henderson, Nebraska. is the newly installed pastor, Paul Boschman has recently started to serve as choir director. Mr. and Mrs. Levi Koehn are working in the Sunday School, and Katherine Linscheid has joined their choir.

BLUFFTON HOLDS MISSIONARY CONFERENCE

THE Missionary Conference, held on the Bluffton campus April 14-16. was financed by income from the Memorial Fund. This is a fund created through gifts given in honor of a loved one, usually in memory of someone who had passed on. The creation of the fund was sponsored by the Women's Advisory Council of the college. Conference leaders were J. N. Smucker, Bluffton; S. F. and Mrs. Pannabecker; the Harold Ratzlaffs and John Thiessen, missionaries from India home on furlough; and J. D. Graber, (Old) Mennonite missionary now living in Goshen. The Conference was open to college students, high school pupils, and people in the community interested in missions.

The spring meeting of the Board of Trustees was held in the Musselman Library Friday, April 14. The Board meets twice each year.

The Art Guild String Quartet will present a concert on the Bluffton College Concert Series Friday evening, April 21.

CLAUSEN TO ADDRESS BETHEL RECEPTION

Bernard C. Clausen, pastor of the Euclid Avenue Baptist Church, Cleveland, Ohio, will speak at a Bethel College Booster Reception and Program, April 28, given for friends who have made or will make gifts to Bethel College between May 1, 1949, and April 28, 1950.

The Booster Reception begins at 7 P.M. with a light lunch. The Bethel College A Cappella Choir and the Junior Choir School of Bethel College Church will provide special music for the program which will begin at 8:30.

MENNONITE ARTISTS PERFORM AT FREEMAN

GEORGE DICK, pastor at Bloomfield, Montana visited on the campus on Monday. While here he had charge of a chapel service; he had charge of the Bible Week Services here four years ago and is always a welcome guest speaker.

G. S. Warkentin, pastor of the Silver Lake M. B. Church was a chapel speaker last week. He spoke on the subject "Going the Second Mile."

"Icebound," a Pulitzer Prize play in three acts by Owen Davis will be presented by an all college cast the last week in April.

At the meeting of the Inter-School Council of the General Conference President E. J. Miller was elected to serve as secretary of the group for the coming year.

As a final number of the Community Concert Series, Rupert Hohmann, violinist, and Walter Jost, pianist, both from Kansas, presented a concert on March 31. The program presented by these two Mennonite artists was excellent. Of personal interest to the audience was the fact that Mr. Hohmann's parents were both members of the Freeman faculty at one time.

Two teams of College Debators participated in the Upper-Midwest Junior College Debate Tournament held on the campus of the University of Minnesota. Both teams reached the semi-finals. One of the teams was ranked the most outstanding debate team in the Junior College division of this tournament.

THE year 1949 is in the past. It has been a good year for the Mennonite Youth Society. God has blessed the work and it has grown. Problems there have been countless, but always has there been a Higher Hand to solve and to guide. Prayers have been answered above expectation. Yes, we as staff can only cry out with the Psalmist, "I will praise thee, O Lord, with my whole heart, I will show forth all thy marvellous works." (Psalm 9:1)

Retreats

One hundred twenty-seven registered at our Young People's retreat at Rosthern. We have had more in previous years, but this year a number of our people went to the Canadian Conference in B. C. and consequently we had less at the retreat. However in spite of this God's spirit was working. The call to missions was so clearly put before us that when an appeal for Daily Vacation Bible School workers came, the response was greater than expected. Not only were many willing to go and teach, but cars were also waiting to take the workers to their destinations.

We appreciated the services rendered by the retreat staff. Some of the workers were: P. P. Tschetter (Grace Bible Institute), Henry Wall (Canadian Mennonite Bible College), Mrs. W. C. Voth (China mission), John Thomas (Native of India), Kenneth Bauman (president of Y.P.U.) and others.

Our Children's retreat followed the Young People's tered. We had efficient and consecrated workers who made the way of salvation clear to the children. The "Grace Clarion-aires", a group of six young men from the Grace Bible Institute helped us a lot in this work and in the teaching of D.V.B.S.

After the Children's retreat at Rosthern, a few workers and the children from the Children's Home went to Pike Lake where another children's retreat was held. Forty children gathered here to hear the Lord's Word. Great blessings were reported.

Daily Vacation Bible School

Fifty-eight workers were out in this branch of mission work. They served 45 schools. Many encouraging reports have come in from the workers.

It is the aim of the Youth Society to send workers first of all to the needier fields, as there are some places where children never get to a Sunday School.

Our D.V.B.S. work is 12 years old. In 1937 one worker went out to serve one school. Since then the work has grown steadily.

Voluntary Service

1949 was the third summer we had Voluntary Service workers on the Youth Farm. Three girls from the States and two from Alberta made up the unit. As in previous years the girls did good work. They helped in the Invalid Home and two of them also went to teach D.V.B.S.

Only one Saskatchewan worker was sent across the border this year. He was John E. Klassen from Laird, Sask. who went to Montana for eight weeks.

We believe that the Volunteer work, especially the exchange of workers is a most wonderful opportunity to draw the young people of the States and Canada closer together and make them realize more fully that they are all working toward the same goal.

Radio Broadcast

"Wings of the Morning" is heard every Sunday from 7:30-8:00 a.m. over CKBI, Prince Albert, Saskatchewan. The broadcast is sponsored by the Christian Endeavor Societies of Saskatchewan and so far the support has been most encouraging.

The broadcast gives our Mennonite young people an opportunity to witness and to make use of their talents. The aim of those in charge is to get as many C. E.'s to participate as possible.

Young People's Messenger

This is the first journal of its kind of the youth of the Canadian Conference. It is a comparatively new paper. Great blessings are expected once it is well established.

Mayfair Mission

We, as young people were happy to be of assistance in getting this mission started in Saskatoon in 1949. This work has encouraged us in our prayer life because we have seen how wonderfully God answers His children's pleas.

The church, which was moved to Saskatoon from Langham, about 30 miles from the city, is now the property of the Home Mission Board and Rev. J. J. Thiessen is in charge. During the summer months we expect that various Christian Endeavors will come to bring programs in the church.

Invalid Home

At present we have 45 patients in our Invalid Home, however there is accommodation for 50. The patients are of different nationalities and represent different denominations.

Services are held every Sunday morning. A minister, or a student from the Junior College or Bible School serves and very often special numbers are brought. Three times a week evening devotions are held with the patients. Different rooms are assigned to different members of the staff so that each room is served. Once a week the staff sings in the halls for the patients. In this way we try to build up the spiritual life of staff and patients alike.

Our monthly charge for board and room from the patients is $37.50, or $40.00 for single rooms.

We have 24 old age or blind pensioners. Some of the other patients pay for themselves or are supported by their relatives or by their home churches. The Canadian Conference "Armenkasse" helps support a few also.

The Invalid Home has a regular staff of 24 (ten girls and one man for patients, six girls for the kitchen, two for laundry, one for cleaning, two for mending, one secretary and one janitor).

The Lord has helped us financially most wonderfully this year. Many donations have come in. We have been able to repair some rooms, complete the much needed bathrooms and give the Home another coat of paint on the outside.

The payments of the patients cover food expenses and wages. However repair jobs and other extra expenses have to be covered by the donations that come in. We thank God for the support of many friends.

Children's Home

There are seven children in the Children's Home. Two of the children are supported by the Social Welfare. We have three refugee children who are not supported by anyone, but the donations have come in most wonderfully, so we cannot but help thank all those who remember this Home and above all our Heavenly Father who cares for His children.

Since the beginning of the new year Miss Koop, who worked in our Children's Home has left us to help her parents, who are not very well anymore. We are happy to announce however, that we have a couple for the Home now. May the Lord bless them in this work.

Farm

We farm four quarters of land at Rosthern and two quarters at Hepburn. The land at Hepburn has been given to us for use by a dear brother.

The main work that has been done this year is the enlarging of our "tabernacle" (machine shed) and the building of the $12,000 pasteurization plant. Some of the buildings have been repainted.

We have a large debt on the farm at present but we are placing our trust in Him, who helped us with the Invalid Home debt and who never fails. Let us therefore give thanks unto the Lord; for he is good: for his mercy endureth forever.

Comments by the Editor--

"The Unity of Reconciliation"

THE Psalmist says, "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" If we are sober about becoming reconciled, we may also be serious about knowing what unity is.

One of the great thrills in youth work has been to observe a group of youth leaders at Council meeting. Coming from every district of the Conference, from the East and the West and from the North and the South—California and Pennsylvania and Saskatchewan and Ontario—these youth leaders meet for three or four days. They discuss their problem among themselves. They become acquainted with one another. And there grows out of the experience a sense of unity. It must be remembered, these youth leaders come from many different backgrounds and experiences. However, it is possible for them to know what unity in spirit, unity in purpose, and unity in the cause of Christ is.

We hear these days a great deal concerning our differences. We like to think we are different from others, we want to retain our individuality. And, in many ways, we are different. We are so because we are individuals and because we have our own experiences in life, we follow our own paths. Nevertheless, our many differences should not discourage our unity! We need to be reconciled to one another as to God even though we be different. And, Y.P.U. Council meetings prove that it is possible! It is possible to maintain our individuality and do so in unity of spirit recognizing our common Lord.

Ours is a ministry of reconciliation in these days. Men know enough of strife and deep felt differences. The great message they need to know is a message which reconciles them to God and to their fellow men. The Gospel is that unifying force.—E. L.

For a number of generations we have been attempting to hold onto Christian practices without possessing Christian beliefs. Christian behavior which is not supported by Christian faith is a wasting asset.—Arnold Toynbee

David Livingstone of Africa

VI Missionary Explorer [A Continuation]

[The story thus far: As a child, David Livingstone knew poverty. At the age of ten he began to work in a cotton factory. He was self-educated mainly. As a young man he answered the call to become a missionary and went out under the London Missionary Society to South Africa. There he met and married Robert Moffatt's daughter and went deep into Africa opening new fields. He met a great deal of opposition mainly from whites interested in the slave trade. He sought routes to the sea, both the Atlantic and Indian ocean outlets. He returned to England, famous, and went back to eastern Africa under a British government expedition. He is now seeking to establish English colonies and find trade routes to civilize the eastern area of Africa.]

THE slaves had been captured by a tribe called the Ajawa. Livingstone and Bishop Mackenzie visited the chief of this tribe to induce him to give up the slave trade. During the talk the missionaries were fired upon by some of the Ajawa, and in self-defence they fired back. For a few minutes there was a hot fight; but fortunately no one was injured on either side. Bishop Mackenzie later had other conflicts with natives who were taking slaves near the mission. Further difficulties arose from the fact none of the white missionaries knew the native language, and this was their first experience of living in Africa. However, the mission was carried on successfully for a year or more.

When Livingstone had asked for the new boat, the Pioneer he had also written to his friend, James Young, asking him to get a boat to be paid for with money Livingstone had received for writing his first book. He hoped that it could be bought for two thousand pounds, but it cost six thousand—almost all the money Livingstone had. He thought that if such a boat could be taken to Lake Nyasa it would hinder the slave trade and promote lawful commerce.

The Mission Has New Arrivals

Toward the close of 1862, while Livingstone was visiting the mission, word came that a British ship would soon arrive with additional workers for the mission, and the new boat. He hoped that his wife would also be on the ship. He, therefore, made arrangments to meet the bishop at the mouth of the River Ruo a tributary of the Shire, in January, 1863, and went down the Zambezi to meet the British ship.

The river was low and the Pioneer ran aground several times. They were delayed several weeks, and when they reached the mouth of the Zambezi the British ship was not in sight. They waited several weeks longer, not knowing what might have happened to the ship, but on the last day of January, 1863, the ship came in sight. They learned that it had been there earlier, but had left because of bad weather. Signals were passed between the Pioneer and the ship, telling that on board the ship were several missionaries, the new boat and Livingstone's wife. This exchange of signals Dr. Livingstone described as "the most interesting conversation I have engaged in for many a day."

Tragedy Meets the Mission

Among the new workers for the Universities Mission were two women, a sister of Bishop Mackenzie and Mrs. Burrup, wife of one of the men who had come nearly two years earlier. These women were naturally anxious to go at once to the mission, and Livingstone was concerned because the date was long past for the meeting with Bishop Mackenzie. So the parts of the new boat, called the Lady Nyasa, were put aboard the Pioneer and on February 10 they steamed off to meet Bishop Mackenzie. But the Pioneer was so heavily laden that she could not get over the sand bars in the river so they returned to Shupanga near the mouth of the Zambezi, intending to put the Lady Nyasa together and tow her up the river.

This caused further delay; and finally the captain of the British ship went up the river in the ship's boat with the two women and the other new missionaries to meet Bishop Mackenzie. But in three weeks the party returned with the news that both Bishop Mackenzie and Mr. Burrup had died of fever. The sorrowing Miss Mackenzie and Mrs. Burrup decided to return to England. The party boarded the Pioneer once more and made the sad voyage to the ship. But the ship had left the coast because of bad weather, and there was a further delay before she returned. By the time the Pioneer returned to Shupanga the rainy season had set in, the most unhealthful of the year.

Mrs. Livingstone Dies

Then further tragedy struck. Mrs. Livingstone became ill with fever on April 21, grew steadily worse, and died on April 27, 1863. She was buried under a boabab tree at Shupanga.

In spite of heartbreak, Livingstone carried on. The Lady Nyasa was put together and launched. Further trips were made up the Rovuna, the Zambezi and the Shire. But trade and missionary effort were found to be greatly hindered, if not made impossible, by the slave trade. Before they could start the boat in the morning, Livingstone writes on one of their trips, they had to clear the paddles of corpses. "Wherever we took a walk, human skeletons were seen in every direction.

"The sight of this desert, but eighteen months ago a well-peopled valley, now literally strewn with human bones, . . . made us feel that unless the slave trade—that monster of iniquity which has so long brooded over Africa—is put down, lawful commerce cannot be established."

Expedition Recalled

It had been the hope of Livingstone to find that the Rovuna River flowed out of Lake Nyasa; but he found that this was not the case. In the Shire River, navigation was prevented by rapids. So Livingstone decided to take the Lady Nyasa apart at the foot of the rapids, build a road forty miles long around the rapids, carry the parts over this road, then put the Lady Nyasa together again and sail her to the lake. But before the road could be finished he received a message from England that the expedition had been recalled. It had cost more than had been anticipated, and the Portuguese Government was opposed to further exploration of territory which they considered theirs.

So the Lady Nyasa was put back together, and after further delays Livingstone dropped down the Zambezi to its month. There two British steamers took the Pioneer and the Lady Nyasa in tow and brought them to Mozambique, where the Pioneer was turned over to the British Navy.

Livingstone Sails to Bombay

Livingstone had hoped that the British Government would take over the Lady Nyasa and repay him what he had spent for the boat; but no offer of payment was made him. Then he tried to sell the boat in Zanzibar; but not receiving what he considered a fair offer, he decided to sail her to Bombay. His navigator, Mr. Rae, resigned, so Livingstone sailed the boat himself, with only three other Europeans and and nine natives aboard. He had only fourteen tons of coal, as the vessel was moved usually by sails when on the ocean. It was twenty-five hundred miles to Bombay, over an ocean which Livingstone had never before crossed. It took him forty-five days instead of the eighteen he had expected it to take.

After a pleasant stay in Bombay he took passage for England. To retire and rest? No. Even though he had already done more than it is given to most men to accomplish, he planned to do more. He was fifty-two years old, and weakened by repeated illnesses; but he had not put an end to the slave trade. He left the Lady Nyasa in Bombay, as though giving bond for his return.

Livingstone stayed in England only about a year (July, 1864, to August, 1865), during which time he wrote Record of an Expedition to the Zambezi. He was eager to return to Africa for there was much yet to be done for the people of that unhappy continent. But who would support him? He had spent most of the money he had earned; he had broken his connection with the London Missionary Society; and the government had recalled the expedition of which he had been the head.

And here, gathered round one large table—a small children's UN, sit four and five year old Lithuanians, Polish, Latvians, and Yugoslavs, with the help of a German teacher cutting valentines and learning the songs of their future homeland. The walls of this room are especially interesting . . . birds painted on the walls sing "Oh say can you see," and everywhere are familiar large paintings of our nursery rhymes. To the older children who are learning to read, "Baa, Baa, Black Sheep" and "Mary Had a Little Lamb," so familiar to our children, are new and fascinating to Helga and Peter, Hans and Sergi.

The older children in the next room learn English rapidly. One never ceases to be amazed at how quickly they absorb the new words and phrases. In this room everything is marked with a sign—table, desk, door, window and so on. (See cover picture.) At Christmas the group sang all the familiar Christmas carols.

On Friday — Bible Stories

Friday is our day for Bible stories, which the children love. After telling the story of Baby Moses to the kindergarten, Hans immediately said, "Tell it again . . ." and Jakob, "Let's have it every day!"

The day ends . . . and the pupils return to their lagers their small rooms and perhaps spend more time learning a "leetle more English." At sundown, from the loudspeaker float the strains of "The Star Spangled Banner" and "America the Beautiful" while a group of future Americans, the Polish guards, stand in formation as the American flag is lowered against the blue, clear sky.

Our D.P. school . . . Anna, from Poland, Simun who has now received his visa, little Helga who speaks perfect English for her ten years, old white-haired Igor and little Gretchen, the tiniest of our pupils.

"Behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shuit it."

The door has been opened, and there have been opportunities to witness for the Lord. May the "open door" challenge us to look for the command that is ours to live for Him whom we represent.

MEMBERS of the tiny Church of the Nazarene had a fine record last year giving an all-time high of $104.64 per person. More than $1,600-000 was received by the church during 1949 for its world missionary program.—Presbyterian Life

HANOVER—The number of Germans withdrawing from church membership has increased nearly 500 per cent since 1947 in the state of Lower Saxony, a state official disclosed. In 1949, he said, 13,453 withdrew from the church, compared with 6,037 withdrawals in 1948 and 2,496 in 1947. Most of the withdrawals were due to "material" reasons—indicating reluctance or inability to pay the church taxes required of church members. In Germany, if a person declares himself a member of any church, his church taxes are collected by state tax collectors along with his governmental taxes. Lower Saxony is mostly Protestant. —*Ch. struction and manual labor, for terms of three months or longer. Travel scholarships may be available to volunteers who otherwise could not enter this work.

Availability of sufficient volunteer help and the continuation of sufficient contributions will make it possible to maintain construction at the maximum rate as heretofore planned.

Applications are being received for staff members for this West Coast home for mental patients. It is planned that prospective staff members will be trained through assignment to Brook Lane Farm so that they can be available when the physical plant at Reedley is completed.

VOLUNTARY-SERVICE NOTES

Final plans are being made for M.C.C. Summer Service units; assignments of volunteers to specific units will begin in mid-April. Additional persons desiring to serve in this summer program should send application in immediately.

There is opportunity for one-year volunteers in several places—including Reedley hospital building program; Topeka hospital unit; Vineland, Ontario, hospital unit; National Training School for Boys, Washington, D. C.

Some individuals, unable to personally volunteer, help make it possible for others to do so. One couple, after serving for a year in V.S., has made offer to continue contact with the work by monthly contributions for an additional year. Some young people's groups likewise have volunteered to meet a regular quote for this work.

PALESTINE RELIEF MEETS NEED

The program of clothing distribution among Arab refugees in Palestine is reaching needy people, as is indicated by a letter of appreciation from one Khalil Mansour. "In the name of the ill fated Palestinian Refugees at Ain Eble Village, Tyre Dist., I beg to thank Mennonite Central Committee for the valuable efforts they have manifested in collecting and distributing fairly and orderly those clothes and commodities that are urgently needed and greatly appreciated by the refugees, especially as it was the first gift distributed in a just way and in good order."

1949 CULTURAL CONFERENCE MINUTES

THE printed proceedings for the seventh conference on Mennonite Educational and Cultural Problems are now available for distribution. The conference was held at Tabor College, Hillsboro, Kansas, on June 16 and 17, 1949.

The Cultural Conference sessions dealt with contemporary problems of wide general interest. Silas Hertzler of Goshen discussed the pros of the present parochial school movement, and Marvin Harder of Wichita, Kansas, discussed the disadvantages of the parochial system. A paper on the "Growth and Use of Tobacco Among Mennonites" by J. W. Fretz, and a paper on the "Problems of the Conscientious Objector in the Legal Practice" by Elvin Souder, were among those addresses vigorously discussed at the conference. John Umble presented a valuable paper on the "Factors Explaining the Disintegration of Mennonite Communities." This was the result of his many years of study of extinct Sunday schools and churches. Howard Kaufman presented "A Set of Standards for a Christian Community" and John H. Lohrentz presented a significant historical background of the Mennonite Brethren. G. W. Peters outlined the missionary interests and development among the Mennonite Brethren.

Addresses printed in these proceedings include six addresses on general college administrative aspects such as the "Board of Directors" by Arnold Funk; "The Organization of the President's Office," by Ernest Miller; "The Office of the Business Manager," by Harry E. Martens; "The Office of the Dean," by Chester Lehman; "The Work of the Dean of Women," by Viola Good; and "Organizing the Faculty for Instruction and Research," by J. S. Schultz. All of these individuals, represented different colleges and different phases of work.

These 14 addresses, over 200 pages, are attractively bound in paper covers for $1. They may be secured from J. W. Fretz of North Newton, Kansas.

Probably most symbolic of our fifty years of missions in India is the Leper work. The tree marks the spot where P. A. Penner (right) built a hut many years ago for the first lepers who came to him for help. The church with hundreds of lepers who worship there symbolizes a ministry of evangelism, healing, and teaching to people who were cast out of their Hindu temples.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Our Western District Conference has set aside Sunday, May 7, as Deaconess Sunday. Deaconess work is one branch of the conference which needs reviving. May we ask you to devote this Sunday in special remembrance of this work in prayer, that God may give vision and new stimulus, and bless and prosper this work for the furtherance of His kingdom.

There is much work to be done among the needy, the sick, the invalids, the aged, and the poor. Young women in good health whom the love of Christ constraineth to give all are urgently needed to fill vacancies in various places.

We appeal to you for support with prayers and especially for new interest in reviving this work which God called our forefathers to begin. May He now lay it upon your heart to find ways and means to carry it on to His glory and for relief of the needy.

Editorials

IF RELIGION SAVES, it is pointless to take the Gospel to India. India is probably one of the most religious nations on earth. They may be likened to the Athenians of Paul's day who lifted an altar to the "unknown god" so that they would not slight any of the gods. It is strange that some would even place such a religious perspective, that tries to take the good of all religions, on a level higher than what they term the "exclusiveness of Christianity." Ghandi, a Hindu, has been admired by many both in and out of Hinduism because he refused to become a member of an "exclusive" faith like Christianity, choosing rather to remain in an "inclusive" faith and not breaking his contact with his Hindu brethren. It is held that this would make for brotherhood and unity rather than division and strife which results from a clear statement of the finality of the revelation of God in our Lord Jesus Christ. If that were true we would need to re-examine our faith, much less try to take it to India.

But such a point of view ignores that which is basic in the Gospel of Christ—that God in Christ spoke decisively and conclusively to the whole world. The essence of the gospel is the Deity of Christ. The revelation of God as seen in Jesus Christ is the perennial basis of judgment for every religion including Christianity itself. Christianity, or man's expression of his faith in Christ, must take its place among the human institutions of the world and be constantly judged in the light of the revelation of God through our Lord Jesus Christ. While it is true that Christianity is the expression of man's response to the revelation of God and thus would be different from other religions, it however remains that the human element in setting up institutions, theologies, and ethics makes it in some measure inescapably similar to other religions.

But God who became flesh in Jesus Christ who in turn died and rose again is the essence of the Gospel irrespective of how man may express it. God's work that created man's response (which we have termed "Christianity") is absolute; otherwise we have no basis of judgment.*

If this is true then nothing can be more important than fulfilling the great commission to preach this gospel and teach Christ's way of life in non-Christian as well as Christian lands. To have churches, schools, hospitals, and retreats or other institutions is no guarantee that this Way is being presented unless there is a constant re-evaluation of the objectives of those institutions in the light of the full revelation of God in Christ. Furthermore, we will not feel that such a situation is destructively exclusive. For, as Christians, we believe that all truth, all righteousness and judgment, all true beauty, and all true love have their source in God, the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ in whom "dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily." Such a message speaks of inclusiveness rather than exclusiveness. It excludes only those things which are basically alien to our life under God anyway. If then there is any truth, any beauty, any love, any righteousness and judgment in any other religion, it would seem that when such a person who is a member of such a faith hears a true presentation of the gospel, he will recognize the God of our Lord Jesus Christ as the source of that truth, beauty, love, or righteousness and be faced squarely with the decision of accepting or rejecting Him who is the source of all. Thus having God's gospel, we have an inescapable obligation to the whole world. For in the true God alone is life; outside there is only eternal death.

SOMETIMES, however, members of others faiths do not recognize Him, Whom all the world must ultimately bow to, in the preaching and life of ministers and Christian missionaries. This was probably the case with Ghandi; segregation in mission work in Africa, where he spent some of his earlier years, was a major factor in his refusal to become a Christian. It was a case of man's works speaking louder than his words. We may quote scripture from start to finish in our testimonies and our preaching; but if our life does not measure up, the world will never be convinced by our hypocrisy. God will have to wait for cleaner vessels.

SOME PEOPLE in the homeland often find it difficult to understand why missionaries are sometimes half-apologetic about medical work, educational work, relief work, or any other type of work on the mission field outside of direct preaching. Perhaps these missionaries sense the presence of those who feel that the preaching situation is the only one in which the Holy Spirit is really operative. It is true that the non-preaching techniques can only be unfruitful without people who are the kind of sensitive and yielded Christians that can follow through in a given situation knowing the precise point at which an individual may be most susceptible to a personal witness. On the other hand one really wonders how it would be possible to present a Christ who healed, fed, taught, and helped, thus expressing the nature of the God who sent Him,—we wonder how it would be possible to preach such a Christ fully without ourselves doing those very things. What else can it mean when we say we are to be like Him? Just as these various ministries opened the way for Christ in presenting the gospel, so we should have no reason to apologize for schools, hospitals, relief work, which are administered by Christians concerned about winning others. One of the most striking statements in this whole Jubilee Issue is found on page 284: "All mission work, be it medical, educational, or any other type of institutional work is done with one ultimate purpose in mind, namely to show people the Christian way and to create a situation which would be conducive to a personal encounter with Christ on the part of anyone who might not know Him."

*To the modern mind that evades absolutes this probably is not very comforting. But ultimately our choice is not between absolute or relativism; it is rather the kind of absolute we choose. For relativism has created for itself an absolutism of change; and, agnosticism, and atheism and skepticism while seeking to avoid a cocksure attitude about possession of truth really fall into a similar kind of pride. They merely exchange the statement, "I've been everywhere, and seen everything and therefore know this is true," for, "I've been everywhere and seen everything and know this can't be true or that we can't be sure about it."

EVANGELISTIC WORK" is a phrase which can be used in talking about nearly every phase of work carried on in the mission field. All mission work, be it medical, educational, or any other type of institutional work is done with one ultimate purpose in mind, namely to show people the Christian Way and to create a situation which would be conducive to a personal encounter with Christ on the part of any one who might not know Him.

In this article we are thinking especially about the efforts which are made in the villages to present the gospel of Christ to the people by word of mouth, by means of pictures, and by the printed page. This work is commonly referred to as evangelistic work.

The gospel of Christ is carried to the people right in the villages where they live. This is done by a staff of people who are called evangelistic workers. Most of these people live out in the district. That is to say, each evangelistic worker has his home in a village and spends all of his working time at the task of presenting the Evangel to the people who live in his village and in the surrounding villages. Thus we might call them rural or village preachers.

Resident Evangelists for Permanent Witness

The homes of such preachers are in villages which are located anywhere from five to thirty miles from the mission station. Thus they not only come to the non-Christian people as messengers of the Gospel, but they actually live right in the midst of the people and generally speaking, on the same level as the average villager. Hence, in their family life, they actually demonstrate—imperfectly as ever it may be—the Christian way of life which they present in the market place or wherever opportunity affords. This, of course, is a year-round program of evangelism and as such constitutes a persistent, continual presentation of the Gospel of Christ.

lieve

Traveling Evangelists for Intensive Work

Besides having preachers stationed out in the villages of the mission area, a seasonal campaign is carried on in January, February, and March of each year. This is known as "the touring season." During this campaign we live in tents close by the villages in which we carry on a concerted and intensive effort of preaching, teaching, singing, and portraying the gospel of Christ.

There is another aspect to the evangelistic work on the mission field; that is the task of nurturing those who have become Christians. The 1949 report shows a church membership of 3,566 Christians and 2,319 children on the mission field in India. The spiritual welfare of these people must be provided for; that, too, becomes the task of the evangelistic workers of the mission.

This work has gone on now for nearly 50 years. Truly God has honored the consecration and blessed the efforts and sacrifices which our church has poured into the mission field in India. By His grace the church has taken root in Indian soil. This is something we can be truly grateful for and at the same time, we can continue to give ourselves to the work of driving the roots of the church ever deeper and deeper into Indian soil, until, in complete certainty, we shall finally be able to say, "The Church is in India to stay."

I was sick . . .

WHEN He saw the multitude He was moved with compassion on them." Mt. 9:36. Seeing the multitudes as we do at the bazaar, at the Hindu festival, or at a railway station, one is moved with compassion. Seeing the multitudes at our hospitals one cannot but sympathize for them; and, if that compassion is backed by Christian love, it will lead to action. You will do something about it.

Recently, when we returned from vacation, we found the usual representatives of human suffering. In one ward was a girl with her jaw broken at two places, as well as the arm, right thigh, and the left knee crushed and mangled. Across the hall from her was a woman with her back broken; farther on there was another girl with a serious knee injury. These were not automobile accidents, but all had fallen from trees, a very frequent accident.

In one ward a blind patient was awaiting the verdict. As is often the case, we could do nothing for him. There were several cases of trachoma—a serious eye condition often causing blindness.

Our Cases, A Mere Fraction

In the paragraph above I mention, "Representatives of human suffering." As I see these patients in the hospital I know they are a mere fraction of those in the villages who should be having hospital treatment. I have spent some time in the villages of India. I have slept there, I have eaten there. I have "sat where they sat." One is appalled at the havoc brought about by malaria alone. Sometimes whole families are incapacitated by it. Many children are weak and listless because of malaria, hookworm, or other diseases so prevalent here.

India's Great Medical Need

is that we have been so busy taking care of the sick that we had little time for preventive medicine. Muir, a physician who had done a great deal for medicine in India, and especially for lepers, said that one great field of opportunity open to medical missions was that of preventive medicine. For this type of work, as well as for health propaganda, we should have a full-time nurse and compounder, as well as another doctor to give part of his time to this work.

In the field of medicine as well as in others, much pioneering work has been done by missions. Up until the early part of the last war, 80 per cent of all nurses were trained in mission institutions. Practically no text books were available for teaching. Preparing text books for nurses and compounders, financing their printing, and training personnel has been no small task. In Champa our mission has usually maintained a nurse's school and sometimes a class of compounders has also been in training.

"Great Works"—A Promise Fulfilled

One must approach these words of Christ with fear and trembling, and with awe. Christ said, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do." Have we as a church done such works? Have we had such faith? Many thousands have received their sight, the sick have been healed, and the lepers cleansed.

The child with sore eyes, greatly in danger of becoming blind; the newly born infant, the future citizen; the many mothers without medical aid; all these are among the "Least of these" for whom the Master was concerned and for whom he had compassion.

Many parents have come to our hospitals because of the illness of a child. Our hope and prayer is that many may be led to know our Saviour because of the leading of a child. And Scripture again is being fulfilled.

by O. A. Waltner

IT WAS a cool afternoon during the monsoon of 1944 when a formation of high flying planes came directly over a group of lepers squatting among the small, crudely constructed bamboo and mud huts they had erected under trees. The low droning noise of the planes was scarcely heard by the lepers. None raised his face to scan the skies for a glimpse of the silver birds. None raised his voice to speak of the planes that were occasionally lost to view as they flew into great white clouds. This group of people seemed to be wholly unconscious of the men riding the skies.

But just a few hundred feet to the north of this motley crowd of leper beggers was another group considerably larger. This group dressed in clean clothes was moving about among large, well-constructed buildings made of brick, lime, and cement. This wasn't a quiet group indifferent to the planes winging their way almost directly overhead. These lepers shouted and clapped their hands. They eagerly pointed out the planes to others who came running out of their wards to learn what the noise was about. There was laughter as eyes spotted the planes emerging from the clouds.

A tree over the spot where P. A. Penner (shown on picture) began the Champa Leper work. (On the back of the picture from which cut is made was Penner's own words: Here is where our simple hut stood when I began leper work.)

Christ Spells the Difference

The two groups of lepers responded differently and the reason for it was given by a leper himself when he said, "It makes a difference where you are." The leper was right—it does make a difference where the leper is, outside or inside a Christian leprosarium. Even from its beginning, P. A. and Mrs. Penner sought to make the Bethesda Leprosy Hospital and Homes a place where the loving and ministering spirit of Christ would spell that difference. Leprosy was regarded a disease and not a curse sent by the gods. Up-to-date medical treatment and surgery was made available to every leper patient. There was every endeavour to create opportunity for Christ to stretch forth His hand to heal the leper instead of consigning him to a life of pain and agony brought on by a horrible disease. Nor was the leper to remain in intellectual darkness. Adult literacy classes and the primary school opened new horizons to untrained minds. Patients who were illiterate upon admission into the leprosarium learned to read books and the Bible before they were dismissed with "Disease-arrested Certificates." And through a program of physical therapy, the patient came to understand that he who was rejected by India's people and for whom he was of no value was in truth after all still a person who could through honest labor make a contribution of positive good to society.

To Lepers — Temples Close, Church Opens

To the leper the temples of India are closed—the worship of the gods is denied him, for ultimately he will be destroyed by the gods. Thus teaches Hinduism. But the founders of the Bethesda Leprosy Hospital and Homes taught otherwise. They said that lepers also can be possessors of eternal life, if they but believe on Jesus Christ as Saviour and Lord. This ministry of service and teaching spelled the difference, so that in their afflictions, lepers actually began to live again when they came into the leprosarium.

Today A. E. and Mrs. Jantzen in superintending this fine institution seek to increase the efficiency of this home so that life in all its phases will be more abundant for the patients. H. R. Bauman, our missionary doctor supervising the medical program, and Eva Pauls in directing the nursing program, seek to bring physical and spiritual health to the sick. Willard Unruh assists in programs of building and expansion.

Even in Affliction They Serve

To be different by being a better Christian leprosarium—that is the goal of the Bethesda Leprosy Hospital and Homes. Such an institution doesn't just happen. It is the result of much planning and constant labour. It can only be a reality as the people in the home churches are faithful in prayer, as they send consecrated and trained workers to help, and as they give of their possessions to help make this a place where people whom the world rejects will again rise from apathy and hopelessness to action and assurance that even in affliction they can serve God as He establishes His Kingdom on earth.

Chhattisgarh --Buil

THE story of the Bible is the story of God's dealing with His people through the instrumentality of leaders. Whether one looks from Moses to Malachi or from John the Baptist to John on Patmos, he finds that God has accomplished His work through carefully chosen well prepared human agents.

The Gospel of John opens with evangelism—Christ calling disciples. It closes with a nurture program, "Feed My Sheep . . . My Lambs." Evangelism may be the initial work of missions, but the preparing of workers is an urgent imperative, following hard on the heels of evangelism. Someone, somewhere, must prepare a leadership for the growing church. Our work in India has been blessed during the last two decades by a stream of workers who have gone forth from our own Bible School, now bearing the name of the Chhattisgarh Bible Training School.

The Shepherd Pattern

A measuring rod for the type of worker needed is found in John 10. The shepherd goes before and the sheep hear his voice. The leader must not be too far ahead of the sheep, lest the sheep cannot follow. If the church is amongst primitive folk, the leader must be slightly ahead of the sheep. If the church is amongst a highly advanced folk, the leader must be slightly in advance of such. The church in India recognizes a ministry on a four-fold level: the volunteer lay leader in the village; the village evangelist and pastor; the central church pastor; and, the supervising minister. Our Bible School has been called into existence to prepare the village evangelist and pastor.

Geared to the Need

I know you would be greatly encouraged if you could see the school in progress. Each day the program opens with a chapel service. Then the group divides in two or three sections following separate courses of study. The less advanced wives of village pastors have a program of their own, which is at their level. The more advanced women and young men constitute the next group. A third group is the specially prepared student. Thus a course of study covering the Bible from Genesis to Revelation, including church history, psychology, teaching principles, the Hindi language, church administration, sermonizing, health and hygiene, constitute the formal class room subjects.

Learning by Doing

Much emphasis has been placed upon the life-situation—learning by doing. When special religious festivals are held in the neighborhood, special campaigns are put on for the selling of literature. One or two months each year are spent in tenting out in the villages, doing evangelistic work—learning by doing. During the residential study, every opportunity is given for experience in Sunday School Teaching, in C. E. work, while advanced students do pastoral work in nearby villages. Gardening, with individual gardens for each one, ending in a competitive exhibition at the end of the season, have been conducive to health and self-support.

Shaping the Lives of Hundreds

If the work of the Lord centers around His chosen, well-prepared agent, empowered by His Holy Spirit, so too does history reveal this same principle in the institution. It owes its existence and continued history to servants directed of the Lord. When W. F. Unruh came to India in 1928, this was the great burden upon his soul. This soul passion and burden fructified in the starting of the school. Miss M. R. Burkhalter, S. T. and Mrs. Moyer, J. R. and Mrs. Duerksen, all have in turn carried this heavenly burden. Their efforts have been splendidly supported by able India fellow-workers, including M. R. Asna in the early days, J. Walters for a long period during the more recent years, and at present by Puran Banwar. This team of Indian and foreign workers has helped shape the lives of hundreds, during the twenty years that the school has been in existence.

Inter-Church Impact

Four other missions in the area have regularly supported the school by sending students. But it is our own young men and young women who are now sent out, from evangelist Budhu Singh at Khatghora on the north, to pastor T. N. Paul, at Kodopali 100 miles on the south, whom we prize as product of the school. Teachers in village mission schools, evangelists on the front line of advance, pastors of large village circuits and churches, wives of pastors and evangelists, Bible Women—all have received their preparation for their life work in this school located at Janjgir. A number of new buildings, the money for which was especially raised by the efforts of Miss M. R. Burkhalter, have been recently added to the school plant.

TEACHING envelopes the other acts mentioned by Jesus Christ in the Great Commission. Our Mission in India from its origin recognized that teaching must be begun and continuously sustained.

Expansion

Each little primary school can be a pool of bright Christian influence in a drab, illiterate, backward community. The missionaries first gathered in orphan and homeless children and opened simple schools. Soon the little children of adult newly-baptized Christians were included in the enrollment. Later there was a much wider outreach. Especially boys from non-Christian homes began to attend the schools on mission compounds. With no compulsion from Government to serve as a goad, it was a step forward when girls began to attend. Now at the older stations we feel assured that the Mission is offering opportunity for primary education to all children from Christian homes. With education through the fourth grade this should make them grow up to be literate citizens. This is not yet true of the southern part of the field. In spite of the fact that Jagdeeshpur has a large local school, and that fourteen rural schools and some "short-term" schools emanate from this station, there are still children living in some of the one-hundred-twenty villages, in which there are Christians, who do not or cannot attend any primary school. This is a mighty challenge to expand and improve educational conditions. For the sake of a stronger church with educated leaders and Bible-reading congregations, we should again see Christ setting a little child in the midst of a circle of adults and saying, "Of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

Coeducation

"Why educate my girl?" In the six years that Miss Funk lived in Janjgir (1906-12) she no doubt often patiently and truthfully gave valid reasons to prove that it is worthwhile to educate the bright-eyed daughters of Indian fathers.

At the time of the dedication of the Funk Memorial school building, in 1929, Martha Burkhalter said, "The day will soon be here when this will house a complete middle school. Even boys will study together with girls in these very classrooms."

In 1947 John Thiessen had to decide whether he would admit girls as well as boys to Janzen Memorial high school, Jagdeeshpur.

And in 1949 Miss Nickel sent a hurried answer to the note which a harried rural pastor had delivered by a runner—"May I admit twenty instead of fifteen children to the rural boarding house for this school year? Does it matter whether girls outnumber boys by

IN MY travels among our churches the question is sometimes asked: "Have you not gone to India to preach the Gospel? And now you report about school work, and industrial and agricultural work." My reply is always that preaching the Gospel—making Jesus Christ known, has been, and is, and shall ever be basic in all our mission work. And thank God, this basic work of preaching has born fruit; men and women have accepted Christ; and many more are continuing to come. These believers form Christian homes. Children are born. The children grow up. And Christian parents say that they want their children to go to school. A certain percentage of Christian parents have the chance to send their children to government schools. Many parents have no such chance, because government schools are still comparatively few in number. But even if there is opportunity, parents say they wish their children to go to a school where there is Christian nurture. This, of course, is not found in government schools. So parents rightly demand Christian schools.

But what kind of Christian schools should the young churches of India have? Prior to 1932 all our schools were strictly literary schools. The Scriptures were taught, together with the regular school subjects. Practically no attempt was made at anything where the hands were used. There children went home for vacation, or to stay home after the course was finished without having learned how to work. They had gathered some literary knowledge. But at home life was very practical. The constant struggle for daily bread is very real in the average Christian home. But these children with literary equipment had unconsciously been weaned away from physical and practical work. They were not happy in helping their parents, or themselves in earning their living by physical work. So both parents and children were unhappy.

Boys and Girls Make Own Clothes

Ever since 1932 we have in humble and simple ways tried to help the boys and girls of our Christian homes and orphanages to get a type of education which has a fairly large range of practical usefulness. We started with simple woodwork, which grew into carpentry work; such useful articles as benches, school desks, chairs, stools, boxes, shelves, etc. are being made. Since a goodly number of parents of our school children do weaving as a cottage industry, we began to teach weaving in our schools. Through the years many thousands of yards of simple rough cloth have been woven by our school children. Weaving naturally was followed by sewing. So boys and girls learn to make their own shirts, pants, and dresses. This needle work is further supplemented, especially among the girls, with crocheting, knitting, tatting and the like. Young mothers who have been students in our schools, now make the necessary clothes for their family; and the neat dresses and frocks one sees on the babies, tell the story that the practical learning in school was not wasted time.

As occasion demanded and as it was found possible, such industrial work as smithy, simple mechanics and repair work, brick making, paper making, and book binding, was carried on. At present, the above industries, plus printing are done. The printing work was started in 1941; the chief production is leaflets for distribution and some material for use in the schools. The purpose of teaching the rudiments of printing is to introduce the students to a very rapidly growing industry in India; the Indian press today is producing a printed page which is as a whole, not in line with Christian principles. Hence the church in India must have a Christian press.

The Farm Was Brought to School

Besides the above industries another very important one has been developed since 1932, and that is agriculture. Our school children all come from rural homes. Parents are either farmers themselves, or workers on the farm, or evangelists and teachers who serve farming people. Hence the farm had to be brought to school, especially at our Jagdeeshpur station. The land was bought as forest land. It was cleared of bush and undergrowth by relief labor during a semi-famine period in India. This farm is roughly twenty-five acres in size. On this school farm, grain, fruit, and vegetables are raised for our boarding homes. Some of the heaviest and very urgent work on the farm is being done by hired labor; but students are always in close contact with the work. Each student spends from one-and-a-half to two hours per day on the farm; preparing the seed beds, planting, sowing, weeding, mulching, and three?" Coeducation is marching along in spite of many arguments and age-old customs that oppose it. Many Christian parents today envisage nothing less than a high school education for their children.

Improvement

The "aloud reading" method where twenty or thirty children sit huddled in a small dark classroom and read from torn, soiled textbooks, each at his own tempo but all at the tops of their voices—that method has disappeared almost entirely.

The "parrot" method when teacher sits at his desk and shouts a fact of knowledge to a large group of pupils and they in turn shout it back, not once, but over and over again,—that method, too, is in bad favour, and soon must be wiped out.

The "rote" method, too, is being replaced by some thought-provoking techniques. Instead of the teacher sitting and the reciting pupil always standing and rapidly gushing out words, words—just as he found them written in the book and learned them by heart, nowadays some teachers move around the room, stooping over pupils in a friendly, personal, teacher-pupil relationship. Some are fine psychologists with ample opportunity to apply all they know.

Two remaining bugbears of Indian education are examinations and fees. True, one stiff, government controlled, compulsory examination has been removed but there still remain the two hurdles! At the end of the fourth grade the frightening ogre of a government inspector often scares useful knowledge from the little heads of ten- to twelve-year-olds. Then at the completion of the three-year high school course the menacing spectacle of "matric" exams, a session often lasting three weeks, that still makes or breaks a prospective career.

Mission education is not free, yet the income derived from fees has never yet paid expenses. The small fees which are demanded from the honest effort of all, in order not to cheapen a most precious commodity—education.

Result — The Criterion

In spite of very meager equipment, uninteresting, unillustrated textbooks too many untrained teachers, far too few suitable buildings, yet, with God's blessing the educational efforts have been most rewarding. Good discipline and many character building values have been conserved. There is but one way to account for this. The Scriptures and short daily worship periods as the most important part of the curriculum, have had the effect that is promised in the Word. This unhindered opportunity to use and teach the Bible in the schools, constitutes a condition more favourable than that which prevails in the homeland.

The traditional picture of the bare essentials of good education, i.e., a log on which sits a worthy teacher who is faithful in leading an eager pupil into the ever-widening wonder of knowledge—that picture finds a ready counterpart in India. The classroom may well be the shade of a friendly tree, the blackboard improvised with charcoal writing on a whitewashed wall and many little brown faces turned to the teacher. When that teacher serves in the name of his Great Master, then some lasting results of the effort go on and on.

The Word of God—Is Central

Although the mission has not carried on many forms of specialized education, the work of the Bible Training school deserves special mention. The high privilege of teaching God's Word without intermission over a long period of years has brought much good. For years there were no adequate buildings nor living quarters but now, step by step, the plant is being erected. The Bible School is an integral part of the mission activities. It is hard to appraise results sufficiently. Surely some have been converted, some have been challenged, many have dedicated their lives for service. The alumnae fill the most responsible and often difficult places of leadership in the church. Their sense of loyalty to their own people is great. The Bible School stands as a symbol of whole hearted cooperation with other Missions in the common task of strengthening forces for evangelism within the church and among the great needy, surrounding communities.

harvesting. This constant contact with the farm helps the students to keep feeling at home in rural life. And when the student comes home for vacation or at the end of formal school days, he has the feeling of at-homeness in his own home and community. In this way a close-knit home, community, and church-life is being maintained. Further, in many instances agricultural improvements at home are the results of the agricultural work in school.

All the above industrial and agricultural work we feel is in line with what Jesus says: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and all thy strength. . . ." "The earth is the Lord's," and the church membership must never forget to take good care of what God has entrusted to us. The Apostle Paul teaches that our bodies are temples of the Spirit of God; and to do physical work at the same time the mind receives schooling, we believe, is in line with, "build my church."

Continuing Challenge in Germany
Formosa Pioneer Mission Field for M.C.C.

AKRON, PA. In a meeting early in April, various German governmental officials expressed deep concern that private relief agencies continue to function. Regarding material-aid gifts, it was felt that there would be continued need, particularly among refugees, poorer classes of people, and also among certain institutions. Also stressed was the urgent need for continuing work aimed at the rehabilitation of youth—including community center services, voluntary work projects, etc. The supplying of essential materials to children's homes and kindergartens was also seen as a worthy field.

One of these representatives expressed a plea that the Christian relief agencies should not withdraw their work in Germany at this time: "We have learned how you people work, we have learned to appreciate your advice, we have come to see that you have much to offer us, we are ready to work very closely with you and count upon your advice to help us over the difficulties we face. If you stop your material-aid program it is pretty certain that most of you will leave and we feel that it would be a black day for Germany if all these friends of the German people leave us in this hour."

Such words clearly imply that relief "In the Name of Christ" has not yet reached its full extent of witness; that there continues to be a challenge to clarify and express further the spiritual "plus" which accompanies the physical relief.

Pioneering in Formosa

The M.C.C. Mobile Clinic in Formosa has seen much activity during recent weeks. During the last week of March, over one thousand patients were seen, and the number of treatments was even higher. Another doctor has been added to the staff, and occasionally a local missionary, a Mrs. Dickson, brings an evangelist to accompany the clinic.

During the last week of March the clinic travelled to a remote village, where they were met by two mountain men, one of whom addressed the workers: "For all the people of my area I welcome you. We thank you for the great effort you are making to come to our homes. You are the first white people who have ever come here." It was learned that the people had also never heard the gospel message, although a native evangelist had passed through on one occasion. The Clinic worked here for a week.

School Supplies to be Sent in May 12 is the date when children in Canada and the United States should have sent in their contributions of various school supplies for children abroad. Lists of the items needed appeared in earlier announcements. Materials are to be sent to the M.C.C. center in either Kitchener, Ontario or Akron, Pennsylvania.

Mennonite-Aid Notes

Recent word from C. F. Klassen gives encouraging word on continued Mennonite refugee movement. Particularly new is the favorable prospect that Danzig Mennonites may be accepted for migration to Canada under the Farm-Labor Scheme. Various details in this plan remain to be cleared.

A small group of refugees are being processed for departure to Paraguay, including chiefly persons having family ties with present settlers there, or persons not able to go in the United States or Canada and desiring to go to South America.

Best Methods for World's Best Messages

How To Teach The Bible, by Joseph M. Gettys. John Knox Press, Richmond, Va., $2.00.

What teacher of the great fundamental truths of God's Word has not earnestly asked himself questions such as these:

How can I most effectively teach the Bible to those of my group? How can I teach the truths of the Bible is such a manner that my students will see them as they apply to their own everyday experience? How can I teach the Bible that it may be a joyous experience both for me and for my students? How can I teach the Bible that it may become effective as an aid in transforming the life of my students?

The author of this book has set before himself these four fundamental questions as the basis for the ten studies included in this book. His motivating concern is suggested in the preface: "Our tendency has been either to import methods foreign to the Christian faith or to assume that the content of the Bible was of such a character as to do its redemptive work in spite of haphazard methods of presentation. Our hope is that Protestant teachers will recognize more fully the importance of their task of developing an educated laity, without which the Church will grow steadily weaker in a hostile world."

The first two chapters are of a general nature in which the author deals with the attitude of the teacher toward the Bible itself as the subject matter to be taught and the attitude toward the student, the object of the teaching program. The rest of the studies are devoted to a detailed survey of specific teaching methods such as techniques of preparation on the part of both student and teacher, introducing the lesson and the use of various teaching devices.

A rather casual paging thru the book leaves one with the thought that this is another out of many books written from an academic point of view upon the subject of teaching. However as one reads more closely the book becomes a most suggestive presentation coming out of the wide experience of one engaged in teaching the Bible. Pastors will find it stimulating reading in connection with their concern for effective teaching of the Catechism. S. S. teachers who have not had the opportunity to study widely in the field of teaching will find it a storehouse of suggestions which can readily be applied to live class situations.

One of the great values of the book is its constant appeal to the thought that the truths of the Word of God, the Bible, can be "taught" as well as "caught" by reverent, consecrated teachers. This the Church has not always clearly understood as is evidenced by its only too frequent slipshod methods of presenting the Bible and its message. This book is an earnest appeal to every teacher to present the Bible as "a living Book, throbbing with life, meeting human need where that need exists, and bringing into human life the transforming powers adequate to meet human need."—Walter Gering

BLUFFTON APPOINTS NEW FACULTY MEMBERS

TWO new appointments to the Bluffton college faculty were announced recently by the College.

Luther Shetler of Goshen, Indiana will teach mathematics for the year 1950-51. He graduated from Goshen college and is at present doing graduate work at Indiana university.

Another new member of the faculty will be Richard Weaver, who will teach physics, physical chemistry and perhaps some chemistry. Weaver is now studying at the University of Michigan, from which he will receive his Ph.D. He was a graduate of Bluffton College with the class of 1942.

Both Shetler and Weaver are members of the Eighth Street Church, Goshen.

Delbert Gratz, a Bluffton graduate of 1942, will take over the position of librarian next fall. He is at present studying in Bern, Switzerland.

Bluffton College is sponsoring the appearance of the General Platoff Don Cossack Chorus in Bluffton Tuesday evening, April 25. This is a very high class musical organization and it is a privilege to have these men appear on the campus. However, due to the fact that the college itself does not have its large auditorium completed, it will be necessary to have the concert in the high school gymnasium.

George A. Buttrick, of New York Ciy, will speak in the First Mennonite Church Friday evening, May 12, under college auspices. Buttrick is well known both for his lecture work and his writing. One of his most widely read and most appreciated books is the one on prayer written a number of years ago.

BETHEL HAS INTERNATIONAL PARTY

SCENES of different lands were created at an International Party at Bethel College, which about 100 high school seniors from Newton and surrounding towns attended, April 14.

Different corners in the college buildings had been made into typical eating places of Switzerland, Italy, Central America, India, and the United States. Visitors, sitting in little groups around tables against open-air European scenery, actually felt the pleasant atmosphere of Italian and Swiss outdoor cafes. The long climb to the Matterhorn or the Jungfraujoch of the Swiss Alps was represented by many staircases marked by signs leading students to the large garret of the Ad Building where they found themselves in front of a Swiss mountain inn. Surrounded by murals of high hills, and hearing the strains of Swiss folk-music from a phonograph, they ate plain Swiss cheese and bread.

The Bethel student body and faculty had turned out to entertain the high school visitors at the party. Touring in small groups, the students were shown around the campus. Later a film showing life and activities at Bethel College was shown.

The Goshen Motet singers, who are on a week's tour, made their appearance at Bethel College during the chapel hour, April 12. The group of about 20 singers presented a good program, sung in good style. Mary Oyer is the director of the choir.

FREEMAN CHOIR ON TOUR

THE College A Cappella Choir goes to Nebraska this week-end where they will sing in the Second Mennonite Church of Beatrice on Sunday morning. In the afternoon they will be at the E. M. B. Church at Henderson and in the evening at the Bethesda Church at Henderson, Nebraska. President Miller is going with the group.

The Women's Auxiliary will do some painting in the new Pioneer Hall Kitchen next week. This week the heating system installation has been completed in the building.

The Motet Singers from Goshen College rendered a program in the College Auditorium Saturday evening. On Sunday they will have charge of the morning services in the South Church.

J. S. Tschetter, mayor of Huron, South Dakota and U. S. senatorial candidate spoke in chapel on Wednesday. Tschetter graduated from the Academy in 1903.

J. D. Unruh left for Chicago April 22, to attend a meeting of the executive committee of the M.C.C. Since returning from Holland Unruh has been working on a history of the Mennnonite Central Committee. The book, In the Name of Christ, will be published sometime later this year.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

CHRISTIAN schools all know something of the ups and downs which come with their financial support, and Mennonite Biblical Seminary is no exception. Therefore, our business manager, John T. Neufeld, has asked us to remind our churches and the individuals who make up these congregations not to forget the needs of the Seminary and other Christian work in this period immediately following Easter. In the past few weeks the decrease in gift receipts has made it necessary to call us back to the attention of our loyal supporters in the local congregations.

A Fellowship Tea was held by those planning the School of Missions at Winona Lake, Indiana, from June 26 to July 1. There were special guest speakers. Mrs. S. F. Pannabecker was hostess to these women coming from about ten different denominations.

Meanwhile President S. F. Pannabecker and Mr. and Mrs. Harold Ratzlaff were leaders in the Missionary Institute scheduled at Bluffton College April 14 to 16.

The final item in regard to missions was the meeting of the Congo Inland Mission Board here all day on Tuesday, April 11.

Jottings

—Upper Milford Church, Zionsville, Pennsylvania: Ten young people have been received in our fellowship through baptism on Psalm Sunday. This was the first Sunday for a church bulletin, since a mimeographing machine was purchased by the church. A sound film on the Lenten season was shown on Good Friday evening. The construction of a much-needed parking lot is under way in the small grove below the church. —Mrs. James Miller, Corr.

—Bethesda Church, Henderson, Nebraska: J. D. Unruh was our guest speaker on March 26. His sermon emphasized greatly our opportunity and need to witness. At the evening services he told of experiences in Europe. A week of pre-Easter services beginning on March 27 were conducted by Missionary John Thiessen. His series of messages largely based on Philippians 3:10 was concluded on Sunday with the two messages, "Jesus at Prayer" and "Is There no Balm in Gilead?" The Young Women's Mission Society rendered "The Pink Rose" on Friday evening. This rendition in story and song told how a young girl from the slums found Christ and brought others to Him.—Mrs. Maurice Janzen, Corr.

—First Church, Pretty Prairie, Kansas: The Easter season was greatly enjoyed with programs given by our men's chorus on Good Friday evening and our program Easter Sunday evening. Our Bible Week will be held April 30 through May 4 with Erland Waltner of North Newton, Kansas, in charge. We will be favored with a Song Service by the Canadian Bible College Octet April 26 and the Grace Bible Institute Chorale April 28. The Sewing Society reported last month that 73 towels, 68 wash cloths, 80 yards of goods, and 34 feed sacks were contributed and packed for relief.—Ralph Krehbiel, Corr.

—Tabor Church, Newton, Kansas: Our speakers for the pre-Easter Services were J. J. Voth, C. F. Plett, and Arnold Funk; on Thursday evening of Passion Week we partook of the Lord's Supper. Missionary Harold Ratzlaff brought the message on Good Friday morning. The Sewing Societies of the church sponsored a program commemorating the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Sewing Society. At noon everyone enjoyed the fellowship meal and the mission sale of the societies in the afternoon. Total proceeds from the sale amounted to $441.55 plus a voluntary offering of $61.52.—Mrs. Raymond S. Schmidt, Corr.

—First Church Hutchinson, Kansas: A series of Lenten sermons were given by our pastor, Victor Sawatzky, under the heading of "Coming to Jerusalem." Holy Communion was observed on Maundy Thursday evening. Easter sunrise services, the regular Sunday school hour and worship with a message on "The Living Seed," and in the evening the rendition of an Easter cantata, "The Promise of Easter," concluded an inspiring Easter Sunday. Mrs. A. F. Tieszen of North Newton gave a report of her experiences as an interpreter for our government during the war. A C. E. program was given by the Student Volunteer group of Bethel College. A report in word and picture was given by Viola Duerksen on her work in Paraguay under the M.C.C. Also several musical numbers were given. Several of the women of our Mission Society attended the Women's Society meeting at Memorial Hall on March 14. Our church was sponsor of a joint meeting of the Sterling Evangelical Church and the Mission Church of Hutchinson in a program on present relief needs. Miss Wenger, M.C.C. representative, gave a report of the work.—Corr.

—Emmanuel Church, Moundridge, Kansas: The Emmanuel Church near Moundridge held baptismal services for eight young people on Easter Sunday morning. Garman Wedel, our pastor, officiated at the service in the presence of a record attendance. Holy Communion was observed on Sunday, April 23. Feet washing is still practiced when Holy Communion is observed.—Mrs. Garman Wedel, Corr.

—First Church, Summerfield, Illinois: We united with the Evangelical and Reformed Church in a union Good Friday morning service, held in our church. On Easter Sunday morning we observed the Lord's Supper in our morning service. The Young People of our church had charge of the church night service in the evening. We are having this special service on the second Sunday evening of each month. Sunday, April 16, we observed a Church Fellowship Day. We had a fellowship dinner in the Evangelical Church parish hall following the morning service in our church. A short program was prepared by the young people and a social time followed. On May 6-7 a Christian Life Conference will be held when three members of the Bluffton College faculty will be with us. We expect to have the Harold Ratzlaffs with us on May 14 for morning and evening services. Our pastor, Henry Grimm, will represent our congregation at the Middle District Conference in Wadsworth, Ohio, April 27 to 30.—A. S. Bechtel, Corr.

—First Church, Wadsworth, Ohio: Our Easter services closed with ten adults joining the church on Good Friday evening, two by baptism, three by letter, and five by renewal of covenant. Easter Dawn services were attended by about 125, followed by breakfast at the church. Sunday school was well attended and over 200 took communion at the morning service, including the shut-ins served by the pastor and Deacon Hunsberger in the afternoon. Saturday, April 8, Mabel Irene Conrad and John Drew Kelly were married in a church wedding.—George McBride, Corr.

—First Church, Berne, Indiana: Easter Sunday brought to a close a series of meetings held in this church during Holy Week. Marvin J. Dirks of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary in Chicago was the special speaker. Our pastor, Olin A. Krehbiel, was the speaker in a week of evangelistic meetings in the First Church, Hastead, Kansas, from March 26 to April 2. He reports some conversions a result of these meetings.—March Gilliom, Corr.

—Einsiedel Church, Hanston, Kansas: Good Friday union services were conducted at our church from 12 to 3. On Easter Sunday Mrs. Arthur Miller, Mrs. Kenneth Ewy, and Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Ziesch joined our church, followed by the observance of the Lord's supper. Since the ministers of the western Kansas churches are alternating in serving the Vona, Colorado, group, Harry Albrecht preached there on March 12. At present we are having a series of round-table discussions on fasting, prayer, and divine healing in our midweek meetings.—Mrs. Wm. P. Showalter, Corr.

From Military Service to Christian Non-resistance

by Pierre Widmer

FOR more than a hundred years the French Mennonites have almost completely abandoned the traditional position of non-resistance and refusal of military service, which had characterized from the beginning the movement of the Swiss Brethren and had led the Anabaptists to flee from one country to another across Europe, and even to America, in order to safeguard their right to live according to the gospel. The last official request presented to the government by the French Mennonites to obtain recognition of the principle of nonparticipation in war for conscience' sake, dates from the time of Napoleon I. The great emperor granted them an exemption from service in the combatant troops. But with his continual wars, it became more and more difficult for them to have this exemption respected.

During the nineteenth century and more particularly just before the first World War, military service having become obligatory for all French men twenty-one years old, the French Mennonites began to follow the pattern of doing it like everybody else without even trying to serve in the transport or medical troops. Individually, some of them attempted to remain as Mennonite as possible by doing their military service in noncombatant units. Others prayed that they might not have to make use of their arms, which to us seems to be a very false position. For still others, and we believe that they were the greatest number, military service did not raise any problem, and it was carried out without any scruple of conscience.

I myself was brought up in the atmosphere. Only the members of the brotherhood who were of Swiss nationality and paid their taxes in Switzerland, did no military service. If I recall correctly, I believe the French members of our church somewhat envied the Swiss for being able to get out of it so easily. But it seems that no one thought that it could be otherwise, and I think we were very unworthy descendants of the first Mennonites, to thus so readily do our military service and to participate with no misgivings in war or in its preparation; for, after all, it is not the normal thing to thus dedicate so many years—and the best ones—to a work of death.

However, some were bothered by these things, and I knew that several of our aged brethren supported this or that pacifist movement, such as: "To abolish the crime of war." But I do not remember having heard this problem spoken of in church, either in a church service or in the course of religious instruction; perhaps I have forgotten it, but that would astonish me. On the other hand, I remember very well our children's games, during and after the other war. We had seen so much of soldiers that most of our games were games having to do with war. In these games I was often a commander, wearing stripes on my cap and on my sleeves, and I used to dream of really wearing them some day. To be an officer, an officer in the French army, the finest in the world: what an ideal!

How did my feelings change in regard to this? Under what influence? I would be unable to say. Always I kept an ardent desire to be an officer some day, all the while beginning to feel in my heart that this was perhaps not well. I was beginning to question the usefulness of this service and the approval which God could give to it. It was also undoubtedly during this period that I experienced serious misgivings concerning the well-being of my soul, being troubled over my salvation. At that time I read the Word of God daily, and God was working in me through His Word and His Spirit.

More and more as I began to comprehend the love of God for me, I also was discovering the horror of sin, and of war, which is one of sin's particularly frightful manifestations. And I was becoming more and more convinced that my boyhood dream was incompatible with a true Christian life. Would I never be able to be an officer? It was painful for me to have to renounce it. A struggle was going on within my mind. I felt that my conscience would never be completely in agreement, but I felt that I would like to be an officer. What would be the end of all that?

In 1928 I entered the normal school for teachers at Besancon, and, like all my comrades, I began to take advanced military training (P.M.S.) to become a reserve officer. But my conscience would not rest, and after two or three months I discontinued it, under the pretext that my health was not very good and that my studies gave me enough to do. This was not the real reason, and you may consider me lacking in courage. But it was hard for me to have to say that I didn't like to do my military service, and I had not yet decided to refuse absolutely to bear arms. This was all the more so because in several normal schools, Communist propaganda was strong and sought to divert the normal students from P.M.S., and I did not want to lead people to believe that I was a victim of that propaganda. Upon leaving the school, my comrades then became officers. and I envied them a little, I would have been able to be one as well as they, and to wear the beautiful uniform.

The Way We Use Our Time

WHAT time is it? What a familiar question! It hurries us out of bed in the morning, makes us hungry when we're really not in need of food, sends us on the run for trains, and goes so far as to decide when we shall go to bed.

It is a persistent little question, tagging us around and bobbing up in the most unexpected places. Everybody's watch becomes tired of answering the question, and even time itself becomes a subtle temptation. Like the poor, the question of the time is always with us.

The Hours We Use

University of Wisconsin students recently conducted a questionnaire on what a person does with the hours and years of one's life. They found:

If you live to be 70 or over, chances are that you will spend at least twenty years asleep. Two hours of your life will be taken up just in punching a time clock or signing a time sheet for the twenty-five solid years of work you will do.

Golf, bowling, and hiking will probably take up some of the seven years you are allowed for sports and walking. For five years you will shave and dress, and spend five months tying your shoes. Seven years you will spend in amusements. Another year will be spent at the telephone. For two and a half years you will sit at a table, eating.

The 70-year span includes three years of waiting, thirty hours annually looking in mirrors, and just for the record, you are allowed four hours a year for wiping your nose.

How much of the above do you consider a waste of time?

We have 614,000 hours in an average life time. Dare we waste an hour of these all too few hours for most of us?

Someone has truthfully and beautifully said: "Lost, yesterday, somewhere between sunrise and sunset, two golden hours, each set with sixty diamond minutes. No reward is offered, for they are gone forever!"

Three Attitudes That May Be Assumed Toward Time

"There are three attitudes that one may take toward time: one may be a miser, a spendthrift, or an investor," says Lapsley Carson in Presbyterian Youth.

The misers set a high valuation upon time. They save every moment of it that they can. In their estimation, time is an end in itself, something to be hoarded for its own sake. The best use to be made of a day, according to their way of thinking, is to keep every hour of it for themselves. Ask them to take part in any worthy undertaking, and they will almost invariably reply, "I can't spare the time." The miser revels in the selfish possession of hours and days.

It is very foolish to be miserly in the use of time. The miser does not "redeem" the time. One may hoard money, but no one can hoard time. "Time marches on."

Spendthrifts squander time, spending it lavishly and thoughtlessly without being concerned over whether or not they do anything worth while in return for their golden hours. Those who drift through the days, with no definite purpose, without performing any worthwhile tasks, with no high aims, are spendthrifts. Those who devote all of their waking hours to nothing better than bridge, movies, theaters, social clubs, trashy literature, and idle gossip are squandering their time like spendthrifts.

To be a spendthrift in the use of time is even worse than to be a spendthrift in the use of money. Most of the other things that we value, if lost, may be replaced. Money may be lost and again regained. Health may be lost and later recovered. A house that burns down may be rebuilt. Even a character that is wrecked may be restored. Not so with time. Time spent is gone forever. One should make sure that he spends it for something of enduring worth.

The investor looks for the things in life that give genuine satisfaction and that are of enduring value. Having found such things, he invests his time in them. Richard C. Cabot once wrote a book entitled What Men Live By. In this book he asserts that work, play, love and worship are the four things that should have a place in every well-rounded life. These are the things in which the wise person will invest his time.

A Time Budget

Kirby Page has an interesting chapter on "The Use of Time" in his book, Living Creatively. He suggests that you make an inventory of your use of time for any typical week. Over against it schedule an ideal week, budgeting your time so as to get the best returns for your investment. Try it! You'll be surprised, very probably, at the amount of time you have wasted.

"Time is money" and more! It is opportunity for abundant living through service, through study, through enjoyment of the arts, through creative activities, through reading, through play, through fellow-

David Livingstone of Africa

Part VII - Explorer

WHILE he was in London David Livingston received a letter from Sir Roderick Murchison, suggesting that he find the watershed of Africa—specifically, where the streams rise that flow into the Nile River. "Now, if you would really like to be the person to finish off your remarkable career by completing such a survey, I should be delighted to consult my friends of the (Royal Geographical) Society, and take the best steps to promote such an enterprise." Livingstone accepted the offer, and the Society provided five hundred pounds toward the expense of the expedition.

The English Government provided an additional five hundred pounds and gave Livingstone a commission as consul, with authority over the native chiefs from the Portuguese boundary to Abyssinia and Egypt; but the office carried no salary, and he was even told that he must not expect a pension! James Young, whom Livingstone in his book calls only "a valued private friend," gave a thousand pounds—as much as the Royal Society and the government together. When we recall that the expedition later sent under Henry M. Stanley to find Livingstone cost twenty thousand dollars, the amount spent on Livingstone's expedition, even including a little additional money, seems very moderate.

His own statement of the purpose of this expedition is: "I propose to go inland, north of the territory which the Portuguese in Europe claim, and endeavor to commence that system on the East which has been so eminently successful on the West Coast; a system combining the repressive efforts of Her Majesty's cruisers with lawful trade and Christian missions—the moral and material results of which have been so gratifying . . . . In addition to my other work, I shall strive by passing along the northern end of Lake Nyasa, and round the southern end of Lake Tanganyika, to ascertain the watershed of that part of Africa."

This purpose is to be understood in the light of his statement that "I view the end of the geographical feat as the beginning of the missionary enterprise." He told Sir Roderick Murchison, "I could only feel in the way of duty by working as a missionary."

Returns to Africa

Late in August, 1865, he left England for the last time. In September he reached Bombay where he stayed several months, and received many honours. He sold the Lady Nyasa, but received only twenty-three hundred pounds, although the boat had cost him six thousand pounds. He invested the money for his children in the shares of an Indian bank, but a year or two later the bank failed and he lost the entire amount.

On March 19, 1866, Livingstone began his last expedition into Africa. He had thirteen native Indian soldiers and twenty-three Africans, but no white accompanied him. Except for Henry M. Stanley, he never saw another European in the remaining seven years of his life.

He noted in his journal, "The mere animal pleasure of travelling in a wild, unexplored country is very great . . . . The sweat of one's brow is no longer a curse when one works for God."

He Meets Hardships

Extreme difficulties were met with from the beginning. The men were lazy, and would not carry the loads as far as they should each day. Ten men soon deserted in a body, and some months later they appeared at Zanzibar and reported that Livingstone had been murdered by natives soon after crossing Lake Nyasa. Many persons believed their story, and when the news reached England many obituary notices appeared in the papers. Several search parties were sent out to look for him. One party went as far as Lake Nyasa and proved that he had not been murdered as reported, but they did not find Livingstone.

He notes in his journal on Christmas Day, 1866, "We lost four goats somewhere—stolen or strayed in the pathless forest, we do not know which, but the loss I felt keenly for whatever kind of food we had, a little milk made it all right, and I felt strong and well; but coarse food, hard of digestion without it, was very trying."

A month later he wrote that two more natives had deserted him. "To make the loss more galling, they took what we could least spare—the medicine box, which they would only throw away as soon as they came to examine their booty . . . The fugitives . . . took all the dishes, a large box of powder, the flour, the tools, two guns and a cartridge pouch; but the medicine chest was the sorest loss of all! I felt as if I had now received the sentence of death, like poor Bishop Mackenzie." The bishop, you will remember, had died of fever.

Isolation and Illness

For four years, from 1867 to 1871, he explored the region west and northwest of Lake Tanganyika. Only a few native carriers were with him. For months at a time he heard nothing from Europe, although a few pouches of mail came through safely. He wrote many letters, but only a few of them ever reached the persons to whom they were addressed. His teeth were bad, and he was often desperately ill. On May 1, 1867, he wrote in his journal, "I had another fit of insensibility last night; the muscles of the back lose all power, and there is constant singing in the ears, and inability to do the simplest sums." Yet he went on for another six years. He was determined to open Africa.

An Attempt on His Life

He describes an attempt on his life in August, 1871, while he was returning from the country called Manyuema. "A large spear from my right hand lunged past me, and almost grazed my back, and stuck firmly into the soil . . . . As they are expert with the spear, I do not know how it missed, except that he was too sure of his aim, and the good hand of God was upon me.

"I was behind the main body, and all were allowed to pass till I, the leader, . . . came up to the point where they lay. A red jacket they had formerly seen me wearing was proof to them that I was the same that sent Bin Juna to kill five of their men, capture eleven women and children, and twenty-five goats. Another spear was thrown at me by an unknown assailant, and it missed by about a foot in front."

Later the same day he passed a tree which had been burned so that it fell toward him, missing him by only a yard. "Three times in one day was I delivered from impending death. We had five hours of running the gauntlet, waylaid by spearmen, who all felt that if they killed me they would be revenging the death of relations."

His attendants came running back after the attack, calling out, "Peace! Peace! You will finish your work in spite of these people, in spite of everything." He adds, "Like them, I took it as an omen of good success to crown me yet, thanks to the 'Almighty Preserved of men.'"

Yet as he approached Ujijii he was quite discouraged. "All the traders were returning successful; I alone had failed and experienced worry, thwarting, baffling, when almost in sight of the end toward which I strained."

On October 23, 1871, "a mere ruckle of bones," he reached Ujiji, on the east shore of Lake Tanganyika. Here he hoped to find a supply of goods which he had ordered and paid for. But instead he found that the Arab to whom they were consigned, "a moral idiot," had "divined on the Koran" and learned that that Livingstone was dead; whereupon he had sold the entire lot and spent the proceeds! There was no law to punish the thief. Livingstone sat down to wait until more goods could be brought from Zanzibar, five hundred miles away.

ship through hobbies—yes, and through loafing. "Loaf and invite your soul," wrote Walt Whitman.

Now, a time budget would become a nuisance if one should be a slave to it. It would then defeat its own purpose. This article is no plea for meticulous measuring of one's time, nor for an over-conscientious scrutiny of every activity that gets into one's schedule.

The importance of a time budget rests in the value of protecting time for important things. For instance, it is important that one should give the necessary portion of one's leisure-time to the cultivation of permanent recreational interests—to those activities that grow in interest with the years. At fifty you will get as much fun out of them as at fifteen—perhaps more. Cultural and creative activities would get into your list—music, reading, drama, art, hobbies. "My Old Age Security" was the title of an article appearing in Reader's Digest several years ago. The woman writing it said that leisure-time interests would be her security against being dead ten years before they buried her.

Jesus and Time

No one ever realized the presciousness of time more than did Jesus of Nazareth. Every moment of His earthly ministry was precious to Him. Doubtless on more than one occasion there fell from His lips the memorable words : "I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day: the night cometh when no man can work." (John 9:4).

ALCOHOLISM INJURES THE WHOLE MAN

Alcoholism affects the afflicted individual adversely in all social aspects—marriage, job, religion, citizenship, property care and ownership, neighborhood and friendship associations, and so on; it affects the entire emotional life; it usually deteriorates physical well-being. Adverse circumstances, illnesses or accidents may affect an individual in his amusements, in his daily routine, in his family life, or in several ways at once; rarely do they affect all of his life activities, relationships and benefits, and affect all of them adversely. Alcoholism does. As a problem, alcoholism has increased significance because when it strikes the individual it hits his entire existence.

Alcohol does not afflict the individual for a week or a month or a year as do most accidents and diseases; unless successful remedy intervenes, it will afflict the individual for life.—SELDEN D. BACON, Ph. D., Professor of Sociology, Yale University and Yale School of Alcohol Studies.

Beyond Our Own

MISSOURI—Bad weather during the growing season left many sharecropper families in debt at the end of last year. Now the mechanical cotton picker and last year's Cotton Acreage Control Act, shifting production from large plantations to smaller individual farms, have thrown thousands out of work. Unemployment is estimated at 15,000 in Southeastern Missouri alone.

PORTLAND, OREGON, became the second largest city in the United States to ban discrimination against members of minority groups in public places. A resolution passed unanimously by the city council makes it illegal for restaurants, hotels, or other public places to refuse service to any one because of race. Violation carries the penalty of a $500 fine, a six-month jail sentence or both.—Gospel Messenger

NEW YORK—The informality of the American high school classroom amazed the twenty-five students of Asiatic countries visiting the United States for a ten-week stay. They were guests of the annual student government convention of the New York public high schools. One of the Burmese students said that students and teachers can work together for a better world understanding.—Gospel Messenger

ACCORDING to the Veterans Administration, about 25,000,000 Americans have participated in the wars of the United States. Of these, about 934,000 died in service and 19,000,000 are still living. There are 15,252,000 veterans of World War II now living as civilians.—Watchman-Examiner

RECENTLY MOST of the world's Protestant churches have been faced with a perennial shortage of ministers. Last month, however, the Norwegian Lutheran Church reported that it had a surplus of 603 clergymen. Despite this figure there is no unemployment among the clergy. Most of the excess ministers are serving on church organizations or teaching school.—Presbyterian Life

WASHINGTON. The American Indian problem is ripe for restudy, John R. Nichols, Indian Commissioner said in his annual report.

"The 400,000 Indians in the United States, with their 56,000,000 acres of undeveloped lands, represent human and natural resources which our nation cannot afford to neglect," Mr. Nichols said.

Declaring that the Indian farm family's average annual income is about $500 at a time when the national farm average is $2,500, Mr. Nichols said the whole Indian problem should be "brought under scrutiny and solutions mapped out."

"At a time when we are sharing our resources with other peoples throughout the world," he said, "we should deal no less generously with the Indian citizens of our country who have endured so much for so long."—Ch. Science Monitor

Summer-Service Conference

A conference of M.C.C.-Summer-Service Unit leaders was held in Chicago on April 21-22. This meeting held each spring has a significant value in establishing basic plans for wholesome religious and educational activities in all the summer units, and affords opportunity to emphasize to the leaders the importance of maintaining a distinct spiritual tone in all unit work and life. A number of resource leaders assisted in the meeting.

Persons desiring to enroll for Summer Service should have submitted application by April 24.

Looking Toward Freeman

Conference is a time of evaluating past efforts, planning for the future, attempting to discover areas of unchristian thought and conduct, and above all, the time of renewed commitment to our Lord and His Kingdom.

General Conference seeks to voice and interpret historic beliefs in present day conditions and needs. I believe that our conference is earnestly seeking to win lost men and women to new life in Christ and surrender to Him as the Lord of our lives. Such surrender will result in a Christlike life and attitude in personal, social, racial, and economic relationships.

General Conference must have the whole hearted support of district conferences if it is to be successful in reaching its spiritual objectives. District conferences and local churches may divert the interest, manpower, and financial support which should go to Conference missions and institutions, to causes which in some areas of faith and life are opposed to Biblical beliefs as we understand them. Our independent, congregational church life makes possible the absorption of ideas which eventually destroy the Christian way of life as known and taught by our fathers. District conferences "Looking toward Freeman" will prepare by surrendering to Christ as Saviour and Lord, by commitment to love as a way of life, by lovingly accepting as brethren all who have surrendered to Christ and by encouraging local churches to give priority to Conference causes in finances and manpower. May all of us come to Freeman dedicated to the ministry of reconciliation committed unto us.

Editorials

IT IS A VERY HEALTHY THING for a congregation, as it looks over the past year of activities, to make a functional survey and report of its work as well as an organizational survey. This is especially true of stewardship. For the church that has never done it, it often proves to be a real eye-opener to add up all the funds given through all the various organizations for the various causes such as expenses of the home church, missions, relief, education, etc., putting them in the form of a chart in the annual report of the congregation to its people. Often such figures are hidden away in the annual Conference Yearbook, not being called to the attention of the local congregation. This happens because it has not been customary in many congregations to make this a part of report at their annual meeting largely due to the fact that it is usually difficult to gather all the figures in time to prepare a composite report. There is nothing however that will be of more help to the layman, who, because of the large number of offerings each week for various church causes, is usually very much in the fog about where to give how much. The intelligent layman believes that with the help of prayer and proper information he should be able to plan his giving. The leadership of the church and the Conference should do all in its power to help the layman.

CONSTITUTIONAL REVISION will be a major item of business at the coming session of General Conference at Freeman, South Dakota in August. For this item of business it is highly important that delegates come well prepared in advance. Several factors must be kept in mind as delegates prepare to discuss and, under God, decide on this vital issue. The first is that of the nature and purpose of a constitution. A constitution is intended to formulate in a mutually acceptable fashion tested procedures that will help a given group carry out its responsibility democratically and efficiently. At the time of the formation of the General Conference two areas of responsibility were in the forefront—missions and education for such mission. While these two emphases—experience and expression—are still basic in the total Conference program there has been an ever widening of the horizons in which we have responsibility to make these emphases operate. At first the extent of mission work was among the American Indians and the extent of the education was to prepare young people specifically for such work. Since that time the mission work has expanded geographically to include all parts of the globe and in terms of method to include the ministry to the whole man as an expression of the fundamental concern of redemption patterned after the life, ministry, and atoning death of Christ; now, the message of salvation is born by representatives of such widely divergent vocations as evangelists, doctors, relief workers, teachers, builders, mechanics, mental hospital attendants, and others. Similarly, the concern of education was restricted to the specific preparation of missionaries alone. Now, however, this has grown to be a matter of providing the type of experience that will give to the whole church and to the individual members the sense of thrust or desire to share the gospel of saving grace. Our organization has grown because our vision of the Lord Jesus Christ has been enlarged. Our vision of the Lord has enlarged because we have been thrust into a world no longer limited by space and time and because the problems of that world seen in the light of the Word of God demand our giving the Christian answer as Amos did in Old Testament times and Paul in New Testament times. As ancient as Genesis and as up-to-date as the morning newspaper is our eternal obligation to present the whole gospel to the whole world—the Light of Christ for the whole of life. Thus our Christian responsibility today is many-sided and yet quite singular. Our ministries are many, but our motive and message is one. The increase of the ministries serve to give the gospel more voices, provided the people ministering are motivated by the living Christ. But as the ministries become diversified there is increased opportunity for one or the other of the "members of the body" to lose sight of the other members. There is also the possibility for one or the other of these members to duplicate the task of another, making for inefficiency which ultimately adds up to lack of opportunity for some of the lost to be found. We ought to think of the problem of constitutional revision as one in which we as a Conference, after having been on our knees to God, seek to organize our work—our members or ministries—so that we shall reach the fullness of the stature of Christ for our time. Nothing less than that can be the will of God.

MOST PEOPLE ARE PROBABLY WONDERING what happened to the "Langer" bill to prohibit the transport in interstate commerce of advertising relating to alcoholic beverages, proposed in the Senate, which caused such a furore at the beginning of the present session of Congress. Well, the bill was killed in committee with four members not voting and no record of who voted for it. Although it brought a flood of petitions, crowds of adherents of the dry forces, and the largest amount of mail in its favor as compared with other issues, to the desk of Congressmen, this legislation will not even be reported to the floor with an unfavorable report!—More favorable news from Washington has it that the cut-off date for admission of D.P.'s to this country is extended from June 1950 to June 1951; that the total to be admitted is raised from 205,000 D.P.'s and 27,372 expellees to 344,000 D.P.'s and 54,744 expellees—persons of German ethnic origin who had been driven from their homelands outside of Germany—and 20,000 nonquota war orphans; that the requirement that 40 per cent of the immigrants come from Baltic countries and that 30 per cent be farmers has been eliminated.—Another item of some interest is that the Supreme Court in Washington has agreed to review the case of Larry Gara, who was convicted a year ago and imprisoned for encouraging a non-registrant at Bluffton College. The conviction was sustained by the Appeal Court even though it was clearly shown that the non-registrant had made up his mind before meeting Gara.

If You Are Buying An Organ

by Orlando Schmidt

(The following article was written after the writer contacted a number of organ builders as well as the Associated Pipe Organ Builders of America and the American Guild of Organists. Various brands of organs are referred to by letters "A" and "B"; individuals desiring detailed information about this may write the writer. Ed.)

ALTHOUGH organs have been used in Mennonite churches since 1764, not until recent years have many of our General Conference churches seen a need for such instruments in their worship services. Because of recent developments in the field of electronic instruments, most churches have been buying them, rather than a pipe organ. In the light of such a trend, we have before us what has become a real problem—the pipe organ versus the electronic organ. Because of many preconceived ideas and lack of information concerning these instruments, the problem in many churches has not been "shall it be an electronic or a pipe organ," but rather "what kind of an electronic shall it be?" Other reasons for this have been the intense salesmanship on the part of those selling electronics and the failure of church committees to investigate the possibilities offered by builders of pipe organs.

Price: Little to No Difference

The problem that looms highest in the eyes of most church committees is that of price. Most people feel that a pipe organ is naturally the most desirable instrument for a church service, but because it costs so many thousands of dollars, the average church cannot even think of purchasing one. It is true that a few organ builders have taken very little interest in building small organs for churches with a limited budget. But a number of organ builders have realized the problems of the smaller churches and have put a great deal of emphasis on the design and building of smaller pipe organs, such as are more or less competitive in the price range of the electronics. Today there are at least seven well-known organ builders offering pipe organs ranging in price from $3,000 to $5,000. These organs consist of three to eight ranks, which means there are approximately 225 to 450 pipes in one organ. Such organs, though small, have 20 to 37 stops. The builders claim that the musical resources of these organs are superior to those of any electronic instrument, and will more than outplay what they consider to be a "substitute instrument." Many of these organs are not entirely "custom-built" but are more or less standard instruments, often self-contained in one case.

Churches with congregations of 300 or more will of course want to investigate the larger organs, which are generally priced according to individual situations, ranging from $750 to $1,000 per rank. Church committees should recognize the fact that custom-built organs can be improved throughout the years by adding more pipes and other accessories.

The prices of Brand "A" electronic organs, which do not claim to be an imitation of the pipe organ, range from $2,177 to $3,170. Other electronic organs, which try to imitate the pipe organ in every possible way, cost from $3,500 to $4,500.

Tone: A Difference in Kind

A second factor in selecting an organ is that of tone. Tone generation in pipe organs is based on the same principle that produces the sound of the human voice. In electronic instruments tone is produced by tone wheels, reeds or photo-electric cells and is then amplified and sent over one or more loud-speakers. It is, at its best, an imitation of real organ tone. Theoretically when electrical currents are fed into a good cone speaker, almost any musical effect can be produced; but up to this time electronics have been unable to reproduce the "mass effect" of the pipe organ and to do away entirely with loud-speaker tone. Thus an electronic can be quite satisfactory for soft solo work but is not at all adequate as a substantial foundation in congregational singing. Other things involved in evaluating tone production are tone dispersion, pitch uncertainty, and ensemble tone. Electronics are also extremely sensitive to acoustic conditions. This is probably the reason an instrument might sound one way in the salesroom but quite differently after installation in the church. The Brand "B" electronic organ has probably made the greatest strides in overcoming difficulties of tone production

Families Help Families

NEW MILESTONE FOR M.C.C.

by Doreen Harms

PICTURE with me, will you, a typical farm home in the Ukraine or maybe in Latvia in 1938. The lay of the country may be a bit different and the surroundings and the environment would be new to us, but if we would open the door and get a glimpse of the family inside, the sight would be strangely familiar. Most likely we would see there a happy family living peacefully, comfortably, and normally just as you and I.

From Comfort to Outcasts in Seven Years

Now picture the same family again seven years later. Their home is deserted, plundered, or bombed. They have wandered westward in a nightmare of flight into Germany to escape hostile forces. There in crowded air raid shelters, in congested D.P. camps, the family is forced to exist. The father or the brother is exiled, perhaps some member of the family was separated in flight. For years they wander from one camp to another, clad in ragged and tattered clothing and eking out a bare hand-to-mouth existence, comfort and convenience a forgotten luxury, and thankful for merely a roof above their heads and a little corner in a crowded room in which to sit or lie down. These are the people we as Christians long to help today. They need it desperately.

Protestants Have Lagged in Helping

Among the millions of homeless people, there were about 13,000 Russian Mennonite refugees. These have been and still are the concern of the Mennonite Church, most of them having migrated to new homelands in Canada and South America, and a few to the United States. Very few Mennonite D.P.'s will be able to enter the States; this will give the Mennonite people in the United States an opportunity to receive and assist some of these many other suffering people. The Protestant churches have lagged behind the better organized Catholic and Jewish agencies in assisting these unfortunate needy people, and earnest pleas have gone out to all Protestants everywhere to rise to the task. The Mennonite Churches through the Mennonite Central have offered to receive 1,500 non-Mennonite Protestant D.P.'s. The Mennonite sponsors in the U. S. have shown a sincere interest in the Mennonite refugees and now that the doors have opened for this wider service to D.P.'s, this interest will surely grow.

Basis of Assignment

Non-Mennonite families have been assignd to those sponsors who have indicated their desire in receiving one, and it is necessary to locate additional sponsors among our Mennonites in the United States for the remainder of the non-Mennonite Protestant families. M.C.C. workers abroad interview all intending immigrants and select them for Mennonite sponsorship on the basis of their resettlement possibilities and on their agricultural interest and experience as well as on church interest that may be served by either Mennonite or non-Mennonite churches.

Several non-Mennonite Protestant families have been received by Mennonite sponsors and in general they have worked out quite well and many are going to Mennonite churches. They are, almost without excepand gives the most satisfactory imitation of the pipe organ.

A third element in selecting an organ is that of space. A pipe organ generally takes more space than an electronic, however pipe organs are available in an enclosed case. This matter must receive careful study by both the church and organ builder. Even a perfectly made, finely voiced pipe organ, if deprived of proper room or if misplaced in the church, may give unsatisfactory service. In planning a new church building, the organ should be considered very seriously by both the church and the architect.

Maintenance and Durability: a Variable Factor

The elements of maintenance and durability should interest church committees. One of the arguments given in favor of electronics is the small amount of expense and upkeep required. Actual experience of churches has been varied. Some have had to cope with constant repairs, while others have had very little expense. The Brand "A" electronic organ probably has a lower operating cost than any other organ. It is difficult to compare the durability of any electronic with that of a pipe organ since electronics have been developed only recently. Pipe organs usually last a life time and have often been used for several generations. The upkeep of a pipe organ, however should be considered carefully before installation. It should be tuned and checked at regular intervals. This is generally arranged with the organ builder when the instrument is installed. Churches isolated in rural areas should consider this very carefully. An organ that is used often will give less trouble than one used only on Sunday morning. Changes in temperature do not hurt an organ unless there is extreme cold, in which case there might be some temporary disturbance.

The final selection of an organ must be based on the personal taste of the people who will use the instrument. Because it plays such an important part in the worship service, church committees should give ample time to investigation of actual installations, both pipe organs and electronics. This should include a demonstration of every kind of music that an organ is required to produce. Committees should contact several builders of pipe organs to discover just what can be done for their church. No conclusions should be based only on heresay and sales talk. Earnest effort and careful selection can give to any church an instrument that will be thoroughly effective in the worship of God.

The Revision of the Constitution of the General Conference: Its Need and Purpose

by H. A. Fast

THE present authorization to revise the constitution of the General Conference received its original impetus from the report of a study delivered at the 29th session of the Conference held at Souderton, Pennsylvania in August 1941. One of the Conference boards had requested a study of "The Duplication and Overlapping of the Duties of the Various Boards and Committees of the General Conference." This study had revealed certain weaknesses in our Conference program of service due in part to looseness of organization and lack of close coordination.

Nine Years of Background

The Conference, true to Paul's admonition to "abound in the work of the Lord" took this report seriously and ordered "a committee of nine to study further the problem of closer interrelations of the different boards and committees of this Conference and that of the committees of the six different conferences corresponding to the same, for more effective work; and that this committee present plans and recommendations at the next General Conference session." This committee came to be known as the Coordinating Committee.

Seven Leading Questions

The committee appointed felt that the best approach to its task was to look at the whole of our present conference program and how we were organized for it, and then ask itself questions like the following:

1. Can the conference organization be simplified without loss of efficiency?
2. Can the administration of our conference program be made more effective and efficient so that time, effort, and money are used to best advantage?
3. Can efficiency of operation be achieved without loss of the priceless values of democratic functioning?
4. Can the working relationships of our conference organization be so set up as to promote the spirit of unity and understanding?
5. Do we have adequate and easy channels of clearance on problems that arise?
6. Do boards and Conference committees have a clear understanding of the full sphere of their responsibility?
7. Can anything be done to bring about a closer relationship of cooperation between the program and work of the Conference and that of the district conferences?

The committee in its study sought to profit by the experience of others. It contacted by mail and by personal interview leaders of other denominational groups and studied their methods of work and their form of organization. In this manner very valuable suggestions were received.

Immediate Steps Within Present Constitution

In its attempt to find an answer to its task the committee looked for practical and immediate way of cooperation which would require no amending of the constitution. Its findings and recommendations were then presented to the various boards and to the Conference Executive Committee for criticism and suggestion before they were presented to the Conference.

Its reports to the 1945 Conference session presented a plan of cooperation and coordination whereby Conference boards and committees with similar or related interests were grouped together around some larger center of interest and work and were then encouraged to seek ways of working together for the good of all and of each. It also recommended an annual union meeting of boards and standing committees in a Council of Boards session. It likewise recommended a plan for closer cooperation between the General Conference and the district conferences.

These recommendations of the committee were adopted and boards and committees were urged to put into operation as much as possible the suggested plan of cooperation. The Coordinating Committee was retained and instructed to continue with its study.

Revision Authorized by 1947 Conference

When the next session of the General Conference convened in 1947 it had become evident that a revision of the constitution was inevitable. Various amendments to the constitution had been passed since the last revision, new situations needed to be provided for and a new printing of the constitution was in any case imperative. The Conference therefore authorized the Coordinating Committee to "revise the constitution, present it to the Executive Committee for review and publication in time to be considered for adoption at the next session of Conference."

In order to understand clearly its assigned task the Coordinating Committee inquired whether its work was merely to bring the constitution up to date. The answer was to undertake a thoroughgoing revision which would take recognition of the plan of cooperation and coordination adopted by the Conference of 1945.

Not the Brain-Child of a Few

The committee has faithfully labored to follow these instructions working at all times in close cooperation with boards and committees. Progress reports were presented to each annual Council of Boards session and to the Conference Executive Committee and from them it has received much valuable counsel and criticism.

The suggested revision of the constitution is therefore not the brain-child of a few individuals. It has had the benefit of the combined counsel and experience of veteran members of our Conference boards and committees.

Originally the Coordinating Committee was composed of the presidents of district conferences, a member of the Board of Education, Rev. A. J. Dyck then vice-president of the conference and Henry A. Fast serving as chairman. It finally became necessary to fix more definitely the personnel of the committee. The committee which worked since 1947 on the revision of the

WEST-CHINA GENERAL CONFERENCE
MENNONITE MISSION
No. 12 Ssu Dao Kai
Ch'engtu, Sze., China
(Code Address: GECOMM CHENGTU)
February 16, 1950

Dear Homeland Friends and Prayer-helpers:

Greetings in the all-conquering name of Christ, with Psalm 46!

The address at the top is plain I trust, and we wish to make it known that we missionaries in West China are all living at the same address now that the mission has purchased the property where we reside and to which place has also been moved the chapel we used to have at No. 25 Tung Ma P'eng Kai. So there is no residence or chapel-work at our former address on the street called TUNG MA P'ENG KAI (meaning, "East Horse-shed Street").

So all letters and papers, and parcels, if any, should hereafter be addressed as you see at the top, No. 12 Ssu Dao Kai, Ch'engtu, Sze., China. This goes for the following personnel: Misses E. D. Goertz and Wilhelmina Kuyf, and P. J. and Frieda Boehr.

Brother W. C. Voth has his address in Hongkong, at 33 Granville Road, Lutheran World Federation, Kowloon, Hongkong.

With this notice we wish also to inform all our friends, who wish to know our address, that we had our mail addressed "Via Hongkong" for sometime; but that route is very slow now since "liberation," as it takes letters a full month to reach us here from Hongkong, and some have already come through from the States written since the New Year, that were addressed directly to us here at Ch'engtu, and also came through from the U.S.A. in a month. It seems airmail letters from Canada or the U. S. A., addressed directly to us would make the best time possible. So far for information on addressing us.

It is with a deep feeling of gratitude to our Heavenly Father that the Gospel work has been able to continue without serious interruption, and that there is good attendance on Christian services at our three chapels—this one here next to our rooms in the yard, the Tea-House chapel a short distance from here and just inside the West City Gate, and in the West Suburb, about 20 minutes walk from here. There has been such a demand for room to house some of the workers in the West Suburb, and to have a more suitable room for Gospel Preaching away from the noise of the main street on which the West Suburb chapel is, that the local church has undertaken to erect a chapel to seat about 200 people inside the yard there, and it is far enough along already so we can hold meetings in this largely completed chapel during the Chinese New Year's days just ahead of us now (the 1st is on Friday, February 18).

We covet much your warm and believing prayers for these three soul-clinics here in West China, as out of the work in these three places have come 46 pre-

From the Heart to the Heart

No One to Help

by David Neufeld

The impotent man answered him, Sir, I have no man, when the water is troubled, to put me into the pool, but while I am coming another steppeth down before me. (John 5:7)

THE CITY of Jerusalem has long been considered a symbol of culture and progress. Most of all, it has stood as the home of true religion. Jerusalem looks back upon a remarkable history. Great emperors have claimed her as their prey; great heroes have fought within her walls; great prophets have spoken divinely inspired words in her streets; the cultures of Greece had come into her borders, and Rome had given her a fine pattern of government. Religion in Jerusalem was at its height, scholarly men were interpreting the laws of Sinai to all who would listen.

David P. Neufeld
Instructor
Didsbury, Alberta Bible School

Despite the fact that scholars were very zealously learning about the law of loving one's neighbor as oneself, there lay outside of the city walls a group of forgotten people. Not that these unfortunates had come only recently, oh no, some of the inmates of the Bethesda hospital had been there for more than thirty-eight years. But the Jews saw in these patients nothing more than a social burden, and chose to forget them rather than to help them.

The Man from Nazareth, however, did not forget them. He visited them, comforted them, and healed them. He came to the infirm man, who had suffered so long, and chatted with him. The outcome of the conversation was a confession from the patient: I have no man . . . . to put me into the pool. For one this was

A Testimony of His Inability to Help Himself.

Through the years it had become clear to him that his own efforts were unable to bring about the desired results. He probably used every nerve and fiber of his frail body to reach the healing waters first, but all was in vain. How well it portrays our own experiences! Once we were so anxious to achieve true happiness, but found it quite impossible because of sin in our lives. Even our most sincere resolutions proved to be a failure because we were unable to live up to them. Only when man accepts the salvation wrought on Calvary can he become truly happy and victorious. During his last hours in 1851 Archibald Alexander of Princeton testified, "All my theology is reduced to this narrow compass: Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners." Jesus is still concerned about those who are unable to help themselves.

The words of the impotent man betray a note that sounds a little like

An Accusation of His Fellow Men

There were plenty of people in Jerusalem who could well afford to help this patient at Bethesda, but no one was willing. The needs brought about by human suffering are as great to-day as they were at the time of Jesus. We have no idea how many are pointing to the Christians of North America saying, "They will not help." American Mission to Lepers reports that ten million lepers in the world chant for help. Will we fail them? Others are in need of food, and clothes, and books, and teachers. But by far the greatest number is in need of the Bread of Life. If we neglect to get it out we are not doing our duty.

The word of the patient at Bethesda, however, is not only an accusation of his fellow men but is also

An Appeal to Christ For Help

Although the people of Jerusalem were unwilling to help, the Lord Jesus was still concerned. Our negligence does not make Him negligent. And it was well that the impotent man appealed to Christ, for He was and is the source of all healing. So often we feel that we can help ourselves rid ourselves of sin and suffering, only to experience our own inadequacy. We may look to political parties, to social reform, to social welfare to end our griefs, but we will never overcome our present-day difficulties until we too appeal to Christ for help. He is the only answer to a sin-sick soul, and to a sin-sick world.

NEW LAYMEN'S PAMPHLET

ALL churches have by this time received sample copies of the Laymen's pamphlet gotten up under the general supervision of the steering committee consisting of John E. Fretz, J. S. Schultz, and Walter Temple, appointed as an interim committee at our General Conference at Berne in 1947.

This pamphlet, gotten up in attractive colors, with splendid art work is, we hope, the beginning of finer things in publicity for the various organizations of our Conference, and it is appropriate that a group of laymen, dedicated to the work which has been assigned to them, should turn out such a splendid little piece of literature. The art work was done by Charles E. Wiegand.

The author's name appears in the pamphlet nowhere, but it is a pretty good guess that John E. Fretz, one of the devoted laymen of the Eastern District Conference, had his "fingers in the pie" somewhere.

Laymen's organizations are springing up everywhere, and this pamphlet should be a real help to them.

BETHEL COLLEGE

PAUL Erb, editor of the Gospel Herald, who was sent to India as a representative at the celebration of fifty years of Old Mennonite missions in India, spoke to the student body during the regular chapel hour.

Eleanor Thiessen, graduate nurse and senior at Bethel, spoke during the chapel hour on Thursday. Eleanor has a rich background of experience because she spent part of her life in India where her father, John Thiessen, was a missionary.

The Goessel High School choir, consisting of about 75 members, presented a short concert during the chapel hour in Bethel College Friday morning. The director, Elbert Pankratz, is a graduate of Bethel College.

The department of speech and drama presented the play "George Washington Slept Here," Friday and Saturday, April 21, and 22. The play chronicles the tribulations of a family man who craves and gets—"a little place in the country to call his own."

Hulda Penner of Inman, Kans., a senior at Bethel College, has accepted an appointment to instruct in the practical work of nursing art instruction at the Bethel Deaconess Hospital next year. Miss Penner, a major in nursing education, will graduate from Bethel College May 30, 1950.

The following Bethel graduates will study at the Mennonite Biblical Seminary at Chicago next year: La Verne Lindscheid, Leo Miller, Henry Poetker, Marjorie Reimer, Harris Waltner, Grace Liu, and Helmuth Dyck. All of these will graduate May 30 this year. Ferdinand Ediger, who graduated March 1, is studying at the seminary this quarter already.

Calvin Schrag has been accepted for graduate study at Yale University next year. He is also a member of Bethel's graduating class this year.

FREEMAN JUNIOR COLLEGE

ALBERT Ewert of Bridgewater and Dan Neufeld, coach at Tabor College who was the coach at Freeman before going to Tabor two years ago, were recent chapel speakers. The Tabor College Peace Team was with Neufeld.

The University Accrediting Committee visited the campus for inspection purposes the past month. Their report, just received was very favorable and full accreditment was again granted for the present and the coming school year.

At the last faculty fellowship meeting on Friday J. D. Unruh showed a series of colored slides of pictures he took during his stay in Europe.

A technician from the firm supplying the stage equipment directed the installation of this equipment the past week and the two performances of the College play, "Icebound," were given in the Auditorium, April 27 and 28.

SEMINARY CHOIR ON TRIP

THE VESPER Choir left this Saturday for a trip to central Illinois where it was scheduled to present concerts at the Meadows Church on Saturday evening, at the Calvary Church in Washington on Sunday morning, and at the Carlock Church Sunday evening. The group traveled by bus.

Speaking with the same quiet dignity with which he has worked in the Christian ministry for over forty years, J. H. Langenwalter brought the Vesper message last Sunday, April 16. Among the remarkable statements which he made was "I am learning as much at the age of 73 as I did at the age of 17." The Seminary appreciated the visit and fellowship with this veteran of work in our Conference.

Student-faculty discussion group met Monday evening, April 17, to discuss the topic, "Strengths and Weaknesses of the General Conference."

The Women's Fellowship packed clothes for relief on Friday evening, April 21; these clothes to be sent to the Mennonite Central Committee.

Elmer Ediger is leading a conference for M.C.C. Summer Service Unit leaders on April 21 and 22 here at the Seminary. A number of young people from all parts of the Mennonite constituency were present for these sessions. Pictures of the Voluntary Service work of the General Conference and also the M.C.C. were shown on Friday evening.

tion, very appreciative for all that is done for them, and are trying to mold themselves into the new circumstances they find here in America. The first non-Mennonite Protestant family interviewed by our representatives abroad was received in early March. The picture on the front page and the caption underneath presents a fuller story of this.

Meaning of Sponsorship

A sponsor in the United States assures the following for the Displaced Persons: (1 that they will have safe and sanitary housing and adequate employment without displacing some other person from such; (2) that they will not become a public charge to the government; and (3) that their inland rail transportation from port to destination will be assumed. Anyone interested in a sponsorship should write to the Mennonite Aid Section, Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pennsylvania, indicating this. There is no affidavit necessary on D.P. immigration; an indication to the Mennonite Central Committee of your willingness to receive a family is all that is necessary.

Let us rise with one accord as a Mennonite brotherhood and join hands with those needy folks across the ocean and with our strength and support assist them to our shores, to our communities, and to our homes, and thereby, as Paul states in Galatians 5, "By love serve one another."

Wolfgang Fieguth, a German exchange student, related a few of his experiences in Germany. He urged us to correspond with folks over there in Germany and then to send them peace literature that has been translated by the M.C.C. Mary Moyer, a voluntary service worker last summer, showed slides and told us about four different places of voluntary service projects, namely two in New York state, one in Mississippi, and one in Chicago.—Corr.

cious baptized souls in the latter half of 1949. A good group is waiting for the next baptismal instruction class whenever we can hold it. Let us pray especially much in this time of evangelistic opportunity, and to "work while it is day; for the night cometh when no man can work."

For all letters and greetings sent us for Christmas we heartily thank you, but may not get to reply to all of them separately as soon as we would like. Your Christmas greetings for 1949 are coming in now in larger numbers, as mail moves slowly in China now. But we are so glad to get mail, just so we and you keep up the flow of mail, and especially the flow of prayers.

In the Glad Service of the King of Kings,

EXCERPTS FROM ANOTHER LETTER

"WE HAVE been able to hold three Bible Instruction Classes, out of which a total of 46 precious souls could be accepted for baptism in 1949; the third baptismal service was held on Christmas day, when pastor Chang performed the rite of baptism for 18 people. These instruction classes were held both in the West Suburb and here in the city—the last time here at our new address, Number 12 Ssu Dao Kai, where all four of us live since December 6, 1949. We had a happy Christmas and New Year's season, and by and large had a fairly quiet change to the new regime or "liberation." With the exception of a few weeks when it was tense because of the political situation before the liberation, we've had our work going as usual, and now perhaps more than ever, come to the Gospel meetings held nightly at both the West Suburb, and the tea-house chapels. The Sunday morning services are well attended here at Number 12 place, also the English Gospel services each Sunday afternoon at three.

We now have contact again with our Paoki station, where pastor Li Kwang Ming and Mrs. Tuan Li Shen are our Christian workers. There they could also have baptism service on Christmas day, thank God. We also have heard that our Chinese Dr. Hu is back in the Kaichow Mission Hospital but we do not have the details. We understand that railroad service has been opened between Paoki and east China, and we have word that Bro. H. C. Bartel is planning to go for a visit to the China Mennonite Missions Stations in Honan and Shangtung Provinces."

Bluffton College - The Church's Investment in Youth

A Half Century of Progress

(The following is an account of the student life at Bluffton College. Margaret Salzman, Upland, California, has served as editor of these materials. Ed.)

THE TURN of the century saw the humble beginning of a new institution of higher education. The start from one small building and a mere handful of teachers proved to be a rugged road. This group of educators had something else, however, which many others did not possess—they had great vision and deep convictions. Hard knocks were numerous and the dark clouds of failure seemed just beyond the horizon.

Years slowly went by, however, and the light that had been the vision of the first great men began to replace the dark clouds of failure. Rays from this light began to emanate, reaching farther and farther until people began to see its glow. More students, who wanted to receive some of this vision, began coming in from larger and larger areas. Programs and plans which had at one time merely been in mists in someone's mind began to take shape. People began to take an active part in the support of the college and more complete programs could be inaugurated for the liberal and wholesome education of young men and women.

To further promote such a plan, dynamic leaders were brought in and the outlines on paper became reality. The program has been continually changing to include more and more in an effort to develop the individual personality, until today we have a very inclusive scholastic, social, religious, and extra-curricular schedule.

A True Foundation for Life

THE ACTIVITIES in which the young person participates while at Bluffton College are truly the foundation for life. With such a foundation, he is better-fitted to meet the responsibilities and opportunities of the future.

In the scholastic field. Bluffton strives to offer the best in education. It has a large percentage of teachers, ministers, missionaries, doctors, and leaders in various fields listed among its alumni. Its scholastic standing ranks beside and above that of many larger and well-known institutions.

Student Christian Association

OF MAJOR importance among the organizations which foster development in these fields is the Student Christian Association and its various commissions.

The Student Christian Association is beginning its first year at Bluffton College. Just as the name implies, it is an organization of Christian students. The purpose of the association is to provide bi-monthly meetings where issues that confront all Christians, though especially students, are discussed. It is not only an organization of passive listening, but through the committees and commissions, an active program of social service, worship, and recreation are possible. But whether it is in the meetings or in active participation, Christ is the center, as the name of the organization shows—the Student Christian Association.

First allow a brief explanation as to the origin of the Association. In former years it was felt that the campus needed an organization that would meet the needs of almost all students on campus. There were other smaller organizations but these were specialized and many. A group that could help coordinate and direct, and yet appeal to all students, was considered. Last spring a joint committee from the Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A. met and as a result the S.C.A. was born.

This nucleus organization, in cooperation with other groups on the campus such as the Men's and Women's Gospel Teams, The Peace Action Club, and the Recreation Club, is attempting to unify and direct all the programs and the projects that have previously been overlapping. Not only does this arrangement prevent overlapping but through this system planned cooperation is possible. As in the case of relief drives for needy peoples, the annual Christian Life Week on campus, which formerly called for special committees appointed by the administration, now naturally comes from the Student Christian Association as a whole.

This is a tremendous stride toward a unified, composite whole to include all realms of the Christian life on campus. Heretofore each organization went its own way, while now these related groups are airing their problems and discussing their plans with others.

The S.C.A. is similar to a church. The relation between the Gospel Teams and the Recreation commission and the Peace commissions is similar to the relation between the Christian Endeavor and the Men's Brotherhood to the entire church. The S.C.A. like the church is the overall functioning body that includes everyone, while the commissions are the individual areas of special interest. S.C.A. covers the entire Christian life while the commissions give one an opportunity to be active in a specific area of Christian work. The following paragraphs will explain the work of these specific commissions.

Gospel Teams

WHAT are the Gospel Teams? What do the Gospel Teams do? Do the Gospel Teams serve any purpose on the campus or in the surrounding communities?

These, plus numerous other questions, enter the minds of many individuals who are not directly connected with the Gospel Teams or who know very little of the history and the function of the organizations.

The Men's Gospel Team was organized approximately sixteen years ago, for the purpose of having an organization in which the men could discuss certain spiritual problems which arise in the lives of the students. A few years later the women formed a similar organization for the same purpose. These organizations have been progressing and serving since that time.

The Gospel Teams' (both men and women) greatest work, perhaps, is that which comes under the heading of deputation. Quartets and speakers visit various churches throughout the Eastern, Middle, Central, and Northern Districts of the General Conference.

This type of work might be classified as "foreign" deputation. The "home" deputation, which has just been begun by the Gospel Teams this year, is progressing very rapidly. This work includes presenting monthly devotional programs, of both music and word, at the Rescue Mission, the Tuberculosis Sanitarium, and the Old Folks' Home in Lima, Ohio.

The Gospel Teams have bi-monthly meetings for the purpose of giving the students opportunity for discussion of their problems. The students formulate their own programs, often inviting ministers from surrounding churches or faculty members are asked to assist in the discussion and to give advice.

This year the women have centered their program around the theme "More Abundant Everyday Christian Living"; while the men have chosen for their theme, "The Mature Christian."

For a number of years the Gospel Teams have had for their project the raising of funds for the purchase of a car which could be used for deputation work. This car has now been purchased and has been presented to the college for such use. Projects such as this are financed by offerings received from deputation programs presented throughout the different districts.

The Gospel Teams aim to live up to their name. They are striving to bring the gospel to people. All the young men and women associated with the work of the Gospel Teams go forth with this thought from Colossians 1:18 in mind: "That in all things HE might have preeminence."

College Church

UNTIL last year when the activities of the campus were reorganized under the S.C.A., College Church was a separate body organized and planned by an appointed comittee. It has now been placed in the hands of the Devotional Committee of the S.C.A.

The Committee's purpose is to present to the student the direction and incentive for a spiritual life that will work with the activities of the Student Christian Association to make him a better Christian student. College Church is the main avenue of the Committee's work.

College Church programs endeavor to meet the needs of all the students on campus. Its programs vary from panel discussions on student problems, or a movie such as "Beyond Our Own," to a hymn sing. Its meetings are held each Sunday evening. The more informal programs are held in front of a roaring fire in Lincoln Hall lobby, while worship services are held in the chapel.

One very unusual program was presented by two of our negro students who had formed a family quartet. They sang negro spirituals in the traditional manner of their people. Later, the students also joined them in singing these great songs.

At the beginning of the year a student dedication program and candlelight service was held. It attempted to bring to each student's mind his individual importance in the over-all work of the Student Christian Association on the campus. As the light from the center candle was passed from student to student, each pledged cooperation and service to each other and to our central goal, Christ.

Peace Action Club

THE Peace Action Club is an organization whose main function is to promote peace in every sense of the word—world peace and brotherhood through an understanding of the viewpoints and ideologies of other peoples; communal peace through the acquisition of the ability to live with and understand the nature of the people with whom there is closer contact; and, individual peace with one-self by attempting to find satisfactory answers to life issues and by formulating a desirable life philosophy. Much time has been spent in discussing and thinking through such things as "God," "Love," "Conscience," etc.

Deputation work in churches is another phase of our work. The theme for this year is "Our Times"—the chaos of our times, Christianity's answer for our times, and the individual's responsibility in our times. In addition, a short one-act play is being produced for presentation in the churches as a part of our deputation work.

In the Peace Action Club there is also opportunity to participate in such campus activities as chapel and relief drives. Opportunity has also come to provide peace literature for our brothers in other lands who have no access to such material.

Thus, the Peace Action club works on, striving to attain their goal of world-wide peace.

Relief Drives

TWELVE million are still desperate" was the slogan that inaugurated this year's Relief Committee's activities on the Bluffton College campus. In cooperation with the First Mennonite Church in Bluffton, the students conducted a clothing drive, collecting on the campus and in the town one and one half tons of clothing. The clothing was separated, packed into boxes, and then shipped by the M.C.C. to northwestern Europe.

Following the clothing drive a campaign to raise money for foreign students in all parts of the world was started. An average of one dollar per student was collected and sent to the World Student Service Fund to be used for the purchasing of textbooks, medicines, laboratory equipment, and food.

Plans for the future program include monthly drives until the close of the school year.

International Relations Club

THE purpose of the International Relations Club (I.R.C.) is that of giving students a chance to study and discuss the various international problems.

In order to get a better understanding of these problems, outside speakers, as well as our own professors, and students from other countries are called upon to give their views and take part in discussions. The Bluffton I.R.C. feels very fortunate in having a number of foreign students each year and is glad to have them explain such problems from their countries' viewpoint as well as give their personal views.

Not only do we think it wise to discuss current news with students on our own campus, but we believe it is to our advantage to discuss these international problems with students from other colleges and universities. With this in mind, delegates from our I.R.C. attended the Ohio I.R.C. convention at Otterbein College this year. Plans are being made to send a delegation to Wilberforce State University to attend their "International Day" program and also to the regional and national I.R.C. conventions.

Recreation Club

THE Recreation Club at Bluffton College has played a very important part in the eyes of the students. During the last several years nearly everyone on the campus has taken an active part in its functions and activities.

The Recreation Club has three purposes, the first being to develop new leaders from among the members of the club itself. Each takes some responsibility at the bi-weekly meetings and at the various parties that are sponsored by the organization. The members join voluntarily at the beginning of the school year, and at present the club has approximately twenty-four members. Students from every class are eligible to join and to participate on an equal basis.

The second purpose of the club is to furnish wholesome Christian recreational activities for the physical, mental, and social development of all the people on the Bluffton campus.

In the third place, the club attempts, through parties and other functions, to develop a closer understanding among the faculty and students. The participation of faculty members and students together on a common level in the various games and activities is a great influence in the creation of such a spirit of unity in the life of the school.

Various types of parties are planned so that those who cannot participate in one will be able to do so in another. The aim of all of the parties is to provide recreation that will allow everyone attending to feel at ease, to get his mind off of his studies and worries, and to associate on common ground with all of the other students and faculty.

The Recreation Club begins its work on the first day of the Freshman Week, which precedes the opening of classes in the fall. Campus tours are arranged to help the new students to orient themselves to their new surroundings so that as soon as possible they might feel at home on the college campus.

The "Rec" Club also sponsors a hay ride, wiener roasts, a Sadie Hawkins Ray Race and party when the girls chase the fellows of their hearts' desire to get them for their dates to the party in the evening, roller-skating parties and swimming parties.

The Recreation Club in this manner has played an important part in furnishing worthwhile recreational activities for the students, and aids in developing citizens who can return to their home communities with the ability to organize types of recreation valuable to such a group.

Looking Ahead to Another Half Century of Progress

A GLIMPSE of Bluffton College would not be complete unless some idea of its future plans were presented. The spirit of unselfishness and vision still rules today and the thoughts of leaving greater and better things for posterity are very prevalent.

To help develop strong bodies as well as good minds, a large new gymnasium is under construction on the campus of Bluffton College. It is hoped that by the the opening of next school year the many people who are actively supporting this worthy project will see it in operation.

In our library we are continually adding to the number of books and periodicals, thus keeping us near the trend of world affairs and the thoughts of great men.

Most important is the greatest desire and aim of all—to instill in the students of today the ideals of love, tolerance, and fair play, thus endeavoring to make them better citizens of tomorrow: citizens who will be worthy to carry the torch of Christ and be numbered among those of Christendom. To accomplish these ends we have the inceasing struggle and perseverance of teachers who continually attempt to pass on to the citizens of tomorrow those everlasting truths that will make us free.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA. The Prophetic Bible Conference at Grace Bible Institute is to be held July 25-28, 1950. The speakers for the conference are as follows: Theodore H. Epp, G. P. Schultz, A. H. Unruh, C. F. Derstine, J. J. Kleinsasser, Henry H. Janzen, J. B. Smith, and B. D. Reimer. During the evening meetings L. V. Mick will show motion pictures from Palestine illustrating fulfillment of prophetic truth.

CHICAGO Recent traffic figures indicate that the drunk "Man of Distinction" on the highways is of less danger to the public than the merely "had been drinking driver," reports the American Business Men's Research Foundation. Offical figures from San Diego from January 1946 to January 1948 show that the "had been drinking driver" killed 2.4 more in auto accidents than obviously drunk drivers; turned over in the road in 10 per cent of his accidents while obviously drunk drivers did so in only 7 per cent of theirs; and finally that "had been drinking drivers" ran into pedestrians twice as often as their more completely plastered fellow victims.

Also to be noted in this 30 months' record is that the only slightly intoxicated drivers were involved in some 25% of the 12,782 accidents in San Diego during those months, but that 22,196 drivers were involved in these accidents, accenting the often overlooked fact that a sober driver is not immune from an accident with a "had been drinking driver."

BROOKLYN. Recently in one of the orthodox synagogues of Brooklyn during certain days of repentance and prayer, Jews were seen lying on their faces before God, crying to him for protection upon their persecuted brethren, especially in Russia. One elderly Jew lifted up his hands toward heaven and in an agony of soul, cried out: "Oh, that Thou wouldest rend the heavens and come down . . . Lord," he said, "Send Messiah, and should Jesus of the Gentiles be the one, grant us a sign that we may be sure that it is really so, and forgive our guilt toward him."—The Watchman Examiner

Book Notes . . . . BOOKS FOR FAMILY WEEK

Mother's Day brings thoughts of the duties and privileges of the Christian Home. Among books new and old the following list is suggestive of this season.

Asch, Sholem, Mary. Putman c1949

A novel about the Mother of Jesus and her Son by the author of The Nazarene and The Apostle.

Booth-Clibborn, Catherine, Our Children. Doran, 1925

The author, who is the eldest daughter of General Booth of the Salvation Army, dedicates this book "To my fourteen grandchildren with the prayer that they may all become valiant soldiers of Christ." She is known to have had "singular success in training her own children, who have all been mightily influenced by their father's and mother's example and teaching." This "wise and tender" book is full of friendly and earnest counsel on training children.

Faris, John T. comp. Pleasant Sunday Afternoons for the Children. S. S. Times Co. c1907

How can Sunday afternoons be made joyous occasions rather than a bugbear? "Getting acquainted with the Bible," "Occupations for busy fingers," "Afternoons out of doors," "Helping others," "The Sunday Treat," are among the chapter headings. Suggestions in this book were contributed by the Christian parents from many parts of the world, proving that "parents the world over are bringing up their children in a real love of the day as a time set apart for God. . . ."

Hayward, Percy R. & Myrtle Harmon, The Home and Christian Living. Westminster Press, 1931

"What any child is to become will be determined, to a serious degree, by that which happened to him in his home." The authors discuss such vital home problems as "Guidance and Freedom," "Keeping pace with the children's growth," "Leisure time," "The love life of the children," "Mastering the use of money," "Attaining a personal religion," "When the children are grown up and gone." This is not a new book, but neither is the home a new institution and problems here discussed are ever recurring. The book is helpful and stimulating."

Huffman, J. A., Building the Home Christian. Standard Press, 1935

Not only a Christian beginning but also maintaining a Christian home are here discussed. "Christianizing home resources," "Christianizing the home reading table," "Christianizing home conveniences and pleasures," and how to keep the Lord's Day holy are among the things the author emphasizes.

Marvin, Dwight Edwards, Home and the Children, Revell, 1937

This book discusses such subjects as "Character by example," "Trustworthy parents," "The protection of the home," and "Religious training." The last part of the book contains a collection of prayers, e.g. "A home prayer," "A mother's prayer for her son," "A boy's prayer," etc.

Money spent for military purposes nearly equals the money spent for education and foreign aid combined in the United States fiscal year of 1948-49. The amount for education, $5,525,000,000, is only 2.5 per cent of the national income. The total for foreign aid is $7,200,000,000 and for defense is $12,300,000,000.—Gospel Messenger

THE 20th annual observance of Men and Missions Sunday will occur on Sunday, November 12, this year. The theme recommended by cooperating Missionary Boards, and chosen by the Laymen's Missionary Movement for this day, is "Men for the Master's Mission." The text proposed for the day is Romans 10:14, 15. It is hoped that every church will recognize this day, since it may be combined profitably with any other emphasis. Most pastors will ask a layman to speak briefly on the theme preceding the morning sermon, in which the pastors may follow up the same thought.

Editorials

MUCH TALK IS HEARD THESE DAYS about the need for a "Big-Two" or a "Big-Three" conference on the highest level in order to help bring order out of our chaotic international situation. All this is taking place at a time when many of the same common people who are demanding such conferences are neglecting tasks on a level where all international problems have their real origin—on the most fundamental level of social organization, the home. We need more conferences on this lowest but most crucial level; we need "little-two" and "little-three" conferences in the home much more desparately than we need the top diplomatic conferences crucial though the need be for these also. These "little-two" and "little-three" conferences that gather around the common meal table, or around the Bible or the piano are the real base for world order; if there is not fellowship, communion, and understanding at this level, institutions at another level of social organization such as the church, community, state, and the nation are all but powerless to bring about the bonds of love that God intends should bind men to one another. Perhaps we have put our finger on the real sore-spot of the world situation. Members of most families have so many various pulls—educational, social, professional, civic, and recreational—that they hardly come together at meal time to say nothing of other times of fellowship. Being together in itself is the first requirement toward uniting diverse elements on any principle. If the family is the real training ground for Christians to learn to live with one another, then time must be provided for the family to be together. No other organization, not even the church, can provide this opportunity for living together and working together in such a constructively intimate way. The Christian Home is a little church; it is the Kingdom of God in miniature. The world at large is blessed or cursed by the quality of the home.

DIVORCE IS A SYMPTOM of a much deeper disease that is afflicting man. It is but one manifestation of a spirit of secularism that so consistently stresses radical individualism that man has difficulty making a success of living on the most elemental levels social living. There has been so much stress on the autonomy of the individual that man has become his own god. All social relationships tend to disintegrate in the face of such a condition. This is the direct opposite of the concern of the Gospel of Christ which sees man in need of fellowship with God and man if he is to fulfill that which God intended for him. Marriages break down because there was no union in the highest spiritual sense to begin with. The two cannot become one flesh if they insist on living on this autonomous basis; they still remain two. If the perfect union is to be realized, self must be dealt with; this demands the experience of conversion that gives birth in the new person in Christ to the kind of loving concern that binds him or her to the other in an unbreakable unity. This will result in a mingling of lives, the impact of which will be greater than the sum total of the Christian influence of the two taken separately.

THE PRESENT issue of THE MENNONITE (pages 329 to 336) carries the proposed revision of the Conference Constitution together with a large diagram (pages 332, 333) which outlines the reorganization as based on the newly proposed Constitution. This Constitution should be studied widely and carefully. The changes that have been incorporated have come as a result of careful study and review by a large number of Conference leaders. For this reason it would seem the suggested changes cannot be taken lightly. Much prayer and work has gone into this study as the committee for revision has worked out the proposed changes in consultation with various boards and committees. Furthermore it will be evident that some adjustments will be necessary, when the revised Constitution is adopted, as the transition is made between the old and the new arrangement. Yet even this should in no wise hinder us if through much prayer and deliberation we have the assurance of the Holy Spirit to go forward. Therefore let us diligently study this proposed revision not in the light of our own personal desires but in the light of the demands that God is placing upon our church body to extend the saving Word to the whole world. The committee responsible for preparing the revised Constitution urgently invites your comments, questions, and criticisms so that as many of the remaining problems as possible may be given careful consideration prior to Conference. It would seem that we owe it to the Committee as well as to the most efficient deliberation by delegates at Conference to present any major problems for reconsideration sufficiently in advance that all phases of such problems may be considered and, if need be, discussed in THE MENNONITE prior to conference time.

MERCHANT OF DEATH

IN all the talk about Uncle Sam's supplying arms to the Atlantic Pact nations, there's scarcely a whisper of the fact that we have already been supplying arms in an unprecedented manner throughout the world. We have sold over 10 billion dollars worth of arms since JV day, although we got only 2 billion dollars for it,—a loss to the American taxpayer of over 80 per cent! This dwarfs the $1,450,000,000 program President Truman asks for Western Europe. It has been a bargain day for the dictators and war plotters throughout the world. Here's a list of the nations that have quietly been permitted to arm themselves at the American taxpayers' expense: Argentina, Brazil, Belgium, Chile, China, Cuba, Colombia, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, France, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Iran, Peru, Portugal, Syria, Uruguay, Venezuela, to say nothing of England, Greece, Turkey, and other countries in the news.—Between the Lines

Constitutional Revision

Major Changes Recommended

by H. A. Fast

MEMBERS of the General Conference will be interested to know in what areas major changes have been made over the old Constitution in the proposed revision of the Constitution as it appears in full beginning on page 329 of this issue. This article is a guide to the changes and additions proposed.

The New Name

1. Article I—The Name

The proposed name is: "The General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America."

The proposed name is: "The General Conference Mennonite Church."

The purpose of the recommended change is to shorten and simplify the name and make it apply more fittingly to member congregations on other continents.

Districts Appoint Nominating Committee

.2. Article V Section C4—The Nominating Comtee

In the present constitution this committee of seven is appointed by the Business Committee of three. Under the proposed constitution district conferences are given the opportunity to elect or appoint a representative each of whom will then be appointed by the Executive Committee of the General Conference as a member of the Nominating Committee.

For Administration of Our Total Task

3. Article V. Section F and following—The Conference Boards

The major changes of the present constitution are in this area of service.

The conference now does its work through six boards and a dozen committees, not to mention various sub-committees of boards, each with a membership of at least six persons and a Seminary Board with nine members.

These boards and committees operate quite independently of each other. They each do their own separate work faithfully but as a whole concern themselves very little about the work of other boards and committees. The conference organization therefore is almost too loose and brittle for efficient administration of our total task as a church.

Becoming increasingly conscious of this situation and the need for a more closely knit and coordinated organization and program of service, the conference requested that the revised constitution keep this purpose in mind. It is consequently inevitable that the major changes in the proposed constitution center in a plan of closer unification and coordination of the work of our boards and committees.

The chief purpose of the suggested changes therefore is to unify effort, draw clear lines of reponsibility and to establish easy clearance between committees and boards on questions of budget, spheres of responsibility, and other matters.

Four Major Areas of Concern

The work of the conference falls easily and naturally into four areas of concern: (1) The work of missions representing the outreach of the Christian Gospel at home and abroad; (2) The work of Christian education and publication representing Christian training in home, school, church, and community through the spoken word and the written word; (3) The work of relief, peace and mutual aid representing the witness of Christian love in a world of need, suffering and strife; and (4) The work of support representing the concern for a stable and adequate financial undergirding of this whole Kingdom enterprise.

In the proposed constitution each of these areas of responsibility are entrusted to a general board of 12 members. Under the umbrella of this large board are grouped related interests and activities now administered by seperate unrelated committees.

The Task of the Four Elected Board

The general board surveys the total task entrusted to it and then for purposes of efficient administration divides its work into separate divisions and defines the areas of responsibility of each. The board then organizes itself into committees (There are two "sections" in the case of the Board of Missions) to take care of these various responsibilities. These committees in turn are responsible to the board for the discharge of their assigned tasks.

In order that this responsibility be direct and immediate it is required that one or more members of the board be on every committee in charge of one of these divisions of its work. In order that the board may have maximum freedom to use its best judgment in the organization of its work the constitution merely designates that "one or more members" of the board shall be appointed on each of its specified committees.

Committees Appointed by Boards

The constitution gives the boards the right to appoint to their specified committees“ as many additional members from the conference at large as the board may deem necessary for efficient administration." Popular elections do not unfailingly elect the best qualified people for a particular board nor do they unfailingly provide the fairest representation. Many people with excellent qualities of Christian character, interest, devotion, and training never get elected to responsible conference positions. Some commitee should perhaps have a good business man, a good lawyer, or maybe one or two qualified women among its members in order to serve at its best. This provision in the constitution would permit boards to draw n the best available personnel resources of our conference in order to render the best service of which we are

The Family Faces Social Pulls

by Bob Tully

FROM its very beginning each family faces the problem of social pulls. Husband and wife face certain pulls before their children add their blessings and problems to the home. Even young children soon feel the pull of social relationships and attitudes outsides the home.

How can the many pulls, going out with the gang, seeing the movies, buying comic books, "keeping up with the Joneses," smoking, card playing, dancing, necking, etc., be faced? There is no definite answer, but there are at least six words that will serve as "handles" to ideas and methods so that the family can try to do something about meeting social pulls, both good and bad.

Anticipate

It is wise for the parents to anticipate the pulls that each will have to face and pulls that children will have to meet.

Pulls start early in life for children. They all will not come at once. To meet them, parents should start early to build the answers. Don't be caught without at least some advance thinking. Anticipate!

Information

Parents need all the information they can secure about the pulls to be faced. Knowledge serves well as a foundation for emotional convictions. Information, scientific facts, knowledge should be shared within the family. From the beginning the child's "why?" is worthy an intelligent and right answer. As the child matures intellectually and physically though no questions have been asked, some facts should be shared.

Children need to know about the comics, about motion pictures about smoking, about sex. All information should be up to date and scientific. There is never a time to answer questions with half truths, double language or "old wives tales."

Emotional Conditioning

Knowledge is not enough. There is a need for emotional conditioning that will stand up under social pressure.

The most important thing is a feeling of respect and love in the whole home and family setup. When the whole family feels stronger emotional pulls from within than from outside, it is difficult for outside pulls to take any one member away.

The family should never overlook the opportunity for emotionally conditioning through religious commitment of the right type. God, Jesus, the Holy Spirit can become more than intellectual conceptions. They must be part of an emotional commitment. Jesus is more than a person. Religion must become more than intellectual belief. It must become a committed way of life.

Substitution

Many times when outside pulls come the family can find substitutes.

The following are three samples of substitutes as recalled by some friends:

"Whenever mother thought that we would be interested in the motion picture that came to our town once a week, she would let us take the car out to Jane's and we forgot about the picture."

"Many times when I wanted to go to Jimmy's, mother would get me interested in something else by playing with me."

"Instead of always letting me go some place else to play, we would hold parties and invite others to our house."

When information about a social pull is secured it should be studied to find what elements are basic in it. What real need does it satisfy?

For example, the basic appeal of modern dancing is found in the rhythm, the embrace (sex) and the use of lights. These three pulls placed together are powerful pulls, too dangerous for most youth. I feel the church and the family should not only oppose them, but must also give guidance and leadership in substitution. Rhythm can befound in sports, swimming, all the arts, simple folk games, singing, band, and orchestra. Substitution for the sex found in the dance might be found in co-ed activities in games, in drama, and in more social activities. The use of lighting also occurs in drama, campfires, candlelighting services, soft lights in

Hazard or Opportunity

by Helen E. Nickel

IN A large village where at least five hundred people live in houses huddled so close together that they almost touch one another, but where these houses are separated into paras, strictly because of caste and custom—in this village lives one lonely widow, a believer in the Lord Jesus Christ. Her house is in order, has had the winter whitewash, the yard is swept and clean. She has leisure because her small crop of rice has been threshed and stored in the large strawrope container. Think for one minute of the great hazards to her faith.

She was of low caste before her conversion, yet when her husband and she confessed Christ and were baptized they were isolated socially from their neighbours. They were small farmers and weavers, and the husband continued with his work but did not have the cooperation of his former caste-brothers. The only daughter went to a far-away village to live after her marriage. Then one day, suddenly, death claimed the husband and from that day on the woman faced the future alone.

What are some of the hazards that she constantly encounters? Unable to read she cannot feed her soul on the Word of God. She can review in her heart and mind only what she has heard and learned. More than three hundred days of each year she lacks Christian fellowship. On the rare occasions when the pastor or a worker come to call on her she must store up much to fortify her soul. All around her are neighbors, now quite friendly, but they are steeped in idolatry, superstition, useless or sinful social customs. All around her is ignorance regarding health and sanitation. She has no example before her of great faith or humble service, to challenge her to more devout living. Her environment would drag her back into caste.

One Lone Christian

She has had some inspiration from the Holy Spirit to change the hazard of backsliding to an opportunity for progress. There was no church bell last Sunday to call to worship. But she had been told that at nine o'clock the pastor and six workers who were living in tents about a furlong from her home would meet for prayer. She came and she came on time. She did not come alone. She brought with her a caste woman, her friend. She also led a blind woman over the narrow footpath across the fields to the service. She did not forget her offering for the Lord. In a small brass vessel she brought rice, while her richer neighbor brought a larger portion of rice in a larger, shiny vessel. She worshipped God with reverence and joy.

If more of us who are not lone Christians in isolated places would pray and try to turn every hazard to our faith, into an opportunity to progress in the Christian way, there would soon be more villages where circles of believers today would live and witness for Christ where today there is only ONE Christian.

Arapaho Church

"ALL the earth shall worship thee, and shall sing unto thee; they shall sing to thy name." Psalm 66:4. A Musical Worship Service was conducted at the Arapaho Mennonite Church, of Canton, Sunday morning, March 26, by the ladies trio from Herold church of Cordell. The trio is composed of Mrs. Ernest Schmidt, first soprano, Mrs. Walter Foth, second soprano; and Mrs. Herman Dalke, alto. Mrs. Foth also presented a musical drawing of a lighthouse. The congregation appreciated the entire program.

Plans are being completed for a New Arapho church, two miles south of Canton. Details about the building will be reported later.

Final plans are being made for the second Indian Young People's Retreat which is to be held at Roman Nose State Park (north of Watonga) May 31 to June 3. Daily Vacation Bible School plans are also being made.

JAPAN. General Douglas A. MacArthur "confidently" expects completion of a project for the distribution in Japan of 10,000,000 Scriptures before the end of 1951, it was revealed in a letter made public today by the American Bible Society. The Society launched a campaign April 12 for signatures in a huge "Good Will" book which will contain the names of contributors to the Bible distribution project.

General MacArthur, in his letter suggested that a "Good Will" book be presented to the Japan Bible Society for permanent inclusion in its archives.

The American Bible Society has set three million Scriptures as its goal for distribution in Japan in 1950, and a further five million next year. The 1950 quota includes 35,000 complete Bibles, 980,000 New Testaments, and 1,985,000 portions of the Scriptures. In 1951, 50,000 Bibles, 1,240,000 New Testaments and 3,710,000 portions will be distributed.

A Message for Revolutionists

by Maynard Shelly

IN THIS age of the sleeping pill and the economy-sized packaged sedative, calm and quiet can be the possession of any who desire them. While people are aroused by many trivial things and occasionally by world-wide situations, they have found it possible to live life with a maximum of unconcern. Even the church which has been stimulated by many voices and visions of approaching destruction and which has been challenged with its unlimited resources to bring salvation, has been able to control its enthusiasm from reaching an uncomfortable degree.

The first century Christians who lived in the midst of an unchristian and uncharitable community must have felt this tendency to be conservative in their actions. "Let us not get too emotional about our faith, for it will only make us conspicuous in our community," must have been one of the comments carried to Paul from the Thessalonian Christians. In return Paul wrote, "Quench not the Spirit." (I Thessalonians 5:19.)

There is a Spirit that burns in the heart of each Christian. Even though obscurred by the mist of the future, the way of the will of God can be readily discerned by a diligent Christian as he reads his Bible and opens his life to the power of God. This believer may see the path of full-time work in Christian service as a missionary or part-time service in Voluntary Service. But the burning spirit nears extinction as the Christian says, "I'll wait a little longer until I am sure this is the right thing to do. To such a one Paul's words are quite fitting, "Quench not the Spirit."

In the churches of this land the feeble flame of the Spirit burns in the hearts of many people. The frail flicker is trying to start a conflagration of concern for the complete salvation of the people of our world community. But instead of definite and immediate calls to action, there are heard only general prayers for general salvation. Concrete suggestions are very often regarded with dampening suspicion. Down the long corridor of time a voice is calling, "Quench not the Spirit."

The Spirit speaks with growing intensity about the Christian's duty to rise up and do something to oppose the maddening rush of the world to war, the decay of family life, and the growing injustices of our society. But multitudes of Christians turn a deaf ear and pass by. "It is not within the realm of the Christian Church," says one, while another replies, "Even if it were, this is not the time to create a scene." Amid the deafening shout of "Amen" from a myriad voices we may hear a gasping voice say, "Quench not the Spirit."

All of us have felt the impact of Christ only partially. Yet none of us can doubt that Christianity, in its own way, is a religion of revolution and that the mild Galileean who died on a cross is the world's most flaming revolutionary. And the world is in need of a revolution. The world needs to have its values turned from hate to love. Its perspective and methods need to be altered as well.

The Christian Church has been given a divine mission to set the fires of revolution burning. The torch is the gospel of the redemptive love of Christ. The Christian Church stands now on the stage of humanity. The world is sitting back and watching. The act has won many plaudits and ovations in the past even though some of the players have forgotten their lines and sometimes twisted them grotesquely. But the audience awaits the climax which is long overdue: the staging of the Christian revolution of love which will set the flame of redemptive love burning in every heart.

In the wings of the stage on which the drama of humanity is being enacted, another cast of characters jostles the scenery and waits impatiently to stage their version of the world's needed revolution should the present actors show signs of fatigue. This second cast represents the anti-Christian forces of Communism and others who believe in revolution by bloody force. Will they get their opportunity?

Our faith has always been a revolutionary religion, radically changing all things that it touched. No life that has come into contact with Christ has ever been the same. "Upsetters of the world" is what the Thessalonian Jews called Paul and Silas when they preached the revolutionary gospel of Christ in that city. The sorrow of this hour is that this term is seldom applied to Christians to-day. It is seldom applied, because our eyes have grown dim and our hearts insensitive to the internal promptings of the Spirit of God that challenges us to live daring lives with the utter abandon of our much-worshipped, but little-followed Saviour. Given the proper tool, I would engrave on the shield of every would-be revolutionist in the cause of Christ these words, "Quench not the Spirit."

The Christian Church stands on the stage of humanity. The world is watching; the act has won many ovations in the past even though players have forgotten and twisted their lines grotesquely. The audience awaits the climax which is long overdue . . .

CONSTITUTIONAL REVISION. . . cont'd from p. 324

capable. Such committee members are appointed only for a three year term at a time.

New Relationships

Under the Board of Missions, for instance, there is a section on Foreign Missions and one on Home Missions and the work done under each would under the proposed constitution go on much as it is now except that the close and immediate relation possible under the new organization would strengthen the work of both. Likewise the close relation now possible with the committees on Evangelism, Mission Personnel, the Ministry, and Church Unity would tend to strengthen and energize the whole conference service in this missionary outreach of our church.

The Seminary it will be noted (See Article V, Section F2, par. g) retains its direct relation to the conference but, as is only fitting, it is also brought into relation with the total Christian education program of the conference.

The work of the Committee on Doctrine and Conduct which has served so well the conference interests in regard to the church, home and community, is to be made a part of the duty of the Committee on Education in Church, Home and Community.

To Unify the Program of Solicitation

In the proposed constitution the Board of Trustees and Finance has three divisions. The Trustees would continue their present responsibilities as would also the Pension Committee. The Committee on Finance is a somewhat new venture in our conference. This committee would take responsiblity for raising the budget approved by the conference and would actively promote throughout our churches interest in the total conference program and adequate support of the same. It would unify the program of solicitation so that churches will not continue to be confused and worn out by the many varied appeals for funds.

4. Article V, Section H—Headquarters Administration.

This article is new and seeks to establish orderly and responsible administration of the central office and treasury.

5. Aritcle V, Section I—Relationship with Congregations and District Conferences.

This article is also new and seeks to establish closer relationships between the General Conference and District Conferences and local congregations. It suggests ways of cooperation and urges a pattern of organization which will actively promote on the local or the district level a vital interest in and adequate support of the four great areas of responsibility —Mission, Education and Publication, Christian Service, and Finance.

AN URGENT SUGGESTION

Members of our churches are urged to study the proposed constitution carefully, prayerfully and with a mind open to the leading of the Holy Spirit. In this spirit let us gather at the Freeman Conference to plan under God for effective Service in His Kingdom. Please feel free to send your comments, questions, and criticisms to either Walter H. Dyck, 722 Main, Newton or Henry A. Fast, North Newton, Kansas.

the home, or any type of activity in which beautiful lighting effects are employed.

Release

There comes a time when each person must stand alone and face his social pulls. If the family has anticipated the social pull, shared information, emotionally conditioned the child and taught it some good means of substitution for improper pulls, then the child can be released. He should test his ability to walk, to face the crowd.

Prepare to Love

Mother was waiting up when I returned from my first date. I was late, one hour after the time I had promised to be home. As I walked in I waited, listenfor the first reaction. I was startled at her words. "Well, this is the last time I'll sit up and wait for you!"

I tried to say, "I'm sorry," and to make an explanation, but she suggested that we both go to bed.

The next day she shared with me her fears, her reasoning and her conclusions. In brief they were: (1) Yes, she was anxious; she hoped that nothing would or had happened. (2) But after her son had walked off the front porch there was nothing she could do for him until he returned. She had tried to prepare him for this hour. (3) To worry and fret were exhausting and not the way to be in readiness if her son was in real need. (4) The best way was to put him into the hands of God and (5) try to get physical rest.

This session will never be forgotten by her son. It became part of his emotional conditioning. I am sure that mother was awake most every time her three sons and daughter returned to their home, but each one knew that regardless of the problems faced, the temptations succumbed to or conquered, mother and father were there, ready to help, prepared to love their children through the ups and downs of social pulls.

Once a child is released to face independently a social pull the rest of the family must stand prepared to love and to serve regardless of the child's answer to the social pull. This is the cumulative Christian conviction that must prevail in the family. Redempton must be more important than sin.—Reprint from Gospel Messenger.

Proposed Revision Of The Constitution Of The General Conference of the Mennonite Church Of North America

Article I
THE NAME

"The General Conference Mennonite Church" (formerly known as "The General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America") is the name of this fellowship of Mennonite congregations thus united into a corporate body.

Article II
ORIGIN, INCEPTION, AND GROWTH

After a preliminary meeting held in March, 1859, by two Iowa congregations, the General Conference was officially organized at a meeting held May 28, 1860 at West Point, Iowa, with three congregations of that area and representatives from the Eastern District Conference partcipating. In the course of time other congregations from various states of the Union, Canada, and elsewhere, joined the Conference in increasing numbers. Notable accessions came in the 1870's from the congregations which emigrated from Russia and other parts of Europe, in the 1920's from a similar emigration from Russia to Canada, and in 1945 when the Central Conference of Mennonites affiliated with the General Conference. Thus, from a small beginning there has grown, under the gracious guidance of God, a noteworthy and constantly increasing church body.

Article III
THE PURPOSE

The General Conference owes its origin and growth to a deeply felt need and desire for a closer union of individual congregations in order: (1) to establish more firmly and to deepen the basic Christian faith and to testify to its relevance to all of life; (2) to perpetuate and make fruitful great principles of our Mennonite heritage, including believer-baptism, nonresistance, non-conformity to the world. Christian simplicity, and others; (3) to provide a working basis for cooperation in serving God's Kingdom by emphasizing "in essentials unity, in non-essentials liberty, in all things love"; (4) to provide increasing opportunities for cooperation in bringing an effective, growing evangelical witness at home and abroad through the work of Christian missions, education, literature, relief, hospitals, deaconess work, mutual aid, and a service of peace and love; and (5) to promote "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" looking toward a world fellowship of Mennonites, active and united in Christian service.

Article IV
OUR COMMON CONFESSION

Section A. The Basic Faith

The General Conference believes in the divine inspiration and the infallibility of the Bible as the Word of God and the only trustworthy guide of faith and life; and in Jesus Christ as the only Savior and Lord. "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Jesus Christ. (I Cor. 3:11)."

In the matter of faith it is, therefore, required of the congregations which unite with the Conference that, accepting the above confession, they hold fast to the doctrine of salvation by grace through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ (Eph. 2:8-9; Titus 3:5), baptism on confession of faith (Mark 16:16; Acts 2:38), the avoidance of oaths (Matt. 5:34-37; James 5:12), the biblical doctrine of nonresistance (Matt. 5:39-48; Rom. 12:9-21), non-conformity to the world (Rom. 12:1-2; Eph. 4:22-24), and the practice of a scriptural church discipline (Matt. 18:15-17; Gal. 6:1).

At no time shall any rules be made or resolutions adopted which in any way contradict the historical principles of faith as laid down in this Constitution.

Sec. B. The Separated Life

1. The General Conference believes that membership in oath-bound secret societies, military organizations, or other groups which tend to compromise the loyalty of the Christian to the Lord and to his Church is contrary to such apostolic admonitions as: "Be not unequally yoked with unbelievers (II Cor. 6:14-15)" and that the Church "should be holy and without blemish (Eph. 5:27)."

2. Further, regarding "the works of the flesh (Gal. 5:19-21)," the Conference believes "That they who practice such things shall not inherit the Kingdom of God."

Therefore, every congregation should seriously strive to remain free from these evils.

Much rather, "if we live by the Spirit, by the Spirit let us also walk (Gal. 5:25)."

(For a fuller statement of the General Conference position see the Ris Articles of Faith and the "Statement of Doctrine," approved by the Conference at Souderton, Pennsylvania, in 1941; see Appendix 2).

Article V ORGANIZATION

Sec. A. Its Form and Scope

The General Conference believes firmly in the congregational form of church government, whereby the local church retains maximum freedom of self-determination. For this reason the Conference organization is strongly democratic in form and function. It is a deliberative body, carrying powers of recommendations but not of legislation. Its policies, plans, and recommendations are generally formulated by its Executive Committee, officers, and boards and presented to the Conference for endorsement, modification, or rejection. Its work is accomplished under the supervision of the Executive Committee, the officers, and the boards.

Sec. B. Admission and Membership

1. Any congregation which agrees with and adheres to the confession and tenets as above set forth may upon proper application unite with the General Conference.

2. Application for membership shall be sent in writing to the Conference secretary a reasonable length of time before the regular session of the Conference. This application shall be referred to the Church Unity Committee, which shall evaluate the same and submit its recommendation to the Conference. Admission requires a two-thirds majority vote of the Conference. Congregations admitted shall enjoy all the rights and privileges of membership and shall assume all the duties as defined in these regulations.

3. The General Conference stands ready to unite with any conference of Mennonite churches where such union can be achieved agreeable to both parties.

4. Congregations from other countries may also become members of the Conference in the manner indicated above.

Sec. C. Conference Sessions

1. Time of meeting.—The regular sessions of the General Conference shall be held every three years. Special sessions may be called by the Executive Committee or whenever the official representatives of at least ten Conference congregations or one of the Conference boards requests it.

At the close of each session the Conference shall, if possible, decide upon the place for holding its next regular session. Otherwise the time and place of meeting shall be determined by the Executive Committee.

2. The right to vote is restricted to delegates. Each congregation belonging to the Conference shall be entitled to one vote for every thirty members or fraction thereof. Congregations which for any reason cannot send delegates from their own number are authorized to appoint delegates from other Conference congregations to represent them. However, no delegate shall be allowed to cast more than ten such proxy votes.

The Conference secretary shall receive and record the credentials of delegates. Credentials must be presented in writing. These credentials shall be in the hands of the Conference secretary not less than ten days before the Conference convenes. Questions in regard to certification of delegates and assignment of proxy votes shall be referred to the Business Committee.

Congregations which neglect to have representation at three consecutive regular Conference sessions, giving no valid reason for such neglect, and leaving official inquiries unanswered, shall be regarded as having withdrawn from the Conference; this fact shall be entered on the minutes. Such congregations may, however, upon application be received again into the Conference in the regular manner.

Besides the delegates the Conference officers, members of boards and elected committees, Conference missionaries, ministers and any others holding responsible positions with the Conference are entitled to participate in deliberations. This courtesy to participate in deliberations may also be extended to others upon recommendation of the appropriate committee and a majority vote of the Conference.

3. Elections.—The election of all Conference officers, members of all boards and elected committees shall be by ballot. Elections shall be by majority of all votes cast. Temporary committees incident to the Conference sessions shall be appointed by the president.

Officers of the Conference are elected for a three-year term. Members of boards and elected committees are elected for a nine-year term.

The officers of the Conference and members of the Business Committee shall be elected at each regular session after the Executive Committee has made its report, and the election of members of boards and elected committees shall follow their respective reports.

No person shall serve on more than one board or elected committee. Members of boards or elected committees may, however, serve on special or temporary committees. (See also Sec. D, par. 5)

The term of president, vice-president, secretary, and that of members of boards and elected committees shall be limited to two consecutive terms.

4. The Nominating Committee.—The Conference shall have a Nominating Committee to serve at each regular Conference session. The Executive Committee shall appoint as members of this special committee the representative elected or appointed by each of the various district conferences. In case a district conference fails to appoint its representative the Executive Committee is authorized to appoint to this committee a person to represent this district conference.

The secretary of the General Conference shall be responsible for securing the names of these district representatives in ample time so they can be officially appointed and their names published in the Conference papers at least three months prior to the convening of Conference.

It shall be the duty of the Nominating Committee to nominate two persons for each office to be filled. Nominations from the conference floor shall be permitted.

5. Reports.—All boards and elected committees shall give a full report of their work and activities at each regular Conference session. These reports shall be in writing and shall include the financial data as well as a listing of all Conference property on hand.

Furthermore, all board or committee minutes, resolutions and instructions to workers as well as the official reports of the latter shall be preserved and filed for record and reference at the Conference headquarters office.

6. Business Committee.—The Conference shall have a Business Committee consisting of three members to be elected by the Conference. Each member shall serve for a term of nine years, one being elected at each regular Conference session. The duties of this committee shall be as follows:

a) Arrange the order of busines of each Conference session.

b) Prepare and publish the program of each regular and special Conference session. The program for each regular Conference session shall be published not less than three months in advance of such session.

c) All additional matters which are to be brought before the Conference sessions must first be presented to the Business Committee in order that everything may be scheduled in orderly fashion for presentation to the Conference.

d) Cooperate with the Conference secretary on questions regarding certification of delegates and assignment of proxy votes.

Sec. D. Officers and Their Duties

The officers of the Conference shall consist of a president, a vice-president, and a secretary.

1. The president shall preside at all sessions of the Conference, of the Council of Boards and Elected Committees, and of the Executive Committee. In behalf of Conference interests, its unity, its spiritual welfare, and its program of service, the president of the General Conference is asked to visit the sessions of district conferences and churches as time is available. The president may, in case of a tie vote, other than by ballot, cast the deciding vote.

2. The vice-president shall, in the absence or inability of the president, exercise all rights and duties of the president.

3. The secretary shall have the safekeeping all minutes, records, and papers belonging to the Conference except such as are specifically assigned to others, and shall carry on the necessary official correspondence. He is the secetary of the Conference, of the Council of Boards, and of the Executive Committee.

4. One or more assistant secretaries shall be appointed by the president at each session of Conference, who shall assist the secretary in making a true record of the proceedings and preparing them for publication.

5. The president, the vice-president and the secretary shall not at the same time be members of any board or elected committee, but shall, in the interim between Conference sessions, be independent of all boards and elected committees, so that these, in difficult cases, may seek the advice and aid of the officers.

Sec. E. The Executive Committee

1. Membership—The Executive Committee shall consist of eleven members, and shall be composed of the Conference officers and two representatives from each of the boards: Missions, Education and Publication, Christian Service, and Trustees and Finance.

2. Duties.—The Executive Committee shall represent the Conference between sessions and shall coördinate the work of the boards and elected committees. This Committee shall call special sessions of Conference; appoint the Nominating Committee (see Article V, Sec. C, Par. 4); prepare the agenda for the Council of Boards sessions; appoint the Conference executive secretary, the statistician, the Central Treasurer, and such field workers as it may deem necessary; fill vacancies on Conference boards and elected committees between Conference sessions; unless otherwise provided for, appoint representatives to recognized organizations and institutions operating within the scope of our Conference enterprise; make systematic presentations of Conference needs to the constituency; and prepare printed reports, with recommendations, to Conference sessions.

Sec. F. Conference Boards

In order more effectively to carry out its work the Conference shall elect members to the following Boards: 1. The Board of Missions; 2. The Board of Education and Publication; 3. The Board of Christian Service; and 4. The Board of Trustees and Finance.

Members of boards and elected committees are elected for a nine-year term.

No board or elected committee shall employ one of its own members on a full-time basis. If a board or committee desires to do so, the member shall resign and the resulting vacancy shall be filled in the ordinary manner.

1. THE BOARD OF MISSIONS

(Par. a) This board shall be charged with all the responsibilities of the Conference in the areas of missions and evangelism at home and abroad according to the instructions, decisions, and regulations of the Conference. It shall consist of twelve members, four of which shall be elected at each regular session of the Conference.

(Par. b) After each regular session of the Conference this Board shall elect a chairman, vice-chairman, recording secretary, and financial secretary. These officers shall constitute an Executive Committee and shall have such powers as may be delegated to it by the Board.

(Par. c) The Board shall organize its work under the following divisions, appoint all members required in each division, and allocate to each its share in the budget.

a) Two primary areas of service: (1) a section on Foreign Missions and (2) a section on Home Missions; and,

b) The committees: (1) on Church Unity, (2) on Evangelism, (3) on Mission Personnel, and (4) on The Ministry.

These divisions shall be responsible to the Board and shall each consist of one or more members of the Board and as many additional members from the Conference at large as the Board may deem necessary for efficient administration.

(Par. d) The Section on Foreign Missions shall call, send out, and supervise the work of missions and of missionaries in foreign mission fields.

(Par. e) The Section on Home Missions shall call, send out, and supervise the work of missions and of missionaries in home mission fields.

(Par. f) The Committee on Church Unity shall be active in promoting unity among member churches of the Conference and among branches of Mennonites around the world. Applications from congregations and conferences for admission into Conference membership shall be referred to this Committee for examination and recommendation.

(Par. g) The Committee on Evangelism shall promote an active interest in and training for an effective gospel witness in our churches and mission points at home and abroad.

Sec. I. Relationship with Congregations and District Conferences

1. RELATIONSHIP WITH DISTRICT CONFERENCES.

While district conferences enjoy autonomy both as to organization and program of service, the Conference regards it as self-evident: (1) that the General Conference remains sensitive to the needs and concerns of district conferences; (2) that it provides channels for close contact with them; (3) that district conferences strive to work in harmony and cooperation with the total General Conference enterprise; (4) that they assume their share of responsibility for the promotion of interest in and support of the General Conference resolutions and program of service; (5) that in their organizational arrangement they have committees representing the various service areas like missions, education and publication, Christian service and finance, and that wherever possible these committees include in an ex-officio capacity a member from the parallel board or committee of the General Conference.

2. RELATIONSHIP WITH INDIVIDUAL CONGREGATIONS.

(Par. a) The Conference believes firmly that the local congregations should enjoy maximum self-determination. Therefore, no rules or regulations shall be adopted by the Conference which are prejudicial to the rights and independence of individual congregations.

(Par. b) Since the Conference is a fellowship of individual churches, each congregation belonging to the Conference has a right to the benefits of the Conference property. But these rights cease when a congregation withdraws or for other reasons no longer belongs to the Conference.

(Par. c) The Conference expects of all of its congregations that as far as possible they shall be represented at every session and that they actively seek to further the interests of the Conference during and between sessions. (See Article V, Section C2, par. 3).

(Par. d) The Conference assumes that each congregation in its organizational arrangement will provide for committees that will represent and promote among its membership the various service areas such as missions, education and publication, Christian service, and finance.

(Par. e) The Conference expects that congregations in their ordination of evangelists and ministers will act in harmony with the suggested procedure adopted by the 1945 session of Conference. (See Appendix 3)

3. APPEAL

Difficulties which by their nature should come before a congregation or district conference and generally find their solution there, may come before the General Conference for consideration in the following manner: If the matter can not be settled in the congregation or between congregations, and the advice of the district conference does not bring about a satisfactory solution then, the district conference having been duly notified, a congregation may appeal to the General Conference; and the matter may be accepted by the Business Committee.

Sec. J. Conference Property

Every office holder shall, when his term expires, deliver all Conference papers, records, securities, funds, etc., that he holds, to his successor unless Conference makes other provisions for their disposal.

Sec. K. Amendments and Changes

1. All resolutions and decisions of the Conference passed prior to the adoption of this Constitution and which conflict in any way with any part of this Constitution are hereby repealed.

2. The Conference may make amendments to this Constitution if two-thirds of all votes cast are in favor of any amendment. The proposition for an amendment must be sent to the Business Committee at least three months prior to the session of the Conference at which it is to be voted on, and shall be published with the program of the Conference.

3. No amendment to the Constitution shall be voted on at the same meeting within a given session of Conference at which it is for the first time brought up for discussion.

4. The provisions of this Constitution shall go into effect immediately after its adoption.

MENNONITE BIBLICAL SEMINARY

THE student body was visibly moved this week in chapel by the address of a member of Alcoholics Anonymous, the well known organization which has used a religious approach to men and women afflicted with acute drunkenness or alcoholism. This man had been a member of Skid Row for two years. Skid Row is the part of Chicago in which homeless men live, an area highly publicized in the Chicago newspapers this year. At the very bottom of his degradation this man was converted in the Pacific Garden Mission on State Street. Following his conversion he entered Alcoholics Anonymous in order to make a witness to other individuals who face this increasingly common problem of strong drink. The speaker indicated that he will leave the city of Chicago soon to enter the Christian ministry.

On Sunday, April 30, an open house was scheduled from 2:30 to 4:30 P.M. with tours through all the buildings followed by a program and refreshments.

The Executive Committee of the Mennonite Encyclopedia met here on Friday. Members of this committee are Harold S. Bender, Goshen, Indiana; Cornelius Krahn, North Newton, Kansas; Melvin Gingerich, Goshen, Indiana.

At the same time the Cultural Problems Committee convened including Paul R. Shelly, Bluffton, Ohio; Dean Carl Kreider, Goshen, Indiana; L. J. Franz, Tabor College; Clayton Beyler, Hesston, Kansas; and Harold Gross, Freeman College.

The Seminar on Anabaptist Theology convened here on Saturday, April 29. There were papers by Erland Waltner of Bethel College on the topic, "The Anabaptist Conception of the Church"; Wilhelm Pauck of Chicago Theological Seminary on "The Lutheran and Calvin Conception of the Church"; Robert Kreider of our own Seminary fellowship on the topic, "The Anabaptist Conception of the Church in the Russian Environment"; and S. F. Pannabecker of the Seminary on the topic, "The Anabaptist Conception of the Church in the American Environment;" and a concluding paper by H. S. Bender of Goshen College on "Current Trends and Needs in Anabaptist Mennonite Research." These papers are to be published in the Mennonite Quarterly Review.

The faculty-student discussion group met Monday evening, May 1, to discuss the proposed General Conference constitution.

BLUFFTON PRESIDENT HEADS OHIO COLLEGE PRESIDENTS

A NUMBER of faculty members attended the meeting of the Ohio College Association April 21 and 22. L. L. Ramseyer was elected president of the Association of Ohio College Presidents and Deans. This is a division of the Ohio College Association.

April 26 was Cleanup Day on the campus. Students and faculty donned work clothes to cooperate in this campus clean-up. Friday, April 28, was set aside as Work Day. Students secured jobs and turned over their earnings for the Founders Hall Building Fund.

Good progress is being made on construction of the new building. The building fund now totals in excess of $208,000.

BETHEL OBSERVES COLLEGE WEEK

APRIL 24 to 28 was Bethel College Week during which the aims, the methods, and the needs of the work of Bethel College were brought into the limelight in the community. The week opened Monday with a student-and-faculty discussion of the aims of Bethel College. It wound up with a Booster Reception and Program given on Friday night for friends who made gifts to Bethel College between May 1, 1949, and April 28, 1950. Bernard C. Clausen, noted pastor of the East, spoke.

Music selections and literary readings that were original productions by Bethel College students and graduates filled the chapel hour on the second day of Bethel College Week. In the lobby of the main building were exhibited other original Bethel products in the fields of painting, weaving, wood and metal work, and ceramics.

A volume of Modern American Verse, published by the Twentieth Century Press, contains a poem by Marty Kaufman Homan, a senior Bethel student. This anthology and other books containing selections by Bethel students and graduates, were displayed in the lobby exhibit. An essay by Olin R. Hiebert, a senior, appeared in the Mid-Century Anthology of Prose and Poetry. A series of essays on non-participation in war by Austin Regier, a Bethel graduate, was displayed in A Treasury of American Prose, a recently published volume.

Uruguay Land Purchase Completed

Snyder to New M. C. C. Post

AKRON, PA. Title for the El Ombu land tract in northwestern Uruguay was transferred on April 17, after nearly a year of effort to this end. It had not been possible until this time to proceed with the settlement of the people on the land, because the completion of the transaction was delayed through a series of circumstances.

The property consists of 1,199 hectares, or about 2,960 acres of land, with a number of buildings which will serve as housing for the center of activity for the settlement. The settlement in Uruguay will not constitute an isolated colony such as the Mennonite colonies in Paraguay; but this property owned by the group is to serve as the center for religious, educational, economic, medical and other group interests, with employment contacts reaching out to agricultural opportunities in the larger community. As soon as possible it is hoped that the 751 people can be transferred from the Arapey camp where they have been located since their arrival from Europe in October, 1948.

Seek to Aid in China Famine

Attention has been called to severe famine conditions which have developed recently in China. A number of the voluntary relief agencies are deeply concerned about this need, and have made inquiry from official sourses to determine the nature and extent of the needs, and to ascertain whether channels might be open for extending relief. At present such assistance seems scarcely possible because of the many economic and political factors involved; however, effort is being made by these voluntary agencies to clear these problems with government officials.

More Tools Being Shipped

Application has been made for shipping space to send one carload of farm machinery from Newton, Kansas, to Paraguay and Uruguay. Also ready for shipment, but awaiting Paraguayan import permits, are 29 additional tons from Newton, 50 tons at Silver Springs, Pennsylvania, and 10 tons from Kalona, Iowa.

When these shipments have been sent, a complete check is again to be made on kinds and quantities of the remaining machinery. The priority of further need and the extent of available funds at that time will then determine the plans regarding further shipments.

Personnel Notes

In the Annual M.C.C. Meeting provision was made for an assistant to the M.C.C. Executive Secretary. William T. Snyder, present director of the Mennonite Aid Section, was appointed to serve in this capacity.

Study Agriculture in Paraguay

Robert Snyder and Darrell Albright, M.C.C. Voluntary Service workers assigned to the agricultural research organization S.T.I.C.A. in Paraguay, were able recently to visit the Mennonite colonies in the Chaco, particularly to confer on present agricultural concerns and problems there. They were able to observe the work being done at the M.C.C. experimental farm, and also to speak with individual farmers in the colonies. S.T.I.C.A. has been helpful to the colonies in various ways in the improvement of agricultural methods, and in controlling destructive diseases and pests. The experimental work in the colonies has likewise afforded experience and data useful to the efforts of S.T.I.C.A.

A blessing was received by all.—Mrs. Geo. H. Plett, Corr.

NORTHERN DISTRICT

—United Church, Wolf Point, Montana: The Lord has carried on the work in our church in a most wonderful way during the absence of the pastor. This was possible because of the willing workers like Karl Dick, doing the preaching and teaching; Clarence Olfert, Sunday-school superintendent, as he led on assisted by the teachers; also leaders of the young people's work, and the young people helping. Attendance in Sunday school has been up to forty and more, with an increased attendance in the worship services. We are very happy over the thought, if it is the Lord's will, to be back with them in a week. Soon the constitution for the United Church will be presented for consideration. The three Mennonite Conferences represnted are working together in the Spirit of the Lord. May His name be glorified.—P. A. Kliewer, Corr.

—Bethany Church, Freeman, South Dakota: Although our new church building is not completely finished, we have been able to have our services in it the past two months. Some f the finish work remains to be done. This week the ceiling is being put in. The ladies of the church have done much work in furnishing a complete kitchen in the basement. At present they have also undertaken the job of cleaning the building each week. After being without a church home for several years, we are happy and grateful for having one again. Recently the Men's Choir of the North Church gave a program in our church. Last Sunday morning a children's consecration service was held.—Corr.

Retreat Ground Committee Contracts for Camp Site

The Central and Middle District Conferences have united their forces to obtain their own camp. This announces most recent developments. Ed.

AFTER having made an extensive search for a possible suitable camp site, the joint committee chosen by the Middle and Central Mennonite Conferences has selected what they consider a most practical site a short distance north of the Indiana-Michigan state line. After an option in this beautiful location had been held for some months, it was finally chosen as the most satisfactory of the many sites the committee had investigated.

The area contracted consists of some 40 acres, more or less, located on Shavehead Lake near Williamsvale, Michigan, about 25 miles north of Goshen, Indiana. It is now part of a farm of several hundred acres from which more area can be secured at a later date, should the camp management feel it advisable. The farm is owned by Mr. Forrest Lemons of Congerville, Illinois and Mr. J. W. Collins of Eureka, Illinois. Both men are active in church programs and keenly interested in our camp project.

Shavehead Lake is a fresh water lake of 300 acres. It is fed by three small streams, one of which flows constantly. The lake has one outlet. These streams keep the water in various parts of the lake fresh at all times. As a result of this clear water, fish are abundant. The shore line of the selected site consists of some 1,000 feet and will amply provide for boating and swimming. The firm marl bottom should be enjoyed by both young and old for wading and bathing.

Back from the water's edge, there is ample level area for parking, building locations, and for any recreational ground that may be desired. Trees of different sizes are scattered over this area and will provide ample shade for whatever may be desired. Also, immediately adjacent to the lake is a high mound of a hundred feet or more from which many "mountain-top" experiences may be realized as groups of young and old are led to make important life decisions, prompted by inspired Christian leadership.

This is the first project undertaken by the Middle District and Central Conferences since our affiliation with the General Conference of Mennonites. Counting all members and children and affiliated folks, there will be some 9,000-10,000 persons involved in the project, everyone of whom may eventually be benefited in body and soul by participating in the functions it potentially has to offer.

By way of comparison, the committee feels that this property is a much better value than any site previously brought under consideration. The purchase price as agreed upon is $3,500.00. With approximately $3,000.00 now in the treasury and a year to pay the balance without interest, everyone should be happy that the initial investment is secured. The camp area thus becomes the property of the two Conferences and will be held in trust by a committee or board of six members, three being chosen by each of the two conferences.

The committee is hopeful that the processing or developing of the camp can go forward speedily. A landscape architect has been contracted in order that the entire camp may be systematically arranged, this being one of the stipulations of the contract governing the purchase. Roads, paths, trails, housing, etc., will all be included in the over-all plan.

The intention is to ask for volunteer workers who may assist for a period of a week or several weeks during the spring, summer, and fall in the construction of roads, paths, planting of trees and shrubs, making foundations for cabins, processing the lake front, etc. Volunteer labor may come from any of the churches of the two conferences. A number of women or girls will be needed to plan and prepare meals for those who assist in the work. Anyone who feels led to volunteer for a week or more to further this worthwhile task, may make it known by contacting Esko Loewen of Topeka, Indiana. Sufficient supervision will be correlated and thus the development of the site may go forward with all possible efficiency.

The committee has hopes that with sufficient cooperation in this way, the camp may be sufficiently developed that it can be used for camp service by 1951.

The camp is indeed in its infancy. It is just born, but we feel it is the nucleus of what may someday develop into a movement for better uplift of both soul and body. It is common knowledge that many real life decisions are made in the religious atmosphere of the worship services of these camps. Some of the leaders of our own church have found their call to Christian Service in just such a setting.

Let us pray for guidance as we work for the completion of this new worthwhile departure in our total program of Christian life and service.—O. J. Sommer

America has approximately two and a half liquor retail outlets for every school, and nearly two and a third retail liquor dispensers for every church. The latest available statistics are as follows: 198,878 Schools; 253,762 Churches; and, 482,033 Retail Booze Outlets.

How Can We Strengthen Peace Witness Beyond Our Church?

by Bertha Kleinsasser, Freeman Junior College

FOR FOUR hundred years we as Mennonites have stood for the principle of nonresistance and have convinced very few outside of our church, of the practicability of nonresistance. In fact during the past war we realized that many of our own young men had not even been acquainted with the peace principle.

Any idea must be sold before people take it home, and anybody who trys to sell it must be a good salesman. All of us as individual conscientious objectors are salesmen of these ideas. If we are not sure of what we believe in this matter, it is useless to try and influence others. We must acquaint ourselves with the merits of our beliefs and fortify ourselves with all the truths revealed in the Bible to substantiate our claims. But just because we have not won all our fellow Mennonites to our convictions should not stop us from sowing seeds of peace wherever we find a fertile field.

Many Christians of other faiths have perhaps not even heard of Mennonites. Others think of Mennonites only as men with beards and women of peculiar apparel who live in colonies. As I have already stated, we must sell our ideas.

On page 47 of the February 8, 1950, Pathfinder is a two column ad by the Catholics, telling people about the convictions of the Catholic faith. By writing in you can get a booklet, to answer your questions and explain more fully their ideas. The only way we can get others to believe as we do is to interest them in the matter. I hate to suggest that we should be "copy cats" of the Catholics, but if we have been asleep about the potentialities of this type of advertising, we had better awaken before the next war is here.

Another method would be through the channels of radio and perhaps even television. This may be too imaginative, but "where there is no vision the people perish." A born again, consecrated minister of the Gospel, who has the talent of "so speaking" that people are conviced that nonresistance also belongs to Christianity just as much as other high standards do, could do much good on the radio. On the other hand, a highly polished unbeliever behind a microphone does more harm than good.

Articles could be written explaining our convictions in whatever reputable magazine would publish it, such as The Protestant, Moody Monthly, and others outside of our Mennonite publications.

An untalented person, such as some of us are, could probably excuse ourselves from some of the former methods mentioned, but all of us can do our part in the next one mentioned. We can preach about nonresistance until we are "blue in the face" but all our preaching is vain unless we also practice nonresistance in the community in which we live. Unbelievers in C.P.S. camps—young men who do not live a separated life from the world—will make a mighty poor impression upon outsiders who would formerly have been interested in our movement. We must practice nonresistance in our school life, in business, on the farm or wherever we find ourselves. Anybody who lives a godless life and then when war comes hits for a C.P.S. camp certainly has a yellow streak in him.

Another lesson we can learn from business is billboard advertising. If billboards were erected on our major highways stating "Thou shalt not kill," "Love your enemies," along with evangelical signs as "Jesus Saves," "Ye must be born again," there is no reason why there should not be any results.

Plays could be written to depict the nonresistant life with a convincing end. Perhaps we could induce the Cathedral Films people to produce a picture to show in an interesting way the doctrine of nonresistance. This picture then could be made available to all churches.

We have, as Mennonites, a revelation from God in the matter of peace and if we do, it is certainly our duty to help others see the light.

OPENINGS IN GENERAL CONFERENCE VOLUNTARY SERVICE

There remain some openings in General Conference Voluntary Service projects. These projects include home mission work in Chicago, Indian mission work in the fields in Montana, Arizona, and Oklahoma, service with Saskatchewan youth, work in an inter-denominational mission in East Harlem, New York City. Write to Bertha Fast, 4614 Woodlawn, Chicago 15, Illinois for further details.

Alcohol calls upon the reserve strength which ought to be held like a balance at the bank to meet sudden and unexpected emergencies. If you have such a physical reserve, you are able to tide over emergenies and wear out gradually; but if you let alcohol withdraw your balance, exhausting your reserve, you may become a physical bankrupt at any moment.—Professor G. David Livingstone of Africa

Part VIII - Livingstone and Stanley

Stanley Searches for Livingstone

BUT EVENTS had been happening during the last two years which were of great concern to him, although he had known nothing of them. On October 16,1869, James Gordon Bennett, publisher of the New York Herald, sent a telegram from Paris to Henry M. Stanley, then in Madrid, Spain, where he had been reporting a civil war. The telegram said, "Come to Paris at once on important business."

Stanley arrived in Paris at night, went at once to the hotel where Mr. Bennett was staying, and knocked on his door. Mr. Bennett was in bed; when Stanley entered he asked, "Who are you?"

"My name is Stanley," he replied.

"Ah, yes! Sit down; I have important business on hand for you," said Mr. Bennett. "Where do you think Livingstone is?"

"I really do not know, sir," replied Stanley.

"Do you think he is alive?" asked Bennett.

"He may be, and may not be," replied Stanley.

"Well, I think he is alive, and that he can be found, and I am going to send you to find him."

"What! Do you really think I can find Livingstone? Do you mean me to go to Central Africa?" exclaimed Stanley.

"Yes, I mean that you shall go and find him, wherever you hear that he is, and get what news you can of him; take enough with you to help him, should he require it. You will act according to your own plans, but find Livingstone."

When Stanley asked if Mr. Bennett had reckoned the cost, he was told, "Draw a thousand pounds now, and when you have spent that draw another thousand, and when you have spent that draw another thousand, and so on- -but find Livingstone."

Stanley Enters Africa

Stanley went to Egypt and witnessed the opening of the Suez Canal; he visited Palestine, Constantinople, Persia and Bombay; and did not reach Zanzibar until January, 1871. Two months were spent in organizing the expedition; but early in March the last of five caravans had started for Lake Tanganyika. Two Englishmen started with Stanley, but one died after a few weeks, and the other had to be sent back because of illness. Neither of them had been much help to Stanley. It was not until November, 1871, that the expedition reached Ujiji.

Perhaps the delays were fortunate, for Livingstone had come to Ujiji only a few days before Stanley. That Stanley found Livingstone was little short of a miracle. Looking for him was worse than looking for a needle in a haystack. Livingstone had travelled over hundreds of miles of country, and even a few miles of forest and jungle would swallow him up completely. At least three other expeditions had tried to find him without success.

Stanley had been told several days before of a white man at Ujiji. When they saw from the top of a hill Lake Tanganyika and the village of Ujiji, they unfurled their flags and fired their guns and made a noisy entrance into the town.

Livingstone first knew of the approach of Stanley when his faithful native, Susi, came running with the shout, "An Englishman! I see him!" and then rushed off to meet the stranger. Livingstone followed at a more leisurely pace.

As Stanley and his caravan entered Ujiji he was startled to hear one of the crowd say, "Good morning!" in English. It was Susi; then Chuma also greeted Stanley in English, and they identified themselves as companions of Livingstone. Presently Livingstone himself approached. "I noticed he was pale, looked wearied, had a grey beard, wore a bluish cap with a faded gold band round it, had on a red-sleeved waistcoat, and a pair of grey tweed trousers. I . . . took off my hat and said, "Dr. Livingstone, I presume?' 'Yes,' said he with a kind smile, lifting his cap slightly. I replaced my hat on my head, and he put on his cap, and we both grasped hands, and I said aloud, 'I thank God, Doctor, I have been permitted to see you.' He answered, 'I feel thankful that I am here to welcome you.' "

Delightful Days Together

Delightful days followed. Livingstone tells us, "The news he had to tell to one who had been two full years without any tidings from Europe made my whole frame thrill. The terrible fate that had befallen France—the telegraphic cables successfully laid in the Atlantic— the election of General Grant—the death of good Lord Clarendon, my constant friend —the proof that Her Majesty's Government had not forgotten me in voting a thousand pounds for supplies, and many other points of interest, revived emotions that had lain dormant."

His health improved. "Appetite returned; and instead of the spare, tasteless two meals a day, I ate four times daily, and in a week began to feel strong." Livingstone said to Stanley over and over, "You have brought me new life—you have brought me new life."

They were together about four months. They explored the north end of Lake Tanganyika to see if its outlet might be the Nile, but found that the river flowed into the lake, not out of it.

Livingstone to Africa's Depths

Then it was arranged that Livingstone should go with Stanley to a point about half-way toward the coast and wait there until Stanley should reach Zanzibar and send back a caravan with supplies. On March 14, 1872, Stanley took leave of Livingstone, but it was not until August 25th that Livingstone for the last time turned his face toward the interior of Africa.

Stanley urged Livingstone to return with him to England. An enthusiastic reception awaited him there. His children needed his care. There did not seem to be much that one white man could do in Africa. But Livingstone made it clear from the first that he would not return. His work in Africa was not done. He had not found the sources of the Nile. He had not put a stop to the slave trade. While waiting for men and supplies he wrote, "The whole of 1873 will be swallowed up in work; but in February or March, 1874, please the Almighty Disposer of events, I shall complete my task and retire."

Livingstone's Passing

After he took leave of Stanley, Livingstone never saw another European. He turned back to Lake Tanganyika and for many weary months travelled through the country to the west and northwest of that lake. His illness grew worse. He was accompanied by only a few faithful natives. We know the names of three—Susi, who had been with him for years; Chuma, who had been rescued from slavery by Livingstone twelve years before, and Jacob Wainwright, who had been sent with the caravan and supplies from Zanzibar by Stanley. Wainwright had been educated in India, and doubtless had there received his English name.

On April 29, 1873, he travelled his last mile. That night the natives laid him on a rough bed in a rude hut in Ilala, Central Africa. The next day he was too weak to be disturbed. And the next morning, May 1, 1873, his faithful Susi found him kneeling beside his bed. He had given his life for Africa.

Then the natives proved themselves heroes. They were nearly a thousand miles from the coast. Any attempt to carry the body through a village would be opposed. But they did not hesitate.

They embalmed the body, after removing the heart and viscera and burying them under a Moula tree. Jacob Wainwright carved Livingstone's name and the date on the tree. When the body was embalmed they made it into a package that looked like a bale of goods, and could be carried by two men. Then they started for Zanzibar. It took them nine months to reach the coast. There the body was put on a steamer and carried to England.

There the question was raised whether the body was really that of Livingstone, for the face was so changed by embalming that it could not be recognized as his. The arm broken by the lion thirty years before afforded positive identification. Physicians who had seen the arm when Livingstone had been in England testified that without doubt the body was that of the great explorer.

So the remains were laid to rest with solemn ceremonies in Westminster Abbey. The man who had spent the last six years of his life in solitude was honoured in death by great multitudes.

The purpose of his life was well expressed in the words carved and his monument in Westminster Abbey. They were written to James Gordon Bennett just a year before Livingstone died, and only about six weeks after he had taken leave of Stanley. "All I can say, in my loneliness, is, may heaven's rich blessing come down on everyone, American, English, or Turk, who will help to heal the open sore of the world."

He did not live to see the open sore—the slave trade—healed; but he opened Africa and supplied the impulse which, within a few years, outlawed the slave traffic.

Watch the Rules of the Road

by Kenneth Morse, Elgin, Illinois

Joe is the fellow across the street who just bought a new car. At least twice a week he spends his evenings cleaning and polishing the car. He seems to be determined to make every square inch of chrominum shine like a mirror. He is an expert with sponges and chamois skins and he knows all about cleaning fluids and polishing waxes. Joe treats his car as if it were precious.

But Joe drives the car as if it were worthless. He crashes through yellow lights and eases by stop signs. He takes sharp curves on two wheels and enjoys the thrilling passing a car while watching one approach from the opposite direction. Because more cautious drivers slow down to let him out of danger, he still has a shiny new car to drive. But one day soon he won't be able to slow down for a bad curve or he'll be caught between cars on a narrow road—and all his polishing cannot put his beautiful new car together again.

God has given us bodies and minds that are a priceless possession. They function more adequately than the most complicated machine. But we prove how well we know their worth by the way we care for them. Some of us become quite expert in adorning our bodies and making the most of our appearance. We act as if we know our lives are precious.

But often we make the mistake Joe made and use ourselves as if we were worthless. We risk the ruin of harmful habits. We run on narrow margins of sleep and rest. We disregard the signposts and warning signals that can help us proceed safely. We invite a smash-up of body and mind because we ignore the rules of the road.

One of the marks of growing up is the ability to use your gifts of health and energy so that you get maximum efficiency for living in demanding times like these. Clean and temperate living require close attention to the rules of the road as well as to the neat appearance you present.—Horizons

Protestantism is not a belief, not a mode of worship, not an organization or a movement, but an attitude and approach to God. It goes back beyond the sixteenth-century reformers who were nick-named "Protestants" because they protested against a resistance to change in a medieval church, back of "Protestant" saints like Bernard of Clairvaux who dared write a treatise on "The Ideal Pope," back to the first disciples, following a Master who protested against the lifeless and loveless teachings of scribes and Pharisees. The sturdiness of this idea that has persisted through the centuries has given today's Protestants a noble heritage and a glorious hope for the days ahead.—Selected.

Beyond Our Own

HARTFORD, CONN. — President Russell H. Stafford of the Hartford Seminary Foundation has announced the establishment of the Hartzler Fellowship which provides opportunity for post-graduate study at the Hartford Theological Seminary for a Mennonite student each year.

The fund providing the fellowship is the gift of John E. and Mamie Yoder Hartzler.

Hartzler retired in 1947 from his lectureship at the Hartford Theological Seminary where his subject was philosophy of religion in the department of systematic theology. He is a bishop in the Mennonite Church and is known in the theological circles as a distinguished scholar in Christian doctrine.

The fund will yield an annual income of about $1,000 and the fellowship is open to graduates of this or other seminaries of recognized standing. Should there be no qualified Mennonite student, the fellowship may be granted to a student from any Protestant denomination. —Hartford Courant

HONG KONG—Communists have forced 400,000 Chinese Buddhist monks and nuns to give up active practice of their faith, the abbot of a leading Buddhist monastery in Nanking stated here recently.

Many of the monks had been drafted into the army or into forced labor and some had become street hawkers, he added.

Communists had taken over most of the temples and monasteries, he declared.—Ch. Science Monitor

CHICAGO.—August 14 through 25 marks the fifth year of the Summer School of Christian Radio to be held at Moody Bible Institute, Chicago. The two weeks of intensive instruction in Christian broadcasting are under the joint sponsorship of the World Missionary Fellowship, which operates the well-known station HCJB, Quito, Ecuador, and the Institute, with stations WMBI and WMBI-FM.

NEW YORK. The Committee for Peaceful Alternatives is planning a Mid-Century Conference for Peace to be held in Chicago on May 29 and 30, 1950.

Universal Distribution Plan Has Fine Features

The April 4th issue of THE MENNONITE presented seven questions and answers on the UNIVERSAL SUBSCRIPTION PLAN now being discussed by the various boards of our Conference. We continue in this issue to present several highly desirable features of this new plan of financing our Conference publications.

Question 8.—How does the proposed UNIVERSAL SUBSCRIPTION PLAN help other Conference Boards?

Answer.—It gives to every Conference Board a channel through which it can bring to the local churches of our Conference full information as to new plans, activities, and needs. Wider distribution of authentic information stops false rumors and makes for a broad base of intelligent support of our joint undertakings.

Question 9.—Does the new UNIVERSAL SUBSCRIPTION PLAN involve a new principle in Conference publications?

Answer.—No. It is an extension on a greatly enlarged scale of the principle of the 100 PER CENT PLAN which is quite well known among our people. Our Conference Boards feel that the time is now ripe to present this new plan for your approval just because it involves no new plan but brings to all of our Conference churches the benefits thus far enjoyed by about one-third of our churches.

Question 10.—Is the new plan Biblical?

Answer.—Yes. We are instructed to "bear one another's burdens," and the "strong" are to bear the burdens "of those who are weak." We read of the early church having "all things common" and experiencing "with great joy" the satisfactions of joint undertakings. We are asked to carry the good news to the uttermost parts of the earth—and we take it that new needs require new methods—even in publications.

Question 11.—How much of the financial burden will fall upon the local church?

Answer.—Only as much as the local church can bear. The payment of the nominal subscription rate is optional as the plan now stands. The Conference at Freeman can modify this plan if it so desires.

Question 12.—Will the finances borne by the various boards be shared equally?

Answer.—No definite proportion has been agreed upon but various possibilities may be considered:

(a) The costs of publication might be shared in proportion to the size of the budget of the various boards: or

(b) In proportion to income received by each board; or

(c) Equally; or

(d) Paid out of the General Conference treasury as an over-all function.

Question 13.—How do other Church Conferences handle this problem?

Answer.—The Central Mennonite Conference pays for the costs of the Christian Evangel out of the Conference treasury and the Evangel is sent to every home. The Church of the Brethren treat their Conference publication as a responsibility of the General Board, corresponding roughly to our Executive Committee.

Question 14.—How will the new plan help the smaller churches?

Answer.—It will bring to the small churches which cannot very well afford either individual subscriptions or the 100 PER CENT PLAN a wealth of information and inspirational reading material to assist them in the church, Sunday School, and other work of the local church. It makes possible unified action of the farthest and the nearest churches of our Conference, thus bringing a powerful influence to bear upon the great problems facing the world today.

Looking Toward Freeman

As I think of the Conference to be held in Freeman there are a number of things that come to my mind. This should be a time of enriching fellowship, new spiritual insights, challenges of dedication to fulfill our obligations in established endeavors, and a presentation of new fields of service and a challenge to enter these fields.

I have wondered if it is not the time for us as a conference to look at and give more thought to the "internal" affairs of the Conference than we have in the past. This is not to say that we should turn from the "external," that is, Missions, Relief, etc., but that we seriously consider problems at home and how our churches and conference can influence them. I think also of the need for work in cities with our own people who go there to work as well as other needs. We need more encouragement and thought on the problem of the establishment of young people on farms. The matter of our peace teachings need to be reemphasized and a suitable text book and work book for this purpose for children and young people needs to be forthcoming. We need to prayerfully and intelligently consider our relationship to other Christian groups. Perhaps it is time that we take our stand with others and realize that we are all "one body in Christ."

These are some of the things that I hope to receive help on as I anticipate the Conference at Freeman. Other problems and items are important too, and if we will let the Spirit of Christ prevail, I am sure His will will be done.

A SHARP REMINDER that religious publications, as well as most secular magazines and newspapers, may be subjected to increased postal rates was contained in the testimony of Postmaster General Jesse M. Donaldson before the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee, now considering a House-passed rate increase bill.

The Postmaster General sharply criticized the House bill on the ground that a major portion of the rate increase would be paid by "a comparatively small number" of publishers. Under its terms religious periodicals, as well as certain other types, would be exempted entirely from the increases. Mr. Donaldson suggested that all second class rates be increased 25% in each of the next four years.—Washington Religious Review

THE LAYMEN'S ORGANIZATION is the "baby" of Conference organizations. Why is that the case? Does it mean that the men of the Conference are the last to see that the Conference has need of their energies—that this is the last group to get to work for God? It is quite doubtful if this is the answer. Heretofore it is quite probable that the men felt they were making their share of the impact through the channels of participation in connection with the Conference sessions themselves. Is it possible that part of the reason for present emphasis upon a separate laymen's organization lies in the fact that the Conference itself has become too largely dominated by the clergy. It is a matter of record that at least seven Conference Boards and Committees consist entirely of ordained ministers though not in every case are all members pastors of churches. Of these, three are major boards. Of the ten members of the Conference Executive Committee only two are laymen. There is every reason to encourage the idea of establishing the Conference Laymen's organization more firmly so that every man in the General Conference sees that his energies are needed for the church. But if this has the effect of robbing the larger organization of the Conference of lay talent and causing the Conference organization to develop into a heirarchy, it is doubtful whether that is progress. The nominating Committee for next Conference at Freeman in August will do well to go all-out to get more responsible lay representation on the ballot sheet, and see to it that voting delegates have facts about all nominees. A careful reading of the proposed revision of the Constitution will make it clear that concern for this problem was evident in the arrangement for a number of appointed committees. The average layman will probably agree with the above observations. But to make them meaningful, the layman must follow through by accepting responsibility involving real sacrifices; to be fair to the present situation it should be observed that the temptation on the part of the layman "to leave it to the preachers" is at least partially responsible for the present trend toward a clergy-dominated Conference organization. This last point again underlines the need for the Brotherhoods in our local churches and districts to help our men see that the church needs them.

THE GENERAL Conference Mennonite Church" is the new name for the Conference as suggested by the Revision of the Constitution which was included in last week's issue of THE MENNONITE. This is most welcome at a time when our home mission field has reached as far as South America and our foreign mission and relief work has reached almost all parts of the world; it is high time that we broaden our horizons. Especially with the approaching India Jubilee by the younger church in India next December, is it becoming evident that the General Conference represents a world-wide fellowship of Christians. This, however, raises a question which undoubtedly many are asking, "Is a worldwide General Conference Mennonite Fellowship or even a worldwide Mennonite fellowship, as indicated by Article Three of the proposed revised Constitution, our ultimate answer to Christ's prayer 'that they all may be one?'" While at present we are probably in no position to rush into any mergers or unite with any larger inter-denominational church bodies, we must never lose sight of the fact that it is the will of God that all of the redeemed see their relationship to one another and act upon it so that the world for which Christ died may see a united witness to the saving power of the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. The least we can do as a Conference at the present time is to draw nearer to Jesus Christ the Son of God who is the foundation not only for the Mennonite Church but also for the whole Church built on this Foundation.

THE CHURCH NEEDS TO RE-DISCOVER the spirit of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego who absolutely refused under any circumstances to bow to the Babylonian image of gold set up by Nebuchadnezzar. They told the king when judgment was brought against them, "We are not careful to answer thee in this matter. If it be so, our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace, and he will deliver us out of thine hand, O king. But if not, be it known unto thee, O king, that we will not serve thy gods..." Recently we saw a paraphrase of this passage that stated the first part of the above as, "We do not need to stop and think what our answer will be." Their decision was made in advance. This gives evidence of solid background of religious education that was climaxed with a decision to make the faith their own. It is obvious from the Old Testament that Hebrew young people were carefully taught that their faith had implications for all of life's relationships;

1901 - 1950

Being in close contact with many phases of the work of the church in Canada, J. N. Hoeppner, Altona, Manitoba, who died in Steinbach, Manitoba, April 16, 1950, will long be remembered. A native of Plum Coulee, Manitoba, and for more than twenty years a minister in the Bergtaler Church, he served in such widely divergent interests for the church as teaching in the Elim Bible School at Altona, participating in the youth organization of the Manitoba Province, treasurer of the Home Mission Board of the Canadian Conference, editor of the BERGTALER GEMEINDE BLATT and the PIONEER MENNONITE MISSION, and enthusiastic sponsor of song festivals. He passed away in Steinbach, Manitoba, after a five day illness..

The Power of the Insignificant

by L. W. Troyer

AS HUMAN BEINGS we are hedged in by numerous physical and mental limitations. How these control or limit the activity of the individual depends upon his relationship with God and the use he makes of the spiritual resources at his command and those which he seeks to cultivate.

God certainly anticipated that man would spend much of his time and energy in overcoming and rising above the limitations set upon him as a mortal person. The scripture gives us much to think of in this connection. The psalmist reminds us that the length of our days is a limited thing for we are reminded that the days of our years are three score and ten. A promising life cut off in the prime seems such a tragic thing but the Christian needs to bear in mind that there are greater tragedies for the time must come when each must reckon with the time of parting. The great Christian concept would have us grasp the fact that the number of our days or even knowing the exact time of our death is insignificant along side the admonition that we be prepared to meet our God when he calls in that day.

Where two or three are gathered together in Christ's name . . . In a day when mass display is the order these seem to be out of place but only so far as we find ourselves out of step and out of tune with the teachings of Jesus and His eternal purpose for the lives of His children.

In the 139th Psalm the psalmist also reminds us that the very boundaries of our life are determined and we are hedged in by those. Jesus reminds us in the Sermon on the Mount that we have no power to change even a single hair on our head nor is it within our power to add to our stature. Yes, it is possible to change our appearance by certain external means such as a different hairdo or high heals on the shoes, but nothing has been done to change the actual physical structure of the individual.

Man's knowledge is limited as there are many forces at work which defy the power of man to fathom their depths. His strength is also limited to a very marked degree. He can lift only so much and so has had to devise various machines to do his heavy work for him; he can push his body only so far without stopping for the refreshing sleep that renews his physical and mental energies.

There are many instances of man's limitations referred to in the Scriptures. But that isn't the lesson for us. The marvel comes to us in the knowledge that God condescends to meet the limited resources and conditions of men and raises him far above what one might justly expect. This is the marvelous working of the Grace of God through the divine leading of the Holy Spirit where man has yielded his soul to the leading of the spirit.

Jesus has given many examples of what appears to be a small gift being magnified into something far greater when it comes to be counted for the kingdom. Jesus was greatly pleased with the widow's gift of the two mites because she gave of her living which went far deeper than a giving out of her abundance. The giving of a cup of cold water at the right time and in the name of Jesus will lead to a spiritual reward. If our faith be only as a grain of mustard seed we are promised unlimited possibilities. Where two or three are gathered together in Christ's name, there is his promise to be present. In a day when mass display is the order these seem to be out of place but only so as we find ourselves out of step and out of tune with the teachings of Jesus and His eternal purpose for the lives of His children.

The children of Israel were only required to give that which they could. In Leviticus we are told that they were required to give according to their ability for if they were poor, the offering required of them was scaled accordingly. From this we must conclude that God does not expect the impossible. He does expect us to give according to our ability. If there is first a consecrated individual, the gift he gives will always be according to the best of his ability and as such will be greatly magnified with the blessing of the Lord, for we read in II Corinthians 8:12 that "for if there first be a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not."

they were taught a total way of life. Everything they did was done as in the presence of God. This made it quite unnecessary for them to think through their position every time they met a problem They had a God-given sense for the right and wrong that made them resolutely unswerving. This we have lost today. With every new international crisis it seems necessary to make up our minds all over again as to whether it is right or wrong to kill. With every recurrence of the drink problem we have to decide again whether it is right or wrong to partake of liquids that lead to ruin. (Sometimes we have wondered why the General Conference is not organized to combat the drink problem as it is in its Peace committee to combat the war problem; in that disastrous area, have we reached the point of saying, "We do not need to stop and think what our answer will be," even at a time when our own youth are affected by the liquor traffic?) With the increase of gambling suggestions are multiplying that the only way to control it is make the country "wide-open," legalizing what is wrong and taxing that which is wrong to support our institutions that are established to preserve the right! We are glad to see that this question is coming out into the open. But it is disconcerting to note that, as someone has stated it, question marks are placed where God has placed periods.

From the Mission Front

An Indian Sorcerer Comes to Christ

by L. W. Jantzen

JAGDEESHPUR, INDIA.—It was a cool morning in early December when Pastor Paul and I left the pastor's mud-walled home, where we had been entertained for the night, to go to see a sight of unusual joy. We drove by jeep over a road that became increasingly narrow and rocky, over rugged forested hills, until the jungle finally became so dense, that we had to park the faithful blue motor and get out to walk. You see we were going to the frontier right on the back edge of the Central Provinces or Madhya Pradesh, as they are now called. Our destination was the home of ten "brand" new Christians, baptized only some 3 weeks before, and living in a village completely surrounded by hills. Dongaraksha, their village is accessible only by foot —not even carts can cross the hills into the small valley nested away snugly in these hills. But now, for the first time there were Christians there whom we wished to visit.

Their story is striking. It happened like this. Over twenty-seven years ago, Chotu Lai, then a Christian gardener for the Wienses at Mauhadih, often traveled cross-country to his relatives who lived in Crissa. Traveling by foot, he followed the path over plain and mountain which also crosses through Dongaraksha. Chotu often spent the night in this village, in the home of Bhubane, a Hindu sorcerer. After the evening meal around the open fire the men sat chatting long into the night. Bhubano listened attentively while Chotu Lai told him of the peace in his heart since he had heard of Yishu and had accepted the Saviour. For days afterwards, Bhubano thought about this one called Yishu. There was something there which even his perfection in sorcery and dealing with snakes and witches could not give him. In 1925, Bhubano went to Mauhadih to visit his friend there and again heard the Gospel message. But his heart was hard and dark and furthermore, he had his religion and his work in sorcery. Thus he continued in his old path for year after year.

Then, suddenly several years ago, Chotu Lai died of cholera not far from Jagdeeshpur. So Bhubano's old friend was gone. Then the Lord undertook anew. In a village several miles from Dongaraksha some new Christians had been baptized about a year ago. They were friends of Bhubano. New as they were in the faith, they began witnessing to him of "Yishu," their new-found Saviour. Bhubano had forgotten much in the course of years, but now though old and gray he began again to think about these words. He listened to the new Christian friend—but not alone. With him now were his wife, his sons and their wives and some grandchildren. One day in November they could wait no longer to find peace in their hearts. They asked their friend to call a pastor to come and teach and baptize them. This he was most ready to do. Pastor Paul then came and found them believing in Christ, and soon baptized ten members of this family.

There was something which even his perfection in sorcery and dealing with snakes and witches could not give him.

When I met Bhubano, he gave his testimony this way, in his gurgling voice, spoiled by a lifetime of torture and sorcery, "Satan, like a snake lived in my heart. Now Jesus came and drove the snake out. Now I have peace. Thank you, Yishu."

Milton Whiteman, First Cheyenne Elder

LAME DEER, MONTANA.—Milton Whiteman, the leading Cheyenne Indian minister on the northern Cheyenne mission field, was ordained as elder at the Mennonite church in Lame Deer, Montana, on Sunday morning, April 2, by Alfred Habegger and Malcolm Wenger, missionaries to the Cheyennes.

Whiteman is the first Cheyenne Indian to be selected and appointed to the eldership in the Mennonite church.

A Minister for Eight Years

He had been ordained to the ministry of the gospel on Nov. 29, 1942 by Rodolphe Petter and Alfred Habegger.

Many Cheyenne Indians and whites made a special effort to be present at this significant occasion.

Wenger gave the opening Scripture reading in both the English and Cheyenne languages and offered prayer.

To signify their approval of Whiteman's ordination, Habegger asked the congregation to rise. Immediately the congregaiton responded to the request. While they were standing, William Fightingbear, a native helper who has been serving at Birney, Montana, implored God's blessing upon the new elder and on the congregation.

A quartet number, "What a Wonderful Savior," was sung by Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Habegger and Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Wenger. Mrs. Rudolphe Petter was accompanist.

Ordination in Cheyenne

The main ordination service was conducted in the Cheyenne language by Alfred Habegger. The eldership commission was given by the laying on of hands by Habegger and Wenger. A volume of Cheyenne scripture portions presented to Whiteman by Habegger signified that the Word be his guide and authority in his new duties as elder.

Remarks were made by Whiteman after the ordination. He stated that since Christ cleansed the temple, so must the church and God's people be cleansed today to meet God's approval. He offered the closing prayer to the service.

Climaxing the meeting, Mrs. Wenger played as postlude, "The Lord is Great," while the people filed out of the church to shake hands with Whiteman, Wenger, and Habegger at the front door of the church.

Witness in West China

by Frieda S. Boehr

CHENGTU, WEST CHINA.—Together with my home duties it was possible to do some teaching of English to individuals who came to our home regularly. Later I began to teach English to classes in a large girls' professional school. In both cases, I found it possible to include Bible portions and Bible teachings in the English teaching, with favorable interest shown on the part of the students. Not very far from that girls' school there is a school for the deaf and dumb. Here it was my privilege to work once a week after leaving my classes at school in the morning.

Prison Work

During the past year we held regular weekly meetings at one of the prisons, my work being in the women's prison. The meetings were held twice a week at first as previously arranged with authorities, but later they asked us to come only once a week as they felt the prisoners were not turning out enough work. Interest was good. "Had we only known these things of the Gospel before, how much of sorrow and the effects of sin we could have been spared," said one of the women, one day.

Need Co-workers

The fact that I have not had a steady, full time Bible-woman co-worker has been a handicap. A very valuable co-worker, Mrs. Hsu a young woman of prayer and faith, with a local dialect, was with us a few months in fall. She left suddenly when her husband, who was not employed by the Mission, decided to go on to Si Kang at the time when things began to be somewhat "tight" here. She has left her impress here, as one who is definitely out for souls. Just now young Mrs. Chang T'ien Min, our Rev. Chang's daughter-in-law, is efficiently giving part-time service, helping me in visitation work and in general women's work two half days a week. Among those recently baptized there are a few women with fairly good education, together with a warm love for the Lord, and they are great help in meetings and classes and in part take the place of a regular Bible woman. We praise the Lord for such and pray for wisdom to guide them in their efforts.

We have had much opportunity for witnessing and helping in general in the daily evening meetings, especially at the tea-house services which are so much nearer than the ones at the West Street chapel. In both places there is much opportunity for helping with singing, tract distribution, and maintaining order; it is all so very much worth while! Truly the field here in Chengtu is ripe unto harvest.

Pray that the Lord may send forth more laborers into the harvest field here. He is able even at this time to do so, we believe.

"Education becomes a menace when it merely sharpens the acquisitive instincts and skills without imparting creative purpose and moral control. We have to teach integrity adequate to Wall Street as well as to Main Street, for our school youth will go to both places."—Ralph W. Sockman.

WHAT THEY SAY . . . . . about The Handbook to the Mennonite Hymnary

from Moody Monthly

UNTIL recently singing in the average congregation has been of a perfunctory sort, and little attention was given to meaning of words and less to the author or composer. In this day when people are beginning to give serious attention to things spiritual, a book such as this is a help to "sing with the Spirit and with the understanding."

Mr. Hostetler has done a thorough job of research and the book is interesting from more standpoints than one.

The Introduction, a thirty page catalog of hymns both ancient and modern, arranged in chronological order, is a veritable treasure-house of information.

More than six hundred hymns are listed in the body of the book, beginning with the hymns of the early Church and including the best of modern German and English hymnody. In some instances the original Hebrew, Greek, Latin or German text is given. The dates of birth and death of author and composer are recorded, and the story of the origin of the hymn is set forth in short, pointed sentences.

The book is all that its name implies. It is certainly a valuable addition to the number of handbooks already issued. It may be used as an aid to the private study of hymns. Pastors should urge members of the congregation to purchase the book and use it. It would be a great help to ministers in selecting proper hymns for the worship service, while the song leader will find it invaluable in preparing for a Sunday evening "sing."

Japan Relief Unit Grows

European Mennonites Help

AKRON, PA.—The M.C.C. Unit in Osaka, Japan, has been able to secure additional housing facility in the form of a barrack at nominal cost from government surplus stock. This barrack when erected, will afford more adequate living quarters and also will make possible an expansion in various additional services which have not been carried on heretofore, partly because of the limitation of building space.

European Mennonites Give Help

An interesting indication that European Mennonites are helpful in the M.C.C. relief program comes from Weiler Children's Home in France. While there have been 18 regular M.C.C. workers assigned to that work at one time or another, there have been 34 European Mennonite girls giving assistance: from the Alsacian Conference, 20; from the French Conference, 5; from Holland, 4; from Switzerland, 3; from Germany, one; and one Russian Mennonite D.P. In addition to help in the form of personnel, the European Mennonites have contributed regularly and liberally in material resources for the work at Weiler.

Training Class for New Volunteers

Plans are being made to accept a group of volunteers for a year of service, beginning with a training class during the month of July. There are still openings for about 6 more volunteers for this class. Projects to which volunteers will be assigned include: Community service at Gulfport, Mississippi; M.C.C. Mental Hospital construction, Reedley, California; Attendant work at Topeka State Hospital, Kansas; National Training School for Boys, Washington, D.C.; and Mennonite Hospital, Vineland, Ontario. Applications for enrollment in this training group should be sent in by the end of May.

New Selective Service Bill Introduced

On May 2, Rep. Carl Vinson, Chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, introduced certain amendments to H.R. 6826 (the bill to extend the 1948 Selective Service Act) which, if adopted, would have the effect of extending the present 1948 draft act for two years, but preventing inductions under the act unless Congress would declare an emergency.

The amendments proposed do not affect any of the deferments or exemptions provisions of the present act. There would, therefore, be no change in the status of conscientious objectors under this act if the bill should be passed in the amended form.

It appears that this bill with proposed amendments satisfies some of the criticisms of other bills which have recently been considered; and there seems to be considerable support for such legislation which would preserve a registration and classification system.

Summary of Relief Shipments:

During February, March and April, the following shipments of M.C.C. relief contributions, valued at a total of $150,334.23, from both Canada and the United States, left port:

To Paraguay, 25 tons agricultural equipment and tools; _to India_, one ton clothing and bedding; _to Ethiopia_, 2 tons miscellaneous tools and other materials; _to Germany_, 30 tons flour, 91 tons mixed foods, 41 tons clothing, bedding, shoes, soap and mending materials.

Relief Work at Home

Since March 1, seven groups of non - Mennonite Protestant D.P.'s in all about 70 persons, have come to the United States through M. C. C. assistance. On April 26 a group of 18 reached Akron for brief orientation before departing westward. These people have come from Germany, although formerly they had lived in Latavia, Poland or the Ukraine.

It is expected that the flow of D.P.'s to the United States will continue for the next few months, and may even be accelerated if favorable D.P. legislation is passed by Congress. The M.C.C. is able to place D.P. families with interested sponsors within one or two months after requests are received. The sponsor is required to make no commitment except assurance of housing and employment.

The non-Mennonite D.P's which have been placed in many Mennonite communities to date have been very appreciative, and have made good adjustment to their new homeland. The opportunity to assist more of these homeless people is a duty of the Christian brotherhood, and a very worthy type of "relief work at home."

"Driftwood"

Each week baby clothing bundles are distributed by the M.C.C. center in Berlin to ten needy families in the Kreuzburg district of that city. Magdalene Friesen, in charge of this work, finds this an opportunity to get into homes and see how people live. The homes all show evidence of real need—in some cases the people are struggling with great difficulty to make an honest living; "in other homes one finds persons who have lost all sense of moral, not to speak of Christian responsibility, whose life like a piece of driftwood, has lost all sense of direction." It is the prayer and hope of the workers that the gifts may help to lead such people to a firm foundation in Christ.

Philippine Hospital Reports Activity

Recent word indicates that the M.C.C. hospital at Bangued, in the Philippines, is operating at full capacity most of the time. The native doctor assisting in the work seems to be very efficient and capable. In March, 601 outpatients were served, in addition to 43 cases hospitalized. Seventeen operations were performed and 46 X-rays given during the month.

BLUFFTON IN RELIEF DRIVE

THE RELIEF Committee, composed of students and faculty members, gathered waste fat about town and made soap from it for relief purposes. Members of the committee and other helpers worked all day clean-up day on this project. As a result about nine hundred pounds of soap will be sent to relief headquarters for shipment to Europe. In addition, cakes of manufactured soap were sold to students to be donated for relief purposes.

Kenneth E. Mast, member of the First Church of Sugarcreek, Ohio, has accepted a position as head coach of football and basketball at Bluffton College. He will begin his new duties in September. Mr. Mast is a Heidelberg College man, where he was a member of the basketball team for four years. He will be assigned other duties in addition to coaching and physical education.

Seniors took written comprehensive examinations during the week of May 1. These will be followed by oral exams during the next two weeks.

BETHEL ANNOUNCES COMMENCEMENT ACTIVITIES

COMMENCEMENT activities will start at Bethel College, May 26 with the senior class program and activities in chapel. The home concert of the A Cappella Choir beginning 2:30, May 28, will be followed by a reunion concert given by all past members of music organizations of Bethel College. The baccalaureate service will take place in the evening of May 28.

The May 29th schedule is as follows: the alma mater meeting at 9:30 in the chapel; class reunions at 12:00 noon; honors chapel at 2:00 in the chapel; the alumni banquet at 6:30 in the dining hall.

Commencement exercises take place at 10:00 a.m., May 30, in Memorial Hall. The commencement address will be given by David Eitzen, associate professor of pastoral counseling at the University of Southern California.

The Freeman Junior College Choir of South Dakota, touring Mennonite churches and colleges in Kansas, gave a concert during the morning chapel at Bethel College May 2. The choir consists of 40 students and is conducted by Miss Elvera Voth.

SEMINARY DISCUSSES CONSTITUTION

THE faculty-student discussion group met this week to evaluate the proposed General Conference constitution. The panel included S. F. Pannabecker, Don. E. Smucker, Robert Kreider, and Elmer Ediger.

The annual Daily-Vacation-Bible-School Forum was held Wednesday. Leaders of the various discussions were Alvin Brightbill, "Music for Children"; Erna Friesen, "Worship"; Mildred Magnuson of the International Council of Religious Education, "Bible for Children"; and Esther Meyers, "The Use of Slides."

The Women's Fellowship sponsored a picnic Thursday afternoon which had to be transferred to one of our buildings. We are still hoping to have weather which will permit us to be outside.

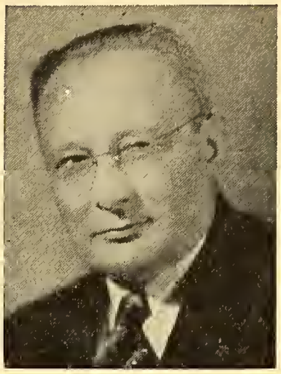
Friday evening Don Berry, a graduate of Goshen College and now at Chicago Theological Seminary, gave an address on the subject "Goshen College and the University of Chicago—Comparisons and Contrasts."

Dana P. Whitmer, son of Paul Whitmer of Bluffton, gave the Vesper address May 7, on the topic, "The Christian Approach to the Racial Problem." Whitmer is assistant principal of Froebel High School in Gary, Indiana, where there has been considerable racial tension.

The Foreign Mission Board met here Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, May 8-10.

Miss Floriene Dirks, sister of Marvin Dirks and a missionary in Africa was our guest during the past few days. She is now on furlough from her field of missionary work.

E. G. KAUFMAN TO EGYPT



ED. G. KAUFMAN, president of Bethel College and chairman of the Conference Board of Education has accepted a position as visiting professor of philosophy and religion at the American University of Cairo, Egypt, for the coming school year. Having recently been granted a sabbatical year's leave of absence by the College board, he plans to leave for Egypt sometime in August.

The American University at Cairo occupies an important position between western lands and the Arabic world since Cairo is the academic center for the Moslem world. The American University is a "bridge of friendliness" between East and West trying to give the Arabic world the best in Christian thought and life.

The student body of the American University of Cairo is composed of about 15 different eastern nationalities. Religions of various Mohammedan sects Jews, and Christians, as well as different cultures are represented. The university is a missionary institution with executive offices in Philadelphia. Its president is John S. Badeau.

Jottings

SOUTH AMERICA

—Blumenau, Brazil: Teacher Alexander Rosenfeld, son of Elder Gerhard Rosenfeld, arrived here with his family in February. He has accepted a position with a rather prominent Blumenau business firm. He had been living for some time in the near Sao Paulo.—Several Rudolf Sack type plows were purchased last week for the new settlement in Rio Grande do Sul. This is the kind we used to use in Russia for plowing fallow ground.—Jacob Epp, an active member of the new settlement, spent several weeks in a Blumenau hospital with a broken arm and several crushed ribs. He was injured in a collision with a truck on the way to Itajahy harbor. He has improved considerably and is now at home in Witmarsum.—The middle of March Rev. Peter Klassen went to Witmarsum from Curitiba. We had a fine visit and he told us a great deal about Paraguay where he had labored for several months.—The latter part of February Dr. Dyck, physician in Witmarsum, and wife brought two of their children to Blumenau to attend school. This is quite bothersome and expensive but unfortunately there are no good schools in the settlement.—Dr. Dyck paid another visit on March 19. He was on his way to Canada where his mother, according to a telegram from his father, is in bed with an incurable illness. We wish him "Bon voyage."—Heinrich Martins.

CENTRAL DISTRICT

—Topeka Church, Topeka, Ind.: On April 16, a Peace Team from Bluffton College gave the program. On the evening of April 21 the Berean and Men's Bible Classes met for a pot-luck dinner and program in the church parlor. Hanno Klassen. a German student at the University of Chicago, was a guest and told of his experiences during the last war. He spoke at the morning service April 23. At the evening service April 23 Miss Ina Plank, who spent some time in M.C.C. work at Cuauhtemoc, Mexico, showed slides and told of her experiences there.—Miss Opal King, Corr.

PACIFIC DISTRICT

—Calvary Church, Barlow, Oregon: One of our members, Edward S. Roth, was instantly killed by a train, which he failed to see when crossing the track near his home, on Tuesday morning, April 25. He was fifty years old.—Mrs. Ivan Learfield, Corr. We enjoyed having with us two German exchange students, Yunker Lichti and Heinz Fellman, from Upland College, Upland, California. They also spoke at the local Canby Union High School. Our Women's Missionary Society has been meeting every week the past months, finishing baby layettes, wrapping bandages, and doing various mission work for overseas and home relief work.—Mrs. Ivan Learfield, Corr.

—Second Church, Paso Robles, California: On Easter Sunday morning our minister, W. Harley King, brought us the message, "The Glory of the Resurrection Life." F. F. Jantzen brought the morning message on Good Friday and King, the evening message. Easter Sunday evening we listened to the Easter cantata, "Hail, King of Glory," by Lawrence Keating, directed by D. D. Schultz. We have two missionary societies. We are gathering used clothing, sew new garments, cut quilt blocks, make some quilts for relief, make fancy work for our annual bazaar. For our next meeting we have planned a shower for relief of dress-length material or wool yarn enough for sweater or socks donated by whoever may wish to bring some. On April 16 Martha Dueck, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Dueck, was married to Wayne Russell. On April 29 we had our annual S. S. and C. E. picnic. The weather as a whole has been lovely though we have had some frost lately, which has been harmful to different fruits. The grain fields look promising but we hope the frost won't harm the grain.—Mrs. Frank Hamm, Corr.

EASTERN DISTRICT

—Deep Run Church, Bedminister, Pennsylvania: A statistical survey of our congregation was made through questionnaires sent out from Bluffton College by Marvin Wasser and Jean Wismer for a Statistics Class. About twenty Sunday-school teachers and assistants are enjoying the Eastern District Training School at Souderton. Our pastor is making his annual spring visitations. The Women's Missionary Society tendered a kitchen shower to the Latvia family now living at the Norman Wismers, Hilltown, Pennsylvania. A clothing drive for relief is being made. The junior Sunday school class has contributed the Sunday school chime system. Missionary Mrs. John Thiessen spoke on India missions one evening recently. The May project for our youth is painting an outbuilding which will be used for the daily vacation Bible school, and summer projects will be an acre of corn and soft ball.—Corr.

—Stirling Avenue Church, Kitchener, Ontario: April 9 to 16 marked the twenty-fifth anniversary of our church. The great triumphant Easter service and holy communion opened the observance. Organizational services, fellowship gatherings, and memorial services were part of the program. A special feature of the Fellowship night was the presentation of purses to U. K. Weber, pastor emeritus, who had served for 17 years, and to Mrs. Allan Weber, caretaker for the 25 years. For the concluding all-day service we were privileged to have J. E. Hartzler, Goshen, Indiana, who was also guest speaker at the dedication of the church 25 years ago, and also at the dedication of the new class rooms in 1943. During the morning service the original church choir sang the anthem. In the afternoon greetings were extended by the surrounding denominations. The challenge of the twenty-fifth anniversary has been for each member to rededicate his life, to utilize our experience of the past, and to look forward to serving more adequately in the future.—N. Bachert, Corr.

—Eden Congregation, Schwenksville, Pennsylvania: It has long been felt that our members should know each other better. Opportunity for this was given recently when Missionary John Thiessen addressed our group. In a social meeting following, during a social hour, opportunity was given to learn to know each other better, including the new members who have united with us just recently.—Church Messenger

Bloomington Hospital and School of Nursing

By Lena Maxwell R.N., A.B., Director of Nurses

BLOOMINGTON Mennonite Hospital and School of Nursing has found a vital place of service to humanity. The ministering to the sick, assisting in disease prevention and in teaching student nurses, is always done with the spirit of the motto—"Not for ourselves—but others."

As early as 1890 the need for a Protestant hospital in the Bloomington-Normal (Illinois) area became apparent. In 1896 a twenty-bed hospital was started under the advisorship of a Mennonite organization but it seemed that the church was not yet ready to assume this responsibility so the hospital was given over to the Methodist Episcopal Deaconess Society.

The Nursing School Library

During the next 20 years the Mennonite churches became more conscious of a need for a church hospital. They believed that we ought not only teach and preach but also do something for those who are in need physically. With the establishment of foreign mission work by the Central Conference in 1909 came the need for trained Christian Nurses to serve in these foreign missions as well as in the home lands.

The first definite step in organization was taken in January, 1919, when the Mennonite Sanitarium Association was incorporated. The purpose drawn up by this association was to conduct a hospital and training school, not for profit, but to help all people in sickness and distress and to further the highest and most progressive ideals of the Mennonite Church.

A large residence was procured and converted into a hospital in 1919. In a short time it proved to be too small so that within a year a small hospital nearby was purchased and the association took full charge of the institution and the training school at once. After nine years the building was again too small, and a north wing was erected. This new addition provided a new entrance, lobby, administrative offices, laboratory, class rooms, dining rooms, and accommodations for forty-five more patients.

In 1941 another wing was added, increasing the capacity to 126 beds. At this time we are again in need of more space. The Lord has richly blessed us; more patients than we can accommodate seek to enter our doors for the efficient nursing care given by young women of high Christian character.

In 1949, 7,431 patients were treated in our hospital and 1,094 babies were born here. The daily average showed a census of 121 patients, seventeen new patients admitted and eight operations performed.

The staff includes 36 graduate nurses and other trained personnel, 55 student nurses and 71 auxiliary workers.

Troyer Memorial Nurses Home is connected to the hospital by a pleasant tile walled tunnel. In addition to rooms for eighty-five students this building contains a well equipped library, classrooms, auditorium and recreation room, kitchenette and laundry room for the students' convenience.

The first class of fifteen student nurses graduated in 1922. Since that time 300 nurses have followed their footsteps. In addition to courses which are taught at Illinois State Normal University, nursing courses are taught by doctors in specialized fields, three nurse instructors, and nurses from the County Health Department.

WE LOSE what on ourselves we spend;
We have a treasure without end
Whatever, Lord, to Thee we lend,
Who givest all.

Whatever, Lord, we lend to Thee
Repaid a thousandfold will be;
Then gladly will we give to Thee,
Giver of all.

Do You Want to be a Nurse?

By Lucille Bauman—Class of 1952

A GOOD nurse needs to like people genuinely and want to help them. She must be poised and cool-headed in emergencies, resourceful and trustworthy. She should have the courage to be cheerful in the face of tragedy and possess a sense of humor at all times. Since nurses need to know how to get along with people they must be well-adjusted individuals themselves.

The prospective student nurse also needs to have high social and moral standards, a keen interest in people, and a certain degree of mechanical aptitude. Good health, physical and mental, are essential because she will be in closer contact with various disease - producing organisms than in most types of work. She needs to be alert and sensitive to the moods and needs of her patients to be a successful happy nurse.

Just as soon as you decide to be a nurse it is well to find out what the specific admission requirements of the school that you wish to enter are. You can then plan your high school or college courses accordingly. The courses that you should take in high school should be centered around English, science and mathematics, and social sciences. A year or two of any foreign language is also very helpful. You must be a graduate from an accredited high school and be between the ages of 17 and and 30.

If you decide that you would like to enroll at Bloomington Mennonite Hospital School of Nursing you should obtain an application from the director of nurses. Included with the application blank is a medical and dental blank to be filled out by your own doctor and dentist. Also each applicant must have a recent vaccination and immunization against diphteria and typhoid fever.

It would be wise to visit the school of your choice and the director of nurses before you make your final decision. You and your parents will always be welcomed cordially.

To live to help others, may this be my plea.
In service for others I'll Live, Lord, for thee."

Nursing Arts Class in session.

Philosophy of the School of Nursing

By Carol Diller, R.N., A. B.,
Nursing-Arts Instructor

THE DOMINANT point in the philosophy of the school as visioned by its far seeing founders is "to instill into the student the Christian ideals of service, love of fellowmen, indomitable courage, and persistent self-sacrifice that should motivate every nurse in her profession."

Nursing education attempts to give the nurse knowledge of the principles underlying nursing practice and to develop technical and social skills that make up the art of nursing. It aims to promote the best possible nursing service for society which includes the promotion and conservation of health as well as care of the sick. In order to realize this aim we must help the student nurse to see the patient as an individual, a member of a family and of the community.

To maintain this fundamental spirit of nursing the teacher herself must not only instill a love and understanding of the Christian way of life in her students, but she herself must live and practice such a philosophy.

The philosophy of unselfish, Christian service permeates every course as well as the experience which the student has in order to prepare her for the responsibilities and opportunities which await her beyond the hospital walls. She must be ready to accept her role in the community as a guardian of the health and welfare of its members.

Activities and Experiences in the Preclinical Period

By Joyce Eigsti—Class of 1952

ONE of the first things we learned after we arrived at the Mennonite School of Nursing to start our work toward our chosen profession was how to live happily with many other girls of our own age and without our parents' constant guidance.

A two week period of orientation at the hospital is given to help us adjust to our new environment. It does not take long until one is able to bandage a hand or arm, or to make a smooth comfortable bed.

Soon classes at Illinois State Normal University start for the preclinical students. This means riding the bus to Normal and taking part in activities offered to all college freshmen.

A nurse must always be clean and aware of bacteria that may be harmful. In bacteriology she learns that the glassware must sparkle or unwanted bacteria may ruin the experiment.

Do you like to eat? Well who doesn't? In nutrition class we learn how and what to cook for a sick person.

Anatomy, I think, is perhaps the most interesting. The various parts of the human body are studied and, one realizes and appreciates the magnificent power that God has to create a human body that works as perfectly and miraculously as ours does.

Exactness must be learned and practiced. In chemistry laboratory one learns to carry out directions promptly and correctly. It is lots of fun to do experiments which includes actually making oxygen!

At the hospital one has nursing-arts class where she learns and practices how things are done for patients. Mrs. Chase, our life sized doll, is very gracious and allows the students to practice on her as much as they wish. She has had every bone in her body broken and many operations in her life time. Our classmates also turn out to be good patients when Mrs. Chase is busy.

"Professional adjustments" teaches what the qualities of a good nurse are. We learn what is expected of a professional, Christian nurse, her responsibilities and her opportunities to serve.

Capping Ceremonies

By Lois Lehman—Class of 1952

ONE OF the most inspiring events in a student nurse's career is the capping ceremony.

Much of the first six months of our training is spent in classrooms, where we learn some of the theoretical part of the course which serves as the foundation on which we build the practical knowledge gained while on duty in the hospital. During this preclinical period we are given opportunity to prove to ourselves and to the school that we are able to meet and maintain the standards which are needed to become a good Christian nurse.

The students who have completed the preclinical period successfully are accepted into the school at a capping service. The ceremony is held in our auditorium at the Nurse's Home. During the program we have a guest speaker who speaks words of encouragement and inspiration to nurses both new and old urging us ever to "Press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

After our director of nurses, Miss Maxwell, places the caps on our heads each student lights a a small Florence Nightingale lamp from a large Nightengale lamp held by a graduate nurse passing on the light of service, purity, and faithfulness to the new members of her profession. As each student nurse receives her cap she is presented to the audience by a big sister, who is an older student. The student nurse who receives her cap is very glad, for she has proven herself worthy and has been accepted as a loyal member of her chosen profession.

After the Preclinical Period

By Ella Myers—Class of 1951

TO BE a well prepared, professional nurse it is essential to have technical training in many different phases of medicine. During the three-year course the student receives three or four months practical experience in each of the different departments of Mennonite Hospital.

The first year is usually spent in attending classes and working part time in the hospital gaining practical experience in procedures taught in classes.

To be a nurse is to walk with God,
Along the path that our master trod;
To sooth the achings of human pain;
To faithfully serve for little gain;
To lovingly do the kindly deed,
A cup of water to one in need;
A tender hand on a fevered brow,
A word of cheer to these living now;
To reach the soul through its body's woe,
Ah! this is the way that Jesus would go.
Oh, white-capped nurses in dresses of blue,
Our Great Physician is working through you.
—Author unknown.

Miss Maxwell in recent capping service.

Courses of study include medical and surgical nursing, nursing arts, nutrition, communicable diseases, pharmacology, psychiatry, obstetrics, operating-room technique, and pediatrics; also, social science courses including ethics, history of nursing, modern social and health movements, and psychology.

Each student spends six weeks in the dietary department. Here she plans and helps to prepare special diets under the supervision of the dietitian.

During the second year each student works in the operating room for three months. Most students agree that this is one of the most interesting and dramatic parts of their training. This is usually hard work and often requires working at night in answer to emergency calls.

A very definite contrast to the pain and suffering seen in the medical and surgical departments of the hospital is the joy and happiness found in the obstetrical department. The three months period is divided between work in the nursery and care of the mothers.

In addition to the training here at Mennonite Hospital each student has six months of affiliation in other hospitals. These are three months of psychiatric-nursing experience at the Psychiatric School of Nursing, Peoria, Illinois, and three months of pediatric nursing at the Indiana University Medical Center, Indianapolis, Indiana.

A recent addition to the curriculum has been the opportunity for each student to have two weeks experience and study in the Public Health Nursing Organization in McLean County.

The life of a student nurse is indeed varied and interesting. It is our hope and prayer that we may be not only skilled nurses but also daily witnesses of God to our patients.

Significance of Black Bands, Finishing Breakfast, and Graduation

By Clara A. Bauman and Evelyn Lawrence,
Class of 1949

ANOTHER step has been passed in the life of a student nurse, that is, the second year of her training. She is made to realize her greater responsibility and importance by the placing of a black velvet band upon her cap. This may be done in a flourishing ceremony or it may consist of simply changing from a plain white cap to one with the symbol of a senior upon it, but either way it all means the same thing. She is of greater value to the hospital, she can better contend with emergencies and all adjustments, and she can be trusted with the responsibilities that come with higher education and greater knowledge. The senior student should be proud of her black band.

Then comes the next and final step of her training—her finishing day. As a tribute to her and the days she has spent at the hospital she is given a candlelight breakfast and is presented with three red roses—symbols of the three years training she has just finished. Although this is always a very happy day in her life, a few tears may be shed because aside from the fact that she has reached another goal in her career, it also means she will be leaving the many friends and the home she has called her own for the past three years. However, even this cannot hide the gleam in her eyes that comes with the knowledge that she has succeeded in what she had set out to do years before.

Graduation breakfast.

Now that she has finished, it is only proper that there should be commencement exercises, during which the public may congratulate her upon her success. The presenting of the pin and diploma are merely the finishing touches to her accomplishment. As the young nurse dons her white uniform and marches down the aisle to receive these donors, no one could be more proud and rightfully so—because the world truly respects a good nurse.

Extra Curricular Activities

By Helen Knapp, R.N., B.S., Clinical Instructor

ALL HUMAN beings need change and variety in their daily lives. Nurses, no matter how unselfish or self-disciplined, are still human beings. Extra curricular activities must supply the variety and relaxation needed. All students are urged to participate in activities which appeal to them and also to develop their own individual hobby.

A school chorus offers opportunity for exercise of musical talent. Occasionally special programs are open to the public at such times as Christmas and Easter. Frequently small groups furnish musical entertainment for civic and social groups.

An athletic club encourages participation by awarding school "letters" after completion of a stated number of hours in various sports and activities. Some of these activities include tennis, swimming, hiking, skating, and bowling.

"The Troyer News" furnishes the news of the student body and school of nursing as well as the opportunity to exercise journalistic abilities.

The nursing school maintains a Christian atmosphere, some of which is gained by chapel services

The social life of the student is an important item. Each class and the school as a whole have several parties during the year. These are usually held in the auditorium which has serving facilities plus an electric organ.

Recreational activities are of great importance. Work, study, experiences, yes—and fun—are part of a student nurse's life.

Opportunities in Nursing

By Ruth Schertz, R.N., Staff Nurse

MANY opportunities await the nurse upon completion of her three years of training.

In the hospital private duty nursing or general staff nursing may be chosen. The field of nursing school instructors has expanded rapidly in the past few years. The young graduate may fit herself for the position of science instructor, nursing-arts instructor, or ward instructor.

During her three year training period the nurse receives experience in many different phases of nursing including psychiatry, pediatrics, operating room, or obstetrics. Following graduation she may choose to work in any one of these special phases.

Public-health nursing offers much for the new graduate. Within this field alone service to schools, industry, and to the entire community in general can be rendered.

Some of the nursing specialties which may interest the graduate nurse are hotel nursing, camp nursing, college or campus nursing, transportation nursing, and missionary nursing. Many of our graduates have made great contributions in these various fields especially in foreign lands both as missionaries and as relief workers.

The opportunities of nursing are numerous and varied. The choice is limited only by the interest and abilities of the nurse. New fields are being created by each meeting of our state and national legislative bodies. Whatever field she chooses, the nurse will find herself being led into adventures in patience and courage with persons from all walks of life.

Clergy Certificate Holders Take Note

By special arrangement with the various railroad passenger associations, those traveling to the General Conference sessions (August 23 to 30), including the Ministers Retreat (August 18 to 23), need to present only the clergy certificate of the particular area in which they reside. For example, those coming from the Eastern area need not secure a Western clergy book in order to benefit by a reduced fare in the Western Passenger Association area. SUCH TICKETS MUST, HOWEVER, BE PURCHASED BETWEEN AUGUST 14 AND 25, 1950.

The Canadian Passenger Association is also participating in the sale of through-round-trip clergy tickets from points in their area to Freeman on presentation of Canadian clergy certificates only.

ON CHURCH SALES

Dear Editor:

I am writing to you in regard to your recent editorial on "painless giving," in the April 18 issue. Since my opinions on mission sales are quite different from yours, I would like to share some of my thoughts with you.

I do not mean to imply that the best way to raise money for missions is through sales, bazaars, etc. The best way is certainly through the offerings we have in church nearly every Sunday for mission purposes, whereas a sale is held only every year or two or sometimes even less frequent.

Some people find it suitable to give a lot of cash for missions; many of us, however, cannot give great sums, but we are willing to work in His service in various ways, so we think it appropriate to have an occasional mission sale.

Now the real givers at a mission sale are not the persons who purchase the articles; no, they always get something for their money. The real givers are the persons who have spent much time and effort, plus a little money, in creating pretty as well as practical articles for the sale. For example: a poor elderly widow (a member of our church) finds it impossible to give money for use in His Kingdom; but she has willing hands, a needle, thread, and many scraps of material—plus a very warm heart. Put this all together and you have a lot of wonderful articles. At our recent sale her articles were sold for a total of over $50. Would you say she gave "painlessly"? She is very happy that she in her meager way could contribute something also.

I, too, think that we should never

A PERILOUS THING IS HAPPENING in relation to the M.C.C. program as well as the phases of our Conference work. As it is quite evident by our "Conference Stewardship Thermometer" on the last page of this issue relief giving is definitely lagging. Our Conference apparently is not alone in this experience. An M.C.C. official has recently made the general observation that "it is more difficult to raise funds with which to feed the spirit than to feed the body." As the relief program shifts into the spiritual phase, as men whom we have been giving bread come to sense their much more important spiritual hunger for the gospel of the saving grace of Christ we withdraw our hand of help and let them die spiritually after we have kept them from dying physically. Does that make sense? While there is certainly a temptation on the part of constituent groups in M.C.C. to revert back to their own separate conference channels for the spiritual ministry, this probably is not the major factor in the slump. Perhaps more than anything else the backed up buying and building programs (after the war) of both congregations and individuals is the factor that is cutting in on gifts to all phases of conference work as is quite evident in the back page report. The fact that certain boards are above their quota is not at all encouraging in view of the fact that there are large single gifts involved. Some very serious questions we should be asking are like these: How fast do we dare go with our building programs when many congregations have not housing for their worship. Is there such a thing as luxury in the matter of the churches and the homes we are building and are we entitled to these in a time when millions have no home to say nothing of the bare necessities of life? Have we in America yet begun to sacrifice? If a destroyed German, French, or Russian city or town of the same size as ours were suddenly transplanted to within ten miles of our own city, what would we do differently? How much dare we spend on the church at home, most of the members of which have the knowledge of Christ when we know that far too large a portion of the world's population has never heard the name of Jesus? It seems that the work of God that has been established is in danger of being uprooted; progress we have made in sending forth the gospel and in uniting our witness through M.C.C. is being endangered by our selfishness.

BLUFFTON COLLEGE has reached its fiftieth year of service to Conference youth as a Christian liberal arts college. The place of the liberal arts in the education of an individual is becoming more and more accepted. Witness for example the Bible institutes that are adding to their curriculum the general educational courses such as science, psychology, philosophy and others to be in a position to offer an arts degree even though tied to a Bible major. Why should the churches be concerned about sustaining Christian liberal arts colleges. First, the Christian liberal-arts college is built on the conviction that truth is one whether it is in nature, human nature, or in Jesus Christ. Jesus Christ, who said, "I am the truth," is the embodiment of all truth. When, therefore, men and women study biology, chemistry, physics, physiology or sociology, psychology, education, or Bible and theology they are concerned about one thing— finding more of the revealed truth of Christ. The Christian liberal arts college conceives then that all truth is not only one but sacred and if sacred then to be used to the glory of God and the service of our fellowmen. The Christian liberal arts colleges have an opportunity not enjoyed by other more professional Christian schools. Young people who have made up their mind to go into other professions are not attracted to these. Shall these become trained in purely secular schools where they have no opportunity to see their vocation in the light of God's plan for them?

The idea of sending all those who are to become Christian workers to a Christian school and all those who go into any other field to a secular school breaks down completely. It should not be necessary to evangelize the doctors, teachers, lawyers, and other professional and skilled workers being trained in secular institutions after they come to our communities. That is too late and too dangerous. If, as Christians believe, every calling is a sacred calling then it should follow that each should receive as much training in an environment in which the Christian faith is central as possible.

Furthermore the Christian liberal arts college makes it possible for young people training for many vocations to see that they need each other if they are to work out God's will for their lives and for their communities and churches. The Christian liberal arts college has an incomparable opportunity.

To measure up to this opportunity is the great unceasing demand that is made upon our school administrators and faculties. The churches have a right to expect their administrators to do their utmost to provide a truly Christian liberal arts school. But the college administrators also have the right to expect of the churches prayers, gifts, constructive criticisms, and students and more prayers, gifts, constructive criticisms, and students. We insist that if the church would let all Christian liberal arts colleges down and let them pass out of existence and start all over in the matter of higher education she would soon discover that the major area of education for young people demands the type of institution that she let down.

Report of Middle District Conference

by J. N. Smucker

WADSWORTH OHIO, April 27-30. The sixty-first session of the Middle District Conference was held in this historic Mennonite center. There were delegates and visitors from all of the 19 churches of the District, and a fine brotherly spirit prevailed throughout the entire Conference.

Evangelism, Dominant Note

In keeping with the general note of Evangelism throughout the churches this year, the Conference had for its general theme, "The Program of Evangelism in the Church." The theme song was, "We've a Story to Tell to the Nations." This note of Evangelism was dominant throughout the Conference, beginning with the opening address by the Conference president, Ernest J. Bohn, and continued through the Conference by the special speaker, Reuben Short, of Archbold, Ohio, the district superintendent of the Evangelical Mennonite Church.

Special Groups Have Strong Programs

J. C. Meyer of Sterling, Ohio, gave a very challenging and unusual address at the Brotherhood session on the theme, "Vision of a Larger Brotherhood." He made it vividly clear that the men must undergird and support the work of the church, pointing out some tragedies of the past where men had failed in meeting their opportunities. The young people in their program on Saturday evening presented a strong evangelistic emphasis. In the women's meeting on Sunday afternoon the theme of lay-evangelism was emphasized. The Conference was brought to a close with a program of music by the Orrville, Ohio Men's Community Chorus under the direction of Victor Gerber of Dalton, Ohio.

Retreat Site to be Purchased

One of the items of special interest was the report of the Retreat Committee, announcing that a site for a new retreat ground has been selected and plans were under way for its purchase and development.

The communion service on Sunday morning was impressive and emphasized our common union in Christ. Such communion services have come to be the high points in our various Conferences.

Reign of Terror in Colombia

Reprinted from PRESBYTERIAN LIFE

OUR attention was called to this material by one of our South American missionaries who pointed out that so far our mission in Colombia has been spared miraculously of any damage. However prayer is urgently requested for the safety of our missionaries.—Editor.

FOR months it has been going on—beating, stoning, assaulting, dynamiting, burning, shooting, and killing. The foreign missionaries in the South American republic of Colombia have been suffering along with the Colombian Protestants in a reign of terror and vandalism reminiscent of the Spanish Inquisition.

Protesting is Dangerous

The persecution of Protestant Christians by members of the Roman Catholic-supported, fascist-minded Conservative Party of Colombia has been a well-known fact in church mission circles for more than a year. But well-founded fears of reprisals and increased attacks, coupled with the fact that the Conservatives control the government, made any form of protest dangerous.

This month, however, the churches could not stand the situation any longer. On April 10, Daniel M. Pattison, treasurer-elect of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, sent a letter (see box on this page) to the United States Department of State and to members of the U.S. Senate calling their attention to some of the facts which threaten the cause of Protestant Christianity in Latin America. Ten days before, Mr. Pattison had returned from his third visit to Colombia.

Mr. Pattison's letter to the State Department and Senate was backed up by more than a dozen documented incidents of persecution. The story told by these incidents, just a few of the scores which have occurred, is one of the most depressing chapters in the history of modern Christianity.

Missionaries Flee

In the coastal district of Cali, where the Cumberland Presbyterian Church and the Gospel Missionary Union are working only eight Protestant churches out of thirty-eight are open. At least ten churches have been burned, and a number of pastors put in jail. Of fourteen missionaries of the Scandinavian Alliance working in the north central part of the country, only two remain. The rest were forced to leave their homes and flee across the border to Venezuela.

Lutherans Abandon Program

In the central state of Boyaca, the entire missionary program of the Evangelical Lutheran Church has been abandoned. In March their last outpost, which was manned by two nurses, was burned to the ground. A number of Protestant churches throughout the country have been closed and sealed, with threats of fines and imprisonment if the churches were reopened. Local Conservative police have burned and destroyed books and other Protestant material found in churches and pastors' homes.

In many towns the police have forced Protestants to go before priests in attempts to make the

PATTISON LETTER TO GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS

April 10, 1950

To members of the State Department and U. S. Senate
Dear Sir:

I have just returned from my third visit to Colombia, and ask the privilege of laying before you certain facts relative to religious persecution that is taking place there. . . .

There has been a good deal of hesitancy on the part of Evangelical groups working in Colombia to make public protest for a number of reasons, one being the fear of reprisals. Another reason is that we had hoped the wave of persecution would soon be eliminated by saner minds. The situation, instead of getting better, is getting worse all the time, and there seems no alternative but to bring these facts before the people of our country, so they will know the true situation in Colombia as it affects religious freedom.

While I was in Colombia, a number of Colombians who have held in the past and now hold prominent positions in the government, also an editor of one of the liberal papers, expressed to our mission representatives and others their opinion that public opinion in the United States is being watched by the conservatives and that publicizing the facts of persecution in Colombia is perhaps the only recourse against the present regime of persecution wherein Protestants as such are feeling the wrath of Roman Catholicism at its worst because of the identification of the two faiths with liberalism and fascism respectively.

In November of 1949 a group representing the Committee on Cooperation in Latin America, which is an organization through which almost all Protestant bodies working in South America cooperate, made a presentation before State Department officials on this matter of religious persecution in Colombia. Since that time the conditions in Colombia have become worse. In fact the day before I left Colombia, that is, on Sunday March 19th, an incident affecting one of our women missionaries took place. You will find that incident clearly set forth in one of the papers attached to this letter. Another paper lists a number of such incidents, on any of which full documentation can be supplied.

The Lutheran Church, which with the Presbyterians has the largest United States mission representation in Colombia, is ready to add its expressed protest to the religious persecution being experienced by Protestants under the present regime. The Scandinavian Alliance missionaries have been forced to leave—fleeing to Venezuela. Smaller groups have experienced at least as severe persecution.

Our representatives in New York or Colombia stand ready to furnish additional data or aid you in any investigation which will help to reveal the true facts.

Daniel M. Pattison, Treasurer-elect
Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions

Background for Persecution

ON APRIL 9, 1948, while the Pan American Conference was in session in Bogota, Colombia's capital, an uprising occurred which resulted in the destruction of a large area in the center of the city and similar destruction in many outlying areas. This followed the assassination of the Liberal leader, Gaitan. The press reported this as a Communist revolt but, although the Communists took part in it, it was more truly an anti-clerical uprising, as would seem indicated by the fact that Roman Catholic property was destroyed in all parts of the country while nothing was done anywhere against Protestant churches or buildings.

Before the elections of June, 1949, the Roman Catholic Church came out clearly as supporters of the Conservative party and from pulpit and by posters, placed in public places, declared that no faithful Catholic would vote the Liberal ticket. In spite of this, the Liberals won the election. Therefore, more drastic methods were called for to assure a Conservative victory in the presidential election which was to have occurred in 1950. A wave of persecution swept over the country, and Liberals were "liquidated" in many areas. Others were driven out of their towns and villages and lost all their possessions.

Because of this wave of terror which swept over the country the Liberals, who controlled the senate, voted to change the date of the presidential election to November 27, 1949, thus hoping to stop the carnage. The wave of terror, directed by the local government officials and the police, continued, and finally the Liberals, in an effort to save their followers from assassination, decided to boycott the election since there was no possibility of it being carried on in a fair and unbiased manner. Meanwhile the Congress and the Assembly, as well as the Supreme Court, had been suspended by the Conservative president, Dr. Mariano Ospina Perez. To date they have not been reinstated because the "unrest" (fostered by the government itself) continues and hence also, the "emergency," which was the pretext used by the president to assume dictatorial powers. So he continues to govern by decree. The press and the radio continue to operate under strict censorship, and there is no liberty of speech nor of assembly.

It is said that in some districts, such as the Department of Boyaca, no Liberals remain. The city of Bogota and other large centers have many displaced persons who have taken refuge there. Among them are missionaries of the Lutheran Church and several faith missions, as well as many Evangelical pastors who have been driven out of their stations and have had their property destroyed.

Although there have been many rumors of revolutions, no organized armed opposition has been made by the Liberals. In every part of the country, however, there is underground opposition. Most of the violence seems to occur in the rural districts, rather than in the cities.

A word should be added about the government organization in Colombia in order to show how a Conservative president, in spite of a Liberal congress, has been able to dominate the country. It is very simple: the president appoints the governors of the Departments (States,) they in turn appoint the mayors of the cities and towns, who, in turn, employ the police and under-officials. It has been proved that most of the persecution has been carried on by the local officials and the police and not by the local population. In all of their efforts, however, the local officials have the enthusiastic support and prodding of the local priests. It is said that the president-elect, Lauriano Gomez, spent five months last year with Franco in Spain. A pattern, similar to that followed by Franco, seems to be emerging in Colombia, and the present set-up has all the ear-marks of a "police state."

GIVING A REASON FOR OUR HOPE. By Carl F. H. Henry. (Wilde, 96 pp., $1.50.)

WITH THE WRITER of the two books reviewed listed as main speaker for General Conference in Freeman in August, it is quite urgent that a better acquaintance with him be sought. This is possible to some extent by reading his books.

Carl Henry includes himself unapologetically with those accepting a thoroughgoing Biblical Christianity. From this orientation he speaks with a "two-edged sword" in a way that is quite uncommon among avowed conservatives.

With one edge of the sword he cuts away at the inconsistencies of modern systems of thought that eliminate the necessity for a supernatural revelation of God. Throughout Giving a Reason for Our Hope as well as other works of his he has made it clear that he has thoroughly and sympathetically acquainted himself with modern systems of thought. This book consists of the typical questions asked by college students, who have been exposed to such modern systems, when they confront Biblical Christianity. The questions asked and answered are grouped under the following heads: the knowledge of God, Christianity and non-Christian views, Christianity and science, Christianity and evil, Christ and the Trinity, man's nature, Christianity and history, and personal problems. Some of the detailed questions are: "What of the claim that man only creates gods like himself?" "Since there are so many ideas of God why isn't it enough just to have one's own belief in God—as long as one isn't an atheist—and to live right?" "If a Hindu were brought up in India in a Hindu family, and from the day of his birth to the day of his death he never heard any other than Hinduism, what would happen to him? What of those who lived before Christ?" "What is the Christian view of human progress?" "Don't you think a Christian ought to pursue a policy of non-violence?"

One gathers certain impressions from this book.

Why I Came Back

by Magdalene Friesen

To come back or not to come back—that was the problem that faced me after my return home to the States last summer. I was engulfed in a flood of thoughts. It is about time to go into some profession; now is a good time to earn money, wages are high, why not stay nearer home and enjoy ties of family and friendship. Those voices spoke; but I could not rid myself of another quiet but persistant little voice calling me back to Europe to a work I had found satisfying, challenging, and rich in the type of reward that cannot be counted in terms of dollars and cents. That little voice won out. Before long my sails were once more set in the direction of Germany—this time to serve in the Nachbarschaftsheim in Berlin.

At times it had been a bit difficult to explain why I was going back and just what my work was to be. Some persons cannot quite understand how one can help people in Europe if one does not give them a slice of bread or a pair of shoes. I found it hard to express the thought that there were closer and deeper needs than the physical and that they too must be met. Now that I am in Berlin and have seen some of the conditions of life or existence about me, I can perhaps more adequately clothe those feelings in words.

On my return to Germany I was struck anew by the grim scarred remains of walls that once housed happy families, by the endless heaps of twisted rubble, by the worn and patched clothing of those I pass on the streets, by the drawn and hopeless faces of women from whom years of suffering have sapped the last vestiges of femininity and beauty. I enter some homes of our Kreuzberg area and find conditions that defy description—dark, cramped, dirty, unheated rooms that must spell home to thousands of human beings. An unmarried mother limps on her one leg to the door in answer to our knock and tells how she lost everything during the war years including her parents and her leg. In an unheated and very dirty kitchen we find five children romping about while the father, unemployed since almost a year ago, roams the streets in a vain attempt to find work, and the mother, wearing a coat to keep warm, worries about another little mouth that will be added to the family within a month or so.

Even worse than the loss of home and possessions is the loss of faith so prevalent in Germany today. As one bright-eyed old Trümmerfrau (a woman whose job is cleaning up ruins) told me, "Money lost, nothing lost; honour lost, much lost; faith lost, everything lost." She had held on to her faith, but many have not. Particularly among the young people are countless who have completely lost hold during the chaos of the last years and don't know where to strike roots in order to build their life anew. As an antidote to their unhappiness, they turn to all the pleasures which the city offers which, putting it mildly, does not add to the building of their character.

However dark the present hour, hope cannot, dare not die in the human heart. One senses its subtle influence as the Germans make ready to greet the springtime. Unsightly rubble heaps are being cleared away to make room for parks; the woven fences and fantastically improvised gates that enclosed little vegetable gardens are being removed and the grounds will be used for flowers and shrubbery; church grounds are being restored to their former dignity and beauty even if the church building itself is still a bombed-out shell.

These signs of hope in an ever-recurring life, are to me a symbol of our life and our work in Berlin. The longing for the good and the beautiful will never die and it is our privilege in the Nachbarschaftsheim to be able to extend to the people among whom we live some beauty, some joy, some love. As the little boys along the canal share their meager crumbs with the gulls on the water, so may I share the light given me with those who pass through the door of our Heim.

First, that Biblical Christianity can carry on an intelligent conversation with modern thought. Second, that many of the basic criteria of non-Christian philosophies of our day are inevitably traceable to the Hebrew-Christian tradition represented in the Bible.

Mennonites will be interested to see how Henry deals with nonresistance. While Henry does not accept the position of nonresistance, he does refer to it as a man-sized question in contrast to the other questions which are asked. He seems to speak with considerably more sympathy on this question than the typical conservative Christian or non-Historic-Peace-Church Protestant.

Although the book is not easy reading it is very rewarding. Pastors will find it particularly helpful in answering questions of thinking young people.

THE UNEASY CONSCIENCE OF MODERN FUNDAMENTALISM. By Carl F. H. Henry. (Eerdmans, 89 pp. $1.00.)

WITH THE OTHER EDGE of the sword he cuts away at the inconsistencies of conservative Christianity even though he identifies himself unquestionably with that group. The book is not a denial or a questioning of the great Biblical verities as held by the Christian who accepts historic Biblical Christianity. But it is a passionate appeal for an application of those very fundamentals to the solution of world problems. We quote, "The church needs a progressive fundamentalism with a social message." There is something contagious about the fearlessness of Henry in going against the advice of some of his friends who thought that this is not the time to criticize his own position. Some of the chapter titles are indicative of Henry's fresh and contagious thinking: "The Evaporation of Fundamentalist Humanitarianism," "The Protest Against Foredoomed Failure," "The Most Embarrassing Evangelical Divorce," "The Apprehension Over Kingdom Preaching," and "The Dawn of a New Reformation."

Henry believes that by contributing to the uplift of humanity and the eradication of the common evils of society, as far as possible, many more people will be brought to Jesus Christ as Saviour.

Bluffton College:

by Harriet Burkh

President Lloyd L. Ramseyer

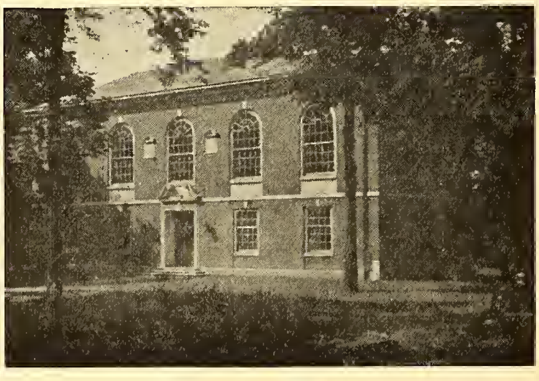
BLUFFTON COLLEGE, in its fifty years of growth and service, has shed an ever-lengthening beacon of educational and spiritual light on those young seekers of truth who have entered its doors.

Opening on November 5, 1900, as Central Mennonite College, it has grown from an institution of junior college rank with four teachers, one building, and nineteen students to one with twenty-three full-time faculty members and twelve part-time instructors, twelve buildings, and a peak enrollment of 318.

The college was originally founded by the Middle District Conference of the General Conference of Mennonites of North America, whose leaders carried the strong conviction that a school was needed to educate its own young people and to train its workers.

When, in 1913, the decision was made to establish a Biblical seminary in connection with the College, several other branches of the Mennonite church also cooperated and contributed to the undertaking, and have been represented in the organization and student body of the college since then. This seminary was incorporated into a separate institution, known as Witmarsum Seminary, in 1921.

Legal existence of Bluffton College as such began on January 27, 1914, when the property of Central Mennonite College was transferred to Bluffton College and Mennonite Seminary. The institution was organized as a group of three schools, each having its own dean.



Musselman Library

N. E. Byers was dean of the College of Liberal Arts; J. H. Langenwalter, dean of the Mennonite Seminary; and G. A. Lehman headed the School of Music. It was also during 1914 that Ropp Hall, Science Hall, and the heating plant were added to the College buildings.

Music Hall and the Health Center had been purchased in 1910. In 1916 "the Barn" was built through student and faculty labor, and in 1929 the construction of the library was made possible through the generous gift of Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Musselman. The library, with its fine educational facilities, has become the cultural center of the College and community.

Lincoln Hall, built in 1924, was the result of a local and a student drive for funds. Following the second World War, the influx of new students necessitated the purchase of three new homes—Lehman and Hirschy Cottages and Sauder Home—all of which adjoin the campus. Last year the cornerstone was laid for Bluffton's newest addition, Founders Hall, which will serve the College and community in the capacity of auditorium-gymnasium.

College Leaders

Throughout these years of material, intellectual, and spiritual growth, the College has been guided by leaders who have given outstanding Christian service to the institution and to its ideals.

N. C. Hirschy, a real scholar and a progressive leader, piloted the newly-founded college in its initial years. Following his resignation in 1908, S. K. Mosiman was appointed to the presidency. This devoted leader gave twenty-five years of faithful and self-sacrificing labor to Bluffton College, guiding it through years of uncertainty and financial difficulties, and giving such untiring service that he will always be regarded as the chief founder of Bluffton College.

Mosiman was succeeded by A. S. Rosenberger, who accomplished the difficult task of unifying the forces and working toward a sound financial basis in a period of nation-wide economic instability. He resigned after three and one-half years of service because of ill health, and was followed by Lloyd L. Ramseyer present administration head.

During the thirty-five years since Bluffton College granted its first A. B. degree, nine hundred eighty-two A.B., fifty-three B.S., sixty B.S.M., and seven honorary degrees have been conferred.

The curriculum has been greatly expanded at Bluffton College during the fifty years, and this year a new department of elementary education has been added. From a few courses in typewriting and penmanship, which were completely dropped at one time, the business department has expanded until today a major in both business and economics is available. The division of speech has grown in a few years to the place where a minor in it is now offered.

The college has always been noted for its strong department of music, which still is one of its most important fields. The work done by the Choral Society and the Vesper Choir serve to acquaint the public with the achievements of the Bluffton music department.

Years of Progress

Margaret Soldner

Improvement of buildings and a addition of new ones, as well as expansion in the curriculum, has served in the growth of Bluffton College.

New Gymnasium

The addition of Founders Hall will enable Bluffton College to increase its usefulness as an educational center. Recreational, social and cultural needs will be better served by this new $280,000 auditorium-gymnasium. Approximately 75% of the funds have been raised. The contractor has said that the basketball floor will be ready for use next fall and he expects to have the entire building completed by January 1, 1951 if sufficient funds are available.

Important details in the new structure are the 50x90 foot gymnasium floor and the 25x80 foot recreation room. Also rating importance is the 33x105 foot stage. Other facilities include a kitchen, snack shop, hygenic dressing room, shower facilities, and a student union. Aside from the adequate lobby space there is room for a seating capacity of 2000 for either sports or public meetings.

Offices for physical education directors, a therapeutic room to care for minor physical ailments, practice rooms, and display cases are other minor services of the building.

Into the erection of the newest building go the hopes and ideals of the fifty years' progress of Bluffton College to be celebrated by the commencement activities this spring which will be the most extensive that the College has ever held in its fifty years of existence.

Commencement Activities

Swiss Day, June 2, the first of its kind in Ohio, will start Bluffton College's 50th Anniversary Commencement activities with an unusual flavor.

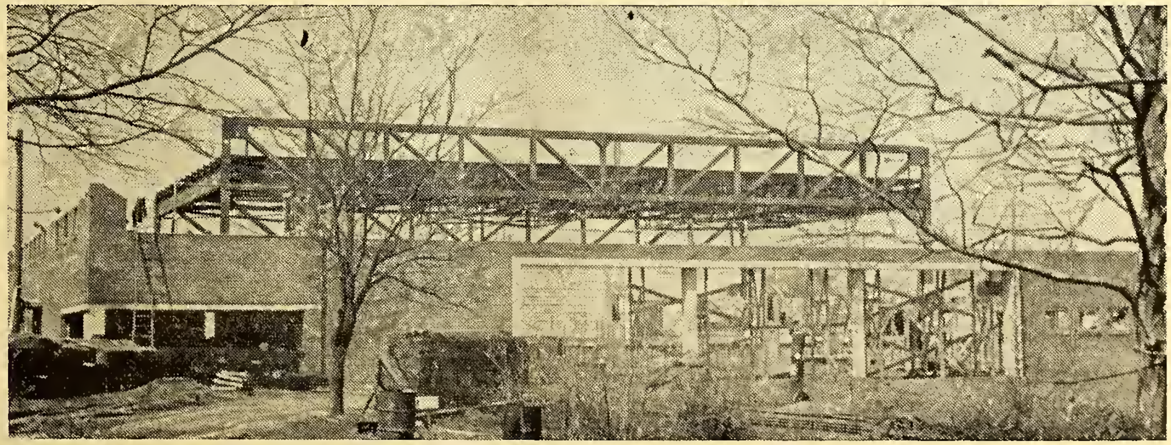
Displays of Swiss carvings, novelties, needlework, old letters, books, Bibles, photographs, and other things of historic interest will be arranged. Swiss cooking and the auctioning of a 200 pound Swiss cheese will be features at the noon dinner. Music by Swiss talent, skits, stories, and yodeling will be presented during the program. Swiss Day is planned for the descendents of Swiss ancestors and the College constituency from Swiss settlements. "Swietzer Dietch" will be spoken chiefly.

S. K. Mosiman

"Macbeth", the Shakespearan tragedy, will be presented on the evenings of June 2 and 3. This play is the largest undertaking the Bluffton College speech department has ever attempted.

Crowning of the Queen and class exercises combined with an anniversary program will make Saturday, June 3, an eventful day. Miss Lois Rich, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Rich, Washington, Illinois, will be crowned queen in a colorful cremony. Fredrick Leichty, son of Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Leichty, Berne, Indiana, was chosen as the outstanding senior man, and will escort the queen to the throne.

Speakers A. S. Rosenberger and S. F. Pannabecker will discuss "The Mennonites Develop Ideals in Religious Education" and "Bluffton's Contribution to These Ideals," respectively, during the anniversary pro-



Founders Hall—Bluffton College's New Auditorium-Gymnasium gram. L. L. Ramseyer's topic will be "Bluffton Looks into the next Fifty Years"; J. N. Smucker will also speak on the "Rededication of the Friends and Stewards of Bluffton College." Formal presentation of the new book, Bluffton College—An Adventure in Faith will be made at this time.

An alumni baseball game, the sidewalk box ceremony, and an alumni banquet are traditional events to be held also on Saturday, June 3.

Baccalaureate services will be held Sunday afternoon, June 4. A reception in President Ramseyer's home and vesper services will follow Baccalaureate. Setting a new precedent for the spring activities will be the presentation of Handel's "Messiah" Sunday evening.

D. Elton Trueblood will give the commencement address, "The Responsibility of the Enkindled", Monday morning, June 5. Trueblood is professor of philosophy at Earlham College and has written a number of widely read books. A commencement luncheon will close the 50th anniversary commencement activities of Bluffton College.

Not only will this gala celebration commemorate Bluffton's achievements in the past, but it will also point the way to a greater and brighter future for the College—a future guided by truth, faith, and dedication to Christian service.

Greeting and Felicitations to Bluffton College . . .

GOSHEN COLLEGE is happy to express felicitations and good wishes to Bluffton College on this occasion that marks the passing of a half century of service for another Mennonite institution. In this day of the rise of materialistic philosophies and the advance of paganism on many fronts, the work of the Christian college becomes increasingly necessary and important. May Bluffton College continue to train Christians who will be the future teachers, ministers, doctors, dentists, and civic and religious leaders among her constituency.

GOSHEN COLLEGE

President

BETHEL COLLEGE rejoices with its sister institution, Bluffton College, in the observance of their fiftieth anniversary. Our Heavenly Father has visibly blessed Bluffton College throughout these years. There have been dark and discouraging times, but nevertheless under the guidance of God the College has moved forward and proved a rich blessing to the community as well as the church of Christ as a whole. Our church colleges stand together. What hurts the one harms the other; what is helpful to one is a blessing to the other. We extend our hand of fellowship and pray that God may bless and use Bluffton College in the future as he has in the past.

Canadian Bible College on the Move

by Arnold J. Regier

WINNIPEG, May 14. On Thursday we as teachers decided to move the College to Altona if such an arrangement could be made. We phoned these people, and and they immediately offered us the Bible school buildings and two large transfetr trucks to bring us out. We received a royal welcome. All along the way people looked at us poor refugees. Since they had gotten forty other evacuees from the city, we made up a caravan of four trucks. It was quite an experience for we had to go around a long way to get there. The roads are very heavy so that it required nearly eight hours to travel the hundred miles. The students, however, were a jolly bunch, and we had many a good laugh en route. I told them that I had always dreamed of a college on wheels and so thought that this was now a realization of my dreams.

We spent yesterday getting ready for school. I think everything is ready for classes to begin at eight o'clock tomorrow morning (Monday, May 15). We have two large class rooms at our disposal, a library, chapel, and office. So we are well away. We brought some books from the library and plan to replenish them as they are needed. In fact, I think we will finish the school term here for I do not think the health authorities will let us go back until the building is absolutely dry and in good shape which will probably take five or six weeks.

Our College building, even though the grounds are under water, is not too far under. The water has not reached the floor as yet and we have some hopes this evening that the waters are beginning to hold their own. So, I do not think there should be too much damage. We are very fortunate for many homes have water reaching up to the second floor.

D. C. WEDEL, BETHEL'S ACTING PRESIDENT

ONE hundred and six seniors will graduate from Bethel College at the end of this school year.

David C. Wedel, professor of religious education, has been appointed acting president of Bethel College during President E. G. Kaufman's sabbatical year's leave of absence.

Wedel, a graduate of Bethel College, has done advanced study at the Colgate-Rochester Divinity School, the University of Chicago Divinity School, and the Iliff School of Theology. He is preparing a thesis for a doctor of theology degree.

Having been pastor of the First Mennonite Church at Halstead for ten years, Wedel has also had pastorates in Methodist churches in Colorado during his study last year.

Wedel is assistant to the president during the current year. He has also been acting dean at Bethel during 1947-48.

Jottings

NORTHERN DISTRICT

Regier, whose return to China was delayed, spoke in our church on March 15. A mixed octet, representing the Canadian Bible College at Winnipeg, Manitoba, presented a sacred program on April 23. On April 27, Cornelius Dyck, M. C. C. worker in Asuncion, Paraguay, told us about the conditions of our Mennonites in South America. The Relief Committee and others packed clothing recently. Clothing amounting to 1,400 pounds were packed and sent to Akron, Pennsylvania. Erna J. Fast left for Germany on April 20. She is working under the M. C. C., serving the World Council of Churches; her work will be with college students.—Mrs. George Eitzen, Corr.

TWO SONG FESTIVALS ON MAY 7

THE ANNUAL SONG FESTIVAL of the Western District drew some 3,500 people to the Memorial Hall at North Newton. Some 25 churches participated in addition to the Freeman choir. The afternoon program consisted of individual choir numbers while the evening program consisted of two groups of numbers by the massed choir. W. H. Hohman directed the massed choir.

SOME 340 PEOPLE were attracted to a hymn festival planned by five northern Indiana churches—Goshen, Silverstreet Middlebury, Topeka, and Nappanee. Marvin Dirks was the director of this program, at Topeka, Indiana which featured a 70-voice choir augmented by a 26-voice junior choir. A carefully planned program made use of ample amount of congregational singing.

—First Church, Mountain Lake, Minnesota: Our special spring meetings this year were conducted by Herbert Roszhart, pastor of the Central District Church at Aurora, Nebraska. Marie Regier gave us a report on our China mission field. On Friday, March 17, a local National Association of Evangelicals Rally was held in our church with John Walkup and R. L. Decker in charge. The work of the N. A. E. was presented with a challenge for a united front among Evangelical believers. The Youth Volunteers, a junior and senior high school aged group of young people, have recently completed a project of taking off the old paint from twenty hospital beds donated to the local Home for the Aged, by an outside donor. The group met every Tuesday and Thursday evening for many evenings. The beds were re-enameled free of charge by a factory outside of Mountain Lake. Early in April we were privileged to have a native Cuban in our church with a representative from the United World Mission. The message of the Cuban was translated as he spoke by an interpreter.—Mrs. Willmar Loewen, Corr.

MIDDLE DISTRICT

—First Church, Wadsworth, Ohio: The Middle District Conference held here April 27-30, despite some rainy weather, was pronounced a successful conference by our visitors. About 800 people were served during Friday, Saturday, and Sunday. The Sunday services were held in the high school auditorium except for the junior Sunday school which was held in the church.—George McBride, Corr.

WESTERN DISTRICT

—Hoffnungsau Church, Inman, Kansas: On Good Friday evening our choir presented an Easter cantata. A three-week vacation Bible school is again conducted at our church with an attendance of around sixty children. Several musical programs were given recently by the Bethel College quartette, the Bethel College choir, the Freeman Junior College choir, the men's chorus from the Bethany Church near Kingman, and one by the octet from the Canadian Bible College at Winnipeg, Manitoba.—Mrs. Ben M. Ediger, Corr.

—Burrton Church, Burrton, Kansas: Elizabeth Ann Regier, who has just returned from voluntary service in Mexico, left last week for a short visit at the Bethesda Hospital at Vineland, Ontario. Mr. and Mrs. Don Penner moved to a farm close to Newton. Ladies Aid met on Wednesday evening to finish a quilt before summer. They were to bring thread, scissors, needles, pie, and their husbands to sand and varnish tables for daily vacation Bible school. Harvey Holtzrichter of Burrton and Linda Kliewer of Henderson, Nebraska, were married on May 12. They will make their home on a farm northeast of Burrton.—Corr.

The Ladies Mission Society gave a program on April 30 with Mrs. Pete Becker as guest speaker. The Mission Society is contributing to the cost of a flax rug which the congregation is laying in the vestibule of the church.—Mrs. Frank Schmidt. Corr.

—First Church, Reedley, California: A large group, composed of women of all the Reedley churches, met in the church basement for an afternoon tea, May 1. It was voted to form a local organization of church women to meet on specific days each year: the World Day of Prayer and a May Fellowship Day. The Sunday school picnic was held May 7. At the May meeting of the Worthwhile Circle, it was decided to sponsor a drive for approximately seven hundred dollars which will be used to furnish some part of the mental hospital being erected in this locality.—Mrs. R. Harder, Corr.

An interesting feature of the Conference was the smooth and orderly dispatch of business. In nearly all of the business sessions the work was finished ahead of schedule and there was none of that final rush so often experienced in conferences.

A Church at Seminary Under Consideration

Among the resolutions passed were: to encourage the practice and teaching of tithing and stewardship; to express to the proper authorities our desire that the present draft law be allowed to expire without replacement; that our churches cooperate with the Evangelism Committee of General Conference and other groups in sponsoring evangelism programs; and, that we express, our willingness to cooperate with the Mennonite Biblical Seminary Board and the Home Mission Committee in working out the matter of establishing a Mennonite Church at our Seminary if expedient.

E. J. Bohn Re-elected President

The officers for the following year are: Ernest J. Bohn, Pandora, Ohio, president; Irvin Richert of Dalton, Ohio as vice-president; G. T. Soldner of Bluffton, Ohio, secretary; and N. N. Soldner of Pandora, Ohio as treasurer. The First Church, Berne, Indiana, offered to entertain the Conference in its next session, April 26-29, 1951.

The Wadsworth Church proved itself a very gracious host in providing for the comforts and material needs of the guests. Their kind hospitality will long be remembered.

Workers in Long-Term Voluntary Service

HERE is a complete list of the workers in Voluntary Service who are serving one-year or longer terms. The address of the unit where they are located is given as well as the home address of the worker and the Conference with which they are affiliated.

These workers represent our youth in service for the church and for Christ. They have made the adventurous step of giving themselves to the cause of serving Christ by serving in these units. It is a significant experience and one in which we all may share.

This list is being printed with a suggestion that local youth societies take upon themselves the project of writing to the workers. Such letters will support the workers in their endeavors, and will give everyone a closer tie to our church's labors.

Finally, you might look at these units with the thought in mind of volunteering. The next training school will be in July at Akron, Pennsylvania. If you volunteer, you go to Akron for a month's training; then you go out to the unit in which you serve. If you want more information, write to the Voluntary Service Section, Mennonite Central Committee, Akron, Pennsylvania.

Evangelist's Five-point Peace Program

IN A United Press dispatch from Boston, April 24, there was an article telling of Evangelist Billy Graham's Five-point Peace Program. Graham, president of Northwestern Bible Institute, Minneapolis, Minnesota, spoke to 50,000 people on Boston's Common on a chilly cold day. This was the climax of Billy Graham's 14-city tour to "set New England on fire for God."

Among other things he said, "We here call on our President and Congress to declare immediately a national 'R' day—a day in which this nation will repent of our sins and seek God's forgiveness."

Also, in his speech he laid out his five-point peace plan which the U. P. reported as follows:

1. "We must maintain strong military power for defense at any cost.

2. "We must strengthen organizations like the F.B.I. to maintain internal protection. We must watch for spies in our harbors and skies.

3. "We must keep our economic stability for security.

4. "We must continue confidence in each other—race with race, creed with creed, color with color, remembering we are all Americans. America is the nation that has made every man a king.

5. "We must have a moral and spiritual regeneration. To produce this we must meet God's demands. He demands repentance of sins, individual faith in Christ, national humility, and united prayers for peace."

Finally Graham concluded: "There's no hope for world peace this year unless God sends a real old-fashioned heaven-sent Holy Ghost revival."

This is indeed a strange mixture of nationalism and religion. We all would concur that there is need for repentance and that our hope for peace will be realized only when the spirit of God stirs men's souls to repent of their evil ways and to seek the way of the Lord. But, then to mix this sound doctrine with the pap of nationalism simply cancels out its effectiveness.

The first four points of Mr. Graham's "peace plan" are points that have been said by political and military interests over and over again. The first three points are points that have been said by Hitler, Mussolini, and Caeser. The first four points have been stated and restated by political leaders like Churchill, Roosevelt and Truman. They are points which are in the basic interest of nations and not of people, therefore they are nationalistic.

Try to imagine the apostle Paul on Mars hill or speaking to the court of Caeaser himself, proclaiming the gospel of Christ and the "peace of God" in such terms. Imagine Paul saying this is the way to be 'secure.' It is utterly alien to the gospel Paul preached. Likewise, it is utterly alien to the Christian gospel.

The 'security' the Christian gospel preaches is a much more disarming 'security' than the type which secures itself with guns and agents snooping under beds and behind doors. Paul faced his pagan world with the armor of God. It is our Christian calling today to face our pagan enemy with a similar armor. Let us not yield to the temptation of making our calling less than what it is.

June Program Materials Published

THE Young People's Union has published the last of this year's series of Program Materials. The June materials deal with "Outdoor Worship", giving plans for worship programs and many ideas on meaningful services of worship in the out of doors. These materials were prepared by Myrtle Wasser of Roundhead, Ohio, Secretary-Treasurer of the Young People's Union.

Plans have been made for ten issues of Program Materials for the 1950-'51 season. These materials will be issued beginning with September. Each issue will appear at least one month early so that local committees can make their plans.

The materials planned for next year and the months for which they will appear are as follows:

September—"Evangelism"

October—"Methods of Visual Aids" This will be a discussion of how best to use visual aids and where to get good visual aids.

November—"Harvest Home"—a Thanksgiving theme

December—"Christmas"

January—"New Year"

February—"Voluntary Service"

March—"Easter'

April—"General Conference"—an introduction to the full work of the Conference.

May—"Vocations"—what shall be my life work?

June—"Nonresistance"

Young People at Bethel Mission, Winnipeg

OUR young people consist of some of the Canadian Mennonite Bible College students, but the majority of the group is made up of rural students who are either in training at hospitals, secular colleges, the university, or normal school, plus others who are working in the city. Our Y. P. members come and go each year as students finish their training and as others go back to the farms so that each fall we are confronted with an almost entirely new group.

We have weekly meetings, usually of the program type, with good participation. We have also had special speakers for certain programs. Besides these we have had a number of very successful socials. Our attendance ranges from about forty-five to seventy-five. We feel God is prospering our organization and we feel it is providing Christian fellowship for a goodly number of Mennonite young people in our city.

From Military Service to Christian Nonresistance

by Pierre Widmer, Nommay, France

A FEW days later I was admitted by the colonel, as an E.O.R. candidate, to the preparatory course which was being carried on in the regiment, and I changed barracks. I was then deliberately choosing to take a way that I had thought good to avoid seven years earlier in refusing to take advanced military training. And if I recall correctly, I felt a certain vexation of spirit, the feeling of having failed in my duty and of reversing my judgment. I could have been an officer for a long time like all my comrades; because of the principle involved I had not wanted to, and now I was changing my mind and was consenting to become one by the less glorious entrance—that for those who failed to pass the P.M.S. examination. It was disquieting. But after all my boyhood dream, which I believe was also the dream of my relatives, was going to be fulfilled. For I had no doubts about my success.

It should be said here that I was not an extraordinary E.O.R. candidate—it would be very interesting to question my instructors on this matter now—but I easily gained the favor of my chief, I do not know why. I was, I believe, liked and appreciated by them perhaps still more for my exemplary conduct than for my abilities as a leader. Having a temperament suited to training men, I felt entirely at ease in the exercises of commanding, and that was an essential factor for success. I did not have to work exceedingly hard, as did many of my comrades—some of whom failed nevertheless—and I easily passed the examination at the end of the course, which opened to me the doors of the Military School of St. Maixent.

It would have given me more prestige to have gained admission to St. Cyr, as had many of my former comrades from the normal school; but so much the worse, my promotion led me to take my work at St. Maixent. There also everything moved along smoothly, and I was promoted to the rank of second lieutenant in the reserves in April, 1936. Called up for only a year of service by reason of my age-group classification, I was to return to my home at the end of this course; but that was the time when the Germans were reoccupying the Ruhr, and we were kept under the colors during the critical period, until May, 1936.

The situation kept getting worse until 1938; I was mobilized at the time of the Sudeten War, and it was thought that war was certainly ahead. Already during the periods of instruction that I had to carry out meanwhile, I experienced a troublesome feeling of insecurity, of uneasiness, of great distress at the thought of war soon being inevitable and at the same time the thought that I, a Mennonite, was to be an officer, and that I would without doubt have to command the firing.

I know all the arguments which can be invoked to justify my position, and which many do not fail to use. These sophisms did not satisfy me and could not still my troubled conscience. I felt myself a pilgrim and a stranger in this world, yet at the same time bound by enormous bonds to my country, my terrestrial home bonds which I had neither the possibility or the liberty to break.

Besides, this was not the only problem that I had to solve; what I was experiencing as a teacher in the public school in the "mountain of the Doubs," where I was located with my company between 1936 and 1939, also worried me infinitely. There I did not have the liberty to bring that which I felt indispensable to all these youths with whom I was working: the Gospel of Jesus Christ, whereby they may be saved, the only way of salvation for these young lives. What could I do? Often I wept in the evening after a harassing day of classes and the adult course or the meeting of the "Amicale d'Anciens Eleves de l'Scole." And it is with these feelings, with this uncertainty, with these unsolved problems that I lived until the war. Then began another chapter of my life and experience.

August, 1939. The mobilization of the people living along the border. The anxiety of waiting: will there be another Munich? No, that is not possible another time. Everyone feels it this time; the governments of the West cannot give way again. September comes on the wave of anxiety, bringing with it the war.

I am in Alsace, at the end of the Maginot Line, and we are working hard to put into good condition whatever part of the front we can. The Rhine is there in front of us, an imposing, but insufficient barrier. Already people speak of an eventual attack with gas. Certainly, we are not attacking, and if we are here, it is only in position of defense. My uneasy conscience tries to satisfy itself with this truth: we are not the aggressors; we are taking up arms solely to come to the aid of the small nations eaten up by the monster, and to prevent any eventual aggression against our own country.

But there is a sight which torments me exceedingly: it is that of the evacuation of the Alsatian population. In reality, a zone of about ten kilometers all along the border must be immediately and completely evacuated by order of the military authority, in order to avoid having the inhabitants find themselves under fire in case the Germans would attack. And absolutely powerless, I witness the heart-rending spectacle of the exodus. Unforgettable memory! Oh the mournful passing by of these thousands and thousands of people carrying along—to live who knows where, who knows how long—what is absolutely necessary, thirty kilos of baggage per person. Oh, the distressing sight of these mothers and these children, departing with the old people—the men are mobilized to leave everything, to tear themselves away from the past, from the beloved house, from home, because of war!

Beyond Our Own

CHICAGO. A committee report to the National Conference on Higher Education has recommended that every college hire an instructor in religion of professional rank.

The Committee on Religion in Higher Education said in its report that the colleges cannot "honorably ignore" religious teaching.

"If this responsibility is ignored," the report said, "students may become subject to a kind of confused and lopsided thinking which frequently results in their abandonment of religion as a guiding and stabilizing factor in adult life."—Christian Science Monitor

INDIANAPOLIS. Cooperation among conservative Protestants at the world level is nearing reality, J. Elwin Wright, secretary of international cooperation for the National Association of Evangelicals, told the association's eighth annual convention here. He reported on plans for an International Association of Evangelicals mapped in March at a meeting held at Hildenborough near London which he said was attended by thirty delegates representing 14 countries. At that time, he said, an organizing convention was scheduled to be held in Switzerland in August of 1952.—Protestant Voice

LOUISVILLE. Bars against admission of Negroes to Kentucky colleges are being removed rapidly with amendment of the Day Segregation Law.

Latest institution to open its doors to Negroes is the University of Louisville. Trustees of this college have voted unanimously to admit Negroes to the graduate and professional schools next September, and to the whole university in September of 1951.—Christian Science Monitor focus our main attention on having large mission sales. In the particular sewing society of which I am a member, we have for the past years centered much effort on working for relief—making new articles and mending used ones. Also we have made many items for our various mission stations at home and in foreign countries. Even now we are busy planning various articles we want to make and send along with one of our missionaries to India next year.

Considering all the time busy mothers are willing to give in making all the articles for missions—whether sold at sales or directly sent to missionaries—I cannot see that that constitutes "painless giving."

evangelicals renounce their religion. Several of these people, it has been reported, were murdered when they refused. Only the timely and frequent intervention of units of the Colombian army have prevented the murdering of scores of Colombian Protestants. The army is controlled by the country's Liberal Party, to which most Protestants belong.

A Church Dynamited

The most famous Presbyterian incident occurred on November 6, 1949, when the front of the Presbyterian church in Dabeiba, Antioquia, built of stone two feet thick, was destroyed by dynamiting. Members of the Conservative-controlled town police did the blasting, with the town mayor and priest looking on.

On December 23, Presbyterian missionary Paul Winn was driving to Colombia's capital, Bogota, when he picked up a man suffering from a severe head wound. The man was a Protestant who had just escaped from an attack on his house. In the town of Cali, a Protestant wedding service was broken up by police who arrested the pastor and assaulted the bridal couple and members of the marriage party. The pastor later managed to escape from the town in disguise. Another pastor was falsely arrested for the death of the Conservative president-elect, Franco-trained Lauriano Gomez.

In Santa Elena, Tolima, a pastor and his brother were beaten with rifle butts and the flat sides of machetes after the town's Protestants had been accused of "emptying" the Roman Catholic churches. And last month, Presbyterian missionary Miss Frances Hitchcock of Erie, Pennsylvania, was conducting a church school service in Armero, Tolima, when the congregation was attacked by police.

We encourage your continued support of your Conference work. May God bless you in your stewardship.

Looking Toward Freeman

I am looking toward General Conference with interest.

I count it a pleasure to belong to this group, not that it is the only God-called group, but that it is and can be a group which can be used to God's glory by His grace.

It should be for me a time of interest and blessing. I will again have the privilege of meeting many of God's servants and choice laypeople. There will also be the new representatives and servants of churches which have come to General Conference for the first time.

There will be a time of blessing in hearing the progress reports of our various God-given avenues of service. There will also be the challenge that goes with it. By the grace of God we will have to enter into this challenge to fulfill our God-entrusted tasks. There will also be the messages of instruction and inspiration for entering these tasks.

My prayer is that the Spirit of Christ and the fruit of the Spirit may be operating in all of our lives, that instead of self-will dominating, there may be the guidance and direction of the Holy Spirit.

Editorials

A SURE WAY TO DISCOURAGE a missionary sent out by our church as a representative of us on the battlefield with paganism is, when speaking with them, to refer to the work they are carrying on for us as "your work." It is not primarily their work as missionaries; it is our work. We have, as a church, called them to this task after they have felt the call of Christ themselves. We have given the money to send them out and sustain them on the field. If we have been faithful in prayer, we have also sustained them before the throne of Grace. Then by what quirk of logic do we suddenly shift from the first to the second person in our missionary grammar? Perhaps we can write off at least fifty per cent of this to simple carelessness and thoughtlessness. Perhaps more. But is it possible that there is also a temptation to compartmentalize and play favorites with respect to various phases of our total task as a Conference? Can those interested especially in relief work afford to speak of "our" work only when relief is concerned and about "your" work when mission and educational interests are the subject of discussion? Can those interested in education afford to speak of "your" work when relief and missionary interests are the subject of discussion? Can those interested in the missionary cause think of "our" work having its boundry around the foreign missionary task? When we say "Our Father" and pray "Thy Kingdom come" there is an inescapable inclusiveness that makes us a partner to every phase of the work of our church as we have been led to launch out in various areas by the Holy Spirit. This is so true and so real that whenever we yield to the temptation of playing favorites we ourselves are the first one to suffer from it. We need to keep this in mind particularly as the matter of Conference reorganization comes to the fore. If we do less than be guided by the principle that all the phases of our conference enterprise merit our equal interest and concern we may be praying "Our kingdom come." We need to keep our Kingdom-grammar straight.

PARENTS are very much interested that growing children become well-mannered. One of the greatest sources of chagrin to parents is to have a youngster fail to be appreciative with his prompt "thank you" for anything that is done for him. But we venture to say that there are times when this is out of place. One of those times is when the pastor or the Sunday-school teacher or the youth leader puts himself inadvertently in the place of God and thanks someone for something they have done not for them but for God and the church. What is the point in thanking people for doing their duty before God? We will in that way give them the false impression that they are doing it for us. After all God is the one who should thank them, and he does by giving them the peace and joy that comes from doing His will. If we add our "thank you" to that, individuals may be tempted to act on the basis of our approval rather than God's. We do not mean to say by this that silence is the only alternative. Doing the will of God should merit our commendation. But to say thank you to a Sunday school class that has done what they should have done for their own spiritual welfare anyway is one thing. To point out the deed and suggest that it is by such action that God's work goes forward in much the desired alternative.

IT MUST BE A PERFECT MYSTERY to the world to look at the church in time of grave international crisis. The church speaks always of love, forgiveness, mercy; she is concerned about justice in every sphere of life; she demands purity and separation from the world. She asks people to avoid the peril of indulgence in drinking, gambling, and worldly pleasures. She warns against the perils of disloyalty and divorce in the home. She asks the leaders of state to stress brotherhood and warns against hatred. But let one act like a Pearl Harbor come and the church lets down the bars and says to her boys "now it is right to kill!" The church in moments like that shifts into reverse. The church breaks communications with heaven and starts taking orders from the state. Furthermore, it is clearly evident from every war that has been fought that giving permission to kill takes down the bars so that the flood of satanic evil which the church has been holding back with the power of Christ suddenly overflows society. Such is the height of inconsistency. A voice has been lifted against that inconsistency at the Conference on Church and War held recently at Detroit (see pages 380 and 381) in which members of the major denominations who are concerned about this inconsistency counselled together. Said Culbert G. Rutenber of Eastern Baptist Seminary "It is nothing but heresy that when the state speaks, the Christian must obey.". . The mere fact that the state commands the Christian to go to war is in itself no proof that war is permissible for the Christian . . . The state cannot play God to the Christian." These things were being said by Baptists, Presbyterians, Methodists, and others, as Christians, who desire to obey implicitly the command of their Lord. It is becoming more evident throughout the church that to preach against sin all the way up to the point of satan's crowning sin and then be silent is the world's greatest absurdity.

Conference on Church and War

DETROIT, MICHIGAN. As 400 chosen delegates and 400 others gathered in stately Central Methodist Church in Detroit, their opening worship—punctuated with a meaningful period of corporated silence—led up to hard-hitting addresses by Clarence Pickett and Henry Hitt Crane. Pickett showed how history and world-need demand convinced reconciling Christianity; Crane dramatically identified our role with that of Judas, who expected Christ to rely on worldly power instead of the Cross.

Everywhere Except International Life

Next day, after an early long period of prayer and quiet in the church, Area I (The Theological Basis of Peace) was keynoted by Culbert Rutenber, of the Eastern Baptist Seminary, who demonstrated that the way of agape is not perfectionism but God's work of reconciliation through Christ in justice, truth, and hope. Five discussion groups took up this discussion for four hours, their findings being collated later. That evening Area II (Political and Social Implications) was introduced incisively by Dean Walter G. Muelder of Boston School of Theolgy, who showed that non-violence is being recognized as the scientific way in almost every area of social life except internationalism, and called upon Church peace groups to help create a community of values, support world reconstruction projects and develop the concept of a new world law. In ten discussion groups, this topic was then taken over for four hours of thorough consideration.

In Area III (Practical Instrumentalities of a Peace Program), ten groups met to explore possibilities of publicity and literature, cells, public presentations, denominational fellowships, action projects, parish programs, political emphases, programs in seminaries, colleges, and secondary schools, and pacifism as related to psychological counseling. The final day's sessions, under Edward Day's chairmanship, debated and voted Conference findings, heard A. J. Muste give a poignant call for dedication, and agreed on a Conference message.

Prayer and Fasting

Noon worship each day was led by Margueritte Harmon Bro, Alan Hunter giving a talk during the of these creative half-hour periods. Morning quiet before the day's program began was helpful. Most delegates fasted for the noon meal Thursday. Another important focus of the schedule was two meetings of denominational fellowships, which brought new solidarity and life to each of them.

Summary of

AN AFFIRMATION AND APPEAL

Man in the moment of his greatest scientific achievement faces the possibility of total self-destruction. To many, war seems the only answer. We believe that another way, grounded in the will of God, is open. In this hour of confusion and turmoil, the church is called to speak a distinctive and steadying word, drawn not from the judgments of the secular world, but from its gospel.

The insistent and absolute call of Christ is to His Cross. It is a call to repentance and commitment— repentance for our involvement in war and commitment to the power of reconciling love.

We, therefore, appeal to the Church of Christ throughout the world to break with war—to repent of warmaking now.

We appeal to the American churches to take the initiative in this crucial witness. We appeal to individual Christians to refuse to make or to use weapons of destruction, and to devote their energies to the removal of the social, economic and moral causes of depression, dictatorship and war.

We advocate that individual Christians and the Church support the use of the methods of reconciliation and non-violent action, such as Gandhi has demonstrated in our time.

Let the Church own no Lord but Christ, no power but the Cross, no hope but in the God Who bears the destiny of all in His hands.

This summarizes a longer message of
A Conference on the Church and War, at Detroit, in May, 1950

What They Say:

Impressions of the Conference on the Church and War

"The Uplifted Cross"

It was a unique experience to meet with representatives of so many different denominations and all as united in denouncing war as unchristian. The great leaders of the church of America met there and in an unmistakable voice appealed to the churches to break with war and repent of war-making, to refuse to make or use weapons of destruction. The beauty of it all was the uplifted cross. The conference said: "Let the church own no Lord but Christ, no power but the cross, no hope but in God Who bears the destiny of all in His hands."

H. T. Unruh
Chairman, Conference
Peace Committee

"Christ, the Only Hope"

One was impressed with the sincerity and frankness of discussion of the problem of war and peace; the depth of conviction of the sin of war, and the positive emphasis upon the way of love as revealed in Jesus Christ as the only hope for the future. The noon-time worship periods and A. J. Muste's closing were high points.

J. N. Smucker
Conference President

This was indeed a very great and also a challenging experience which cannot be expressed in terms of writing but only in terms of living.

Jean G. Wismer
Bluffton College
Student Representative

"Searching for God's Will"

The spiritual emphasis and atmosphere of the Conference impressed me greatly. There was evident among the delegates representing peace groups of most of the major Protestant denominations an earnest searching for and deep dedication to the will of God concerning the witness of the church in relation to the problem of war. The study materials written by prominent peace leaders, the addresses, and the discussions were informational as well as inspirational.

Pete Ediger
Bethel College
Student Representative

"The Ever-Widening Fellowship"

The Detroit Conference helped me to realize more than ever the intellectual respectability and the theological soundness of the Christian peace position. Further, it ought to give the so-called "peace churches" courage and render them less apologetic, as well as more humble, in view of the ever-widening fellowship with those of other denominations who hold a similar view.

Harold H. Gross
Dean, Freeman College

"Reach All of Christendom"

This was one of the first attempts to bring together people with a definitely church background who wanted to think in deeply theological terms about the relation of the Gospel to war and then discuss ways of implementing the Christian peace witness. It is a strategic time to speak because the hydrogen bomb has shaken the military position by forcing it to face the responsibility under God for the extermination of possibly a million people at one blast. The conference affirmed that Jesus Christ is our authority and example for Christian non-resistance, the conference affirmed the belief that the early church and the remnant of the church since that time has held the position of the Christian peacemaker, that we need to work through the Christian church and realize that the Christian position was accepted by the Amsterdam Conference of 1948 as one position recognized in the entire structure of the Christian church. Finally, it was noted that the possibility of mass extermination makes it more imperative than ever for us to reach all of Christendom with the peace aspect of the Gospel.

Don E. Smucker
Seminary Faculty

"We Do Not Have All the Truth"

To a member of the so-called Historic Peace Churches, it was a great thrill to fellowship with members of peace fellowships in the larger denominations in the Furthermore, it is a great thrill to find that a number of the leading ministers of our day are devoted to the peace cause: Henry Hitt Crane, who has been pastor of the largest Methodist Church in Detroit for more then 12 years, all through the war regularly preached one sermon on peace each month, and, as he puts it: "some people still continue to come." Albert Edward Day, now preaching in one of Baltimore's largest Methodist congregations, was chairman of the conference, and gave a pronounced Christian tone to the whole conference. These are only a few; they represent a type of minister in our large Protestant Churches, and there are many of this type.

At no previous conference on peace (reaching beyond the three Historic Peace Churches) has there been such a pronounced emphasis on peace centered around Jesus Christ. The commonly preferred socio-economic bases for pacifism were not altogether absent, but remained much more in the background and our task as peacemakers in the Name of Christ resumed the center of the stage again and again.

Another impression the conference left was the strength that was sought and I am confident also was found in quiet, meditative fellowship in prayer.

Although as Historic Peace Churches we have held this belief longer than others, yet we need to remind ourselves again and again that we do not have all the truth in this area. We stand, together with others, as humble seekers after the truth.

From the Heart to the Heart

The Abode of Peace

by Albert Gaeddert

"Peace I leave with you; my peace I give to you."
John 14:27 R.S.V.

WE STAND again at the edge of an abyss. The so-called "cold war" has been waged for some time, and it is being taken for granted that this will eventually turn into a shooting war; how long it will be before the shooting war begins is variously stated. An ex-soldier from England on the train thought that it might be within the next two or three years; "but," he added, "you won't find me taking part in another one!" A teacher of philosophy in Northwestern University expressed his thinking saying that such a war would probably break out in about two to seven years.

When one thinks of this one gasps in awe of what this means, not so much for one's self as for our children. When another war may mean that entire cities, nations, and populations may be wiped out over night, and those who do survive are apt to be rendered invalids both physically and mentally, what is there to do about it?

Moreover, there seems to be such an urgency about the matter that even the best methods of education employed seem far too slow. It seems that there ought to be action that sweeps the entire country by storm—that would cause entire populations to turn their backs upon this terrible evil called war, and seek another way.

But wait! There have been dark moments before. The Thursday before Good Friday and Good Friday itself must have been two of the most discouraging days for those who had learned to know God through Jesus Christ. It must have seemed that "truth was forever on the scaffold, and wrong forever on the throne;" yet God made out of this seeming defeat the greatest triumph in history!

We need to take hold of ourselves today. God is still in His heavens. This is not to say that we can sit at ease, trusting that all will work itself out; it is only to say that there needs to be a peace within so that we do not grope about in the darkness madly, but that there may be reflected in us the Light from above that is so sorely needed today. If Jesus were to come into our midst today He would likely come with the same salutation with which He greeted His disciples, "Peace be unto you!" No doubt He would wish to impart to us the same words that He gave to His disciples in His farewell discourse: "Peace I leave with you; my peace I give to you."

What does it mean to have "His peace"? How does He give us "His peace"?

Note the setting in which this verse appears. In John 14, Jesus speaks of leaving His disciples, saying that He is going to prepare a place for them, that where He is they may be also. Throughout His ministry Jesus did not lay much stress on this 'place', and one is led to believe that it is not so much the place that is of importance as the fact that the 'abode' is in reality Christ Himself. It is not in heaven that we are to find God, but in God we are to find heaven. Luther once said: "What is heaven to a reasonable soul? Naught else but Jesus." Would we not say likewise? And would we not agree that Jesus is concerned above all about our 'abode' being with Him, that in all the uneasiness of the time we find the only reality in Christ Himself?

In this same context Jesus then goes on to speak about the 'way.' The destination has always been clear, but what is the route by which the destination is reached? Again He points to Himself. He is the way that leads to the real knowledge of God and consequently to life. He is also truth, which is God revealed in His essential nature; and He is life, which is God communicated to the soul. There is no other way of going through life and finding there meaning and purpose, and of giving peace within, except the way of Jesus. Knowing Jesus is to know the Father, and in knowing the person and the nature of Christ and following that way, that is THE WAY.

One final thing that Jesus points out here is the desired close communion of the Father, the Son, and the believer in terms of love. This love has one condition, and that is moral obedience. He who possesses the commands of Christ and obeys them is he who loves Christ, and He who loves Christ is loved by the Father. "He who loves me will obey my word, and the Father will love him, and they will come down to make their abode with him." The word 'abode' recalls the Old Testament idea of God dwelling among His people. An abiding, inward presence is here promised. This is, however, not available to the disbeliever, for he who does not believe and is disobedient to God Himself, cannot be a recipient of the abiding inward presence.

All this is preliminary to the statement, "Peace I leave with you; my peace I give to you."

This "peace" here spoken of is no ordinary peace. It is the peace that Jesus Himself possessed, the peace that came because there was reconciliation with God. It is peace in the midst of storm; it is a calm and self-possession of the soul because the soul is in tune with God, and all of its ways are in accord with the ways that operate the universe.

More and more we find this is exactly what the world needs today. What one is most concerned about

> Luther once said, "What is heaven to the reasonable soul? Naught else but Jesus." Would we not say likewise? And would we not agree that Jesus is concerned above all about our 'abode' being with Him, that in all the uneasiness of our time we find the only reality in Christ Himself?

Eastern District Elects Wilmer S. Shelly

by A. S. Rosenberger

BALLY, PENNSYLVANIA, MAY 4-7.—The theme of the 152nd session of the Eastern District Conference held in the Hereford Church, of which Wilmer S. Shelly is the pastor, was, "Celebrating Our 50 Years of Mission Work in India." This theme was made very real to the Conference by the messages of Missionary John Thiessen. His interesting and deeply spiritual messages were a blessing throughout the Conference.

Budget: $7,000

The Conference budget for its projects for the coming year is $7,000: Home Missions, $4,100; Conference Benevolent Fund, $1,000; Men-O-Lan Board, $500; Historical and Publication Committee, $400; Peace Committee, $100; Building Fund, $100; Conference expenses, $800.

New Officers

The officers for the coming year are: president, Wilmer S. Shelly; vice-president, Ward Shelly; secretary, Walter McDowell; treasurer, A. H. Alderfer. The Women's Organization reorganized as follows: president, Mrs. Wilmer S. Shelly; vice-president, Mrs. Arthur S. Rosenberger; secretary, Mrs. Russell Latshaw; treasurer, Mrs. Freeman H. Swartz; district advisor, Miss Mae Latshaw.

A Full Evangelism

The president of the Eastern District, J. Herbert Fretz, emphasized four points in his report. He said we must: (1) be more evangelistic in the full Scriptural sense of the word; (2) have less looseness in our doctrinal position; (3) have more informal discussion of problems and interests between ministers; and (4) restudy our conference policy, especially in relation to the calling, examination, and ordination of ministers.

The Home Mission Committee gave time to the following home missionaries, all working in Pennsylvania, under the Committee to speak briefly: Randall Heinrich, Roaring Spring; Walter Wolfe, Napier; Abe Wiebe, Lancaster; and T. Robert Brewer, Germantown. The church at Bowmansville, now under the pastoral leadership of LeRoy Albright, has assumed responsibility for its support. Another worker still on the roster of the Committee is George Gregor, who was forced to discontinue the work at Napier due to illness. He is much improved but is not able to resume this type of work.

Plan Expansion for Home for Aged

The Mennonite Home for the Aged reported that there are 36 guests in the Home at present with room for two more. The Home Board is pleased with the service of all the workers but made special mention of the fact that Mr. and Mrs. Mark Beachy, who are of the Amish faith, have completed a year of voluntary service, and plan to stay as workers. A plea was made that others might be willing to give a period of voluntary service for the institution, nurses being especially needed. The committee in charge of the Home is giving consideration to beginning the construction of a new addition to the building, $30,000 having been contributed for this purpose in the last two years.

The Educational Committee reported having examined five candidates for ordination to the ministry and eldership, and counseling with two others who are new in the Conference but already ordained. It recommended the renewal of the evangelist's licenses of Walter H. Temple and Walter Frey, approval of which was given.

Education and Publication

President L. L. Ramseyer, speaking of the fiftieth anniversary of Bluffton College, stated that a book, Bluffton College—An Adventure in Faith is being prepared and printed. He emphasized that Bluffton College has always depended for its maintenance on those who had faith that God had a purpose for the institution and that if it was faithful, God would provide.

The Historical and Publication Committee reported that four issues of the Eastern District Messenger had been published during the past year and urged also that our people read "the high type publications being issued by the General Conference and other Mennonite groups."

The Peace Committee expressed the thought that although it is the receiving and forwarding agency for relief funds donated by the congregations, its biggest function is in the field of peace education, and to this end it is sponsoring a peace team this summer which is made available by the Voluntary Service program of the Mennonite Central Committee.

The Men-O-Lan Board reported on the large number of improvements that have been made to the retreat grounds during the past year and of the increased use of this fine spot for various occasions.

The Benevolent and Relief Committee has responsibilities with respect to the emergency fund being created to help ministers who may be in need.

The report of the Mennonite Biblical Seminary was read by Andrew R. Shelly, field secretary. It was emphasized that the most important point for the future in the development of the Seminary is that the kind of men who are needed for the work of the church must be provided.

Conferences Leaders Present

The Conference was happy to welcome a number of leaders of General Conference activities. Among those attending were J. N. Smucker, president, who preached the sermon at the Conference communion service. P. K. Regier, executive secretary, who gave a short and inspiring message; and D. J. Unruh, representing the Foreign Mission Board, and whom Conference was happy to welcome him as one of our former pastors.

Through the resolutions, the Conference expressed its gratitude to God for His blessings and manifest presence during the sessions and to the host church who so splendidly entertained it. The invitation of the church at Richfield, Pennsylvania, was accepted to meet there next year. Walter J. Dick is the pastor of that congregation.

China: Holy Week in Retrospect

by Elisabeth D. Goertz

Easter, 1950

Dear Co-workers in the Home Churches:

This has been another Sunday, full of opportunities and activities. How we rejoice in the added time we have been given with doors wide open, and so many people coming to services.

We have two Sunday schools. One had an attendance of over 80 plus, another 70. There are also classes for young people with many of Miss Kuyf's English students coming regularly and also new young friends present each Sunday. This is THE TIME for the message of the Gospel of our Saviour and Lord to be made known to as many as possible. We cannot know if many of the students will get back into church circles again later. Help us to pray for these young people especially.

Then there were two preaching services going on, one in the city, near us and the other outside of the West Gate where we have our clinic. This week we are planning to start instruction classes in two places. Many men and women have been coming to hear preaching every night in our preaching chapels and now there are over 40 in one place. The other place has about 30 enrolled who have registered for these classes. We have five divisions each evening: singing, study in Genesis, Luke's Gospel, catechism, and instruction for new members. My part is to teach Luke's Gospel. Pray and help us to teach these dear new friends and neighbors. They are wanting to join God's Big Family and become His sons and daughters, too.

Missionary Diary of Holy Week—1950

Palm Sunday.—Meetings on 4th Street and West Suburbs Street. Good attendance at Church services. Many boys and girls were present for Sunday school and junior-church services. They saw the portrayal of Jesus entering into Jerusalem. Five boys and five girls sang: "Glory to Jesus" as they waved branches and put flowers on the way while the story was told.

Passion Week.—Special studies were made in early devotions of the events of this week. Many people had attended catechism classes in the previous two weeks; they came in for examination for baptism. Twenty were found ready with their testimony and were accepted for baptism.

Good Friday.—Services were held in both preaching places with good attendance. New Christians sang as a special song: "'Tis midnight and on Olive's brow" led by Miss Chang, our Chinese Christian nurse playing the organ. My share of the program was "Questions and Answers on the Life and Death of our Lord Jesus." "Messiah," the great religious cantata was given by 75 University students and we four missionaries heard them sing. It was quite marvelous.

Saturday (before Easter).—Dedication of the straw-thatched Church on West Street. It was also the first anniversary of the opening of mission work in that place. It was a day of rejoicing. This year had been very active, one with work done in both church and clinic services. The neighbors come in and also people who happen to pass the open door come to see what is going on. Thus there is seed-sowing daily; Sunday services and Sunday school have many attending. Often times church members from other missions come in and tell us they are so happy to find us here, because they could not keep in touch with their own church, for they are too far away. This is also necessary—to keep the flocks together "Feed my lambs." We are glad to provide a church-home for such dear souls.

Twenty Were Baptized on Easter

Then, our clinic work has continued activity. Patients with all kinds of ills and ailments are seen in our daily clinic. We have a fine staff of Christian nurses. The people in this district are mostly of the working class, and at this time we see great poverty. Many are not able to pay even reduced rates. And should we then not see them, not take care of them? Our hearts are often pressed for wisdom and love to give them the best possible treatment under the circumtances. Our special line, maternity care, shows we are filling a definite need. In one year's time we have taken care of 117 mothers and babies. Just lately we were able to arrange for mothers to stay in our clinic for three days after delivery. This is a great relief for them. They often have only hovels to go back too. We have room for three mothers at a time. Several of our mothers have been baptized this year.

Easter Sunday (Baptism, and Communion Services). —Resurrection—a risen Saviour—a new life with Him!! All made possible through the working of God's power. How victorious we felt to see 20 new brothers and sisters come to believe in the Saviour and confess Him in baptism! They came from all walks of life: students, mothers, business men, former service-men, shopkeepers, iron workers, native herb-doctor, etc. Their names were written in Heaven in the Book of Life. What an assurance in these changing days. In the afternoon we had communion services and 89 brothers and sisters shared in the experience of receiving life and power from our Great Lord.

First Agricultural Trainees Arrive
M.C.C. Program Into New Phase

AKRON, PA.—A group of 14 young Mennonite men from Germany arrived on May 18, to begin their year of work in the United States as agricultural trainees. In about a week, seven more will come from The Netherlands, Switzerland and France. This program, planned by the M.C.C., in accordance with provisions prescribed by the U.S. Government, is designed for a twofold purpose: (1) to provide opportunity for the men to learn American agricultural methods, and (2) to promote spiritual fellowship and brotherhood between the Mennonites in North America and Europe.

The young men are being placed in rural Mennonite homes which have been selected in various states and communities. The farmers for whom the young men work, will pay a nominal sum which covers the transportation and other expenses of the trainee program.

Those in the group from Germany, and the area to which each is going are as follows: Samuel Blickensdoerfer, to Reedley, Calif.; Alfred Ehrismann, to Kansas; Reudiger Fellman, to Eastern Pennsylvania; Kurt Hege, to South Dakota; Ernst Horst, to Archbold, Ohio; Gerhard Lichti, to Oregon; Herbert Neff, to Lancaster County, Pa.; Gerhard Schmitt and Hans Schneider, to Eastern Ohio; Heinrich Schoenhals, to Kalona, Iowa; Alfred Schroeder, to Newton, Kansas; Wolfgang Schultz, to Goshen, Indiana; Joachim Sutter, to Bluffton, Ohio; and Robert Wohlgemuth, to Idaho.

Urgent Need for Workers

Since the opening of the M.C.C. Service Unit in Mexico in 1947, the project has grown in the scope of services rendered. Now included in the project are: medical work at the Regional Hospital at Cuauhtemoc; a clinic at Santa Clara, a location convenient for serving the Mennonite people; English and Spanish lessons; Summer Bible School; Mennonite youth meetings; recreational leadership; school teaching; and other activities. Approximately 13 members constitute the present unit. The services are directed to reach Mennonite and Mexican needs.

A teacher with German and Low German language ability is needed to replace Harold Voth whose term of service has been completed; nurses are also needed.

Conference on the Church and War

Thirty-nine persons representing the Mennonite Central Committee and its constituent groups were registered at the Detroit Conference on the Church and War, May 8-11, either as delegates or observers. The conference, made up of over 400 representatives from thirteen church groups, sought to express in a fresh and dynamic manner the Christian message of peace and its implications in individual and national life today. Two Mennonite leaders, Don E. Smucker and Harold S. Bender were among the group of persons who prepared study papers for the Conference.

Conservative Christianity was strongly represented at the Conference, but proportionately much more strongly in the historic peace churches than in most other groups. The message of the Conference was pointed and challenging. In the sessions, there was evidence of unity as well as diversity of opinion on various questions. Post-Conference study literature is being published and will be sent to many churches in order that the message of the Conference may find its way to local congregations. Further reports on the Conference will be released by the M.C.C. through Mennonite publication channels.

Book Notes . . . . The Pure Gospel and the Suffering Church

CONRAD GREBEL, 1498-1526. By Harold S. Bender
The Mennonite Historical Society, 1950.
Goshen, Indiana

FOR such a time as this when we are called upon to make new decisions we need help to direct our future paths and to think seriously from whence we came and whither we are going. The author has done very well in presenting the life story of Conrad Grebel so that every reader should be stirred and led to a deeper commitment to the fullest Christian living. Especially should this be true among Mennonites whose heritage of faith and life has been purchased by the blood of the Swiss Brethren and particularly the founder of that group, Conrad Grebel.

The fact that the Swiss Brethren had not kept Chronicles as did the Hutterian Brethren makes this book doubly valuable.

In Conrad Grebel we see a moving story of an energetic young man who studied at Basel, Vienna, Paris, and Zurich under the influence of humanism (learning imparted by those who brought the Greek and Roman classics into new importance, with particular emphasis on human interests). For eight of his most fruitful years he was under the humanistic influence. Did the Erasmian humanism which had a worldly and international outlook, did living in an atmosphere of intellectualism and moralism without a practical and personal commitmenut to any nation, state, people, or church have influence on him? Erasmus was a strong influence directly and indirectly of that day. Let us see this influence in regard to pacifism.

It may be that Erasmian pacifism opened the door of his mind to the teaching of the New Testament regarding the Sermon on the Mount and the concept of the "suffering church." However, Erasmus believed in fighting a just war, whereas Grebel after his conversion in Christ brought forth the principle of Biblical love and nonresistance which is something quite different than the former pacifism. Grebel was on Scriptural grounds an absolutist on the question of war and

RURAL MINISTER'S SCHOLARSHIP FOR SUMMER OF 1950

THE Interdenominational School for Rural Leaders will meet at Garrett Biblical Institute from June 19 to July 21 this year. Scholarships of $45.00 each are available which cover the cost of tuition and room for the five weeks. Candidates for the scholarships must be college graduates. Students may earn a maximum of eight quarter hours in the five week period.

In addition to these courses, the regular offerings of the Garrett Summer School will be available.

This is an unusual opportunity since our own Seminary is not in Session during the summer. Quite a few of our younger ministers have availed themselves of this opportunity in recent years. As in former years, E. G. Kaufman, North Newton, Kansas, is again asked to make the Mennonite nominations. If interested, write or see him soon.

Some Requirements for a Happy Marriage

by Mrs. Gilbert Suter

MOST people are married before they climb into their graves" a lecturer declared recently. There is perhaps more happiness won (or lost) because of happy (or unhappy) marriages than because of all other factors combined. A patient once said: "This earache is the most miserable pain I have ever had. It's so close to me, it's hard to rise above it." So too, unhappy attitudes and relationships in the home are so close to us so continually with us, it is exceedingly hard to rise above them.

We are advised to begin planning a new home 2 BC—meaning two years before construction. If that is advisable for a material home which can be remodelled or sold if unsatisfactory, it is much more important to plan carefully for a relationship which should not be broken except by death.

Preparation for marriage, as for life itself, begins in infancy. A Christian home where each individual is loved for what he is and for what he may become, where there is respect for personality, freedom of choice linked with responsibility, reverence for God and His laws, and an appreciation of the higher values in life, is the greatest single factor in preparation for a successful future, including a happy marriage. That is our parents' responsibility.

Now, where do we begin? Out of the multitudes of people whom you will learn to know and like, you are to choose the one whom you will love and cherish above all others, not for just an hour or a day or a year but always. Take a tip from the Egyptians. The pyramid begins on a broad foundation and gradually decreases it's scope until at last one single stone points to the sky. During your teens enlarge the circle of your friends, both in quantity and quality. See which temperaments agree with you and which irritate you. Learn to know which help you to be yourself at your best. Learn to know yourself in your association with others.

Each fall eager freshmen come to college wanting to study some special field, and wanting to take only such courses that lead toward this goal. However, the state decrees that the first two years shall be devoted to a broad, general education, and not until their junior year may they choose a major and begin specialization. This idea might well apply to courtship. There are exceptions to all rules, but the young people who begin to "go steady" in high school or early college, often lose out in friendships among other students. We need many friends and many interests for satisfying living. Specializing too early in life tends to limit and confine the human spirit. We were created for wide horizons.

Time Can be Very Long

It is quite exciting when a high school senior flashes a diamond, and we older folks don't like to pour cold water on young love. But the young people who are not engaged when they finish high school, or even college, and who keep themselves free from family responsibilities until they are at least within sight of the career which they have chosen, are also to be congratulated. The recent war has brought about a feeling that the time is short. I wonder if some of those who married in haste and without proper preparation have not discovered that time can be very long? This moving in with the folks isn't much fun, not for you nor for them.

It takes time to compare the capacity for, and the ratio of, growth. Two trains at the Chicago station may look equally inviting, but by the next day, one may have greatly outdistanced the other. In marriage that means loneliness for both. Then too, these trains, standing parallel, may be heading in different, even opposite directions. Make sure that your ideals, your plans for the future and your religious faith will truly make you one. Beauty is skin-deep, but integrity, good manners, good grooming, good health, intellectual capacity and emotional balance make for good company always.

Another requirement for a happy marriage is absolute honesty. In other relationships some things can remain unsaid, but plans for marriage require frankness. A man woos the girl with flowers and parties. He hates music, but enjoys a concert sitting beside her.

Marriage and a Five Legged Table

A SUCCESSFUL marriage is like a table with all its legs under it. If a table has one leg cut off, it will topple over with the least weight on that corner. Or, if it is a five legged table and the center leg is removed, it sags in the middle. A successful marriage stands up when all its legs are under it.

Too often marriages are built on one or two legs and then people wonder why the marriage has failed. For instance, marriages can be contracted simply on the basis of physical attractiveness. That is important—as one of five legs of the table. But, trying to build a marriage solely on physical attactiveness is trying to balance the table on one leg.

Or, a marriage may take place based on two legs—physical attractiveness and common tastes and interests. Such a two-legged marriage has a better chance than a one-legged marriage. If a couple enjoys doing many things together so that the radio doesn't become a point of conflict, or an evening spent away from home is an unhappy affair for one of the partners, but rather both love to hear good radio music, and enjoy going the same places together, such a marriage has a two-legged chance. But, there is more to marriage than physical attractiveness and common interests.

A third leg to the table of marriage would be a similar cultural background. Generally, a happy marriage depends on this, too. One person with lavish spending habits and the other with strict habits of thrift would have a very real adjustment to make. A person who is city bred and knows little of country life and another who is rural and knows little of city life would require adjustments one to the other. Racial differences, national differences, religious differences all require very careful thought. This does not mean to say that such marriages fail, however they do more often than one in which there are similar backgrounds.

A fourth leg on the table of marriage is a common religious faith. If the couple can share the deepest things of life, their faith in God, their living of that faith according to their belief and conscience, and their exercising of that faith in dealing with each other, their and all their fellow men, then the marriage has a good solid base on which to build. This is an important leg of marriage, more important than we are sometimes ready to see.

A fifth leg on this five legged table is a philosophy of family life which can be shared. This means that a young couple should be able to agree on the size family they would like to have, they will have to agree on the size of income and the way they will spend their income. In some families, the husband holds the purse strings causing irritation when the wife has to beg for every penny. The way of handling their money must be agreed upon. This is a point on which many marriages stumble because of a lack of understanding.

So, here is the five legged table of marriage. A shared faith in God and the exercise of one's faith; a shared philosophy of family life—the use of money, children, what makes a home; physical attractiveness; common tastes and interests that can be enjoyed together; and common backgrounds or heritages and if not that an appreciation of the background that each brings with him.

Any young person looking toward marriage should measure his qualifications according to this five legged table.—E. L.

Does she know his financial status? Will he enjoy helping her occassionally even though he hates dishes?

Complete Frankness

The girl, a capable career woman, dreams romantically of their future home and actually believes she will enjoy homemaking. But later she misses the stimulating contacts of professional life and begins to feel sorry for herself. On dates she was always immaculately groomed and well dressed, and he could not see the messy room she left behind her. A sweetheart who can't balance a checkbook may be cute, but a wife must be willing to learn to budget carefully. Complete frankness will often reveal that their hobbies are quite different. Will they cherish each other enough to take a small part in each other's interests? Different interests can make a very interesting marriage if they are interested in each other first and always.

If an engagement is contemplated, there are additional questions to be dealt with. Do you both want children? Are you able to have children? If either party knows definitely that parenthood is impossible, there is a moral obligation to tell the prospective partner.

If there has been a scandal, either in your own life or in your family of which your partner may hear eventually, talk it over frankly, and early enough so that the relationship may be broken without too much publicity.

Your Inner Citadel

There are laws about courtship with which young people should be familiar. Excellent books are available on these subjects. Beware of cheap, foul literature which poison the soul. Your love for another is your inner citadel. Keep it ever radiant and holy. "Blessed are the pure in heart."

This promise "to love and to cherish—until death do us part" is a blank check which we sign, not knowing how much Life will collect. It helps to know that, while to many it seems easier to achieve happiness (it doesn't "just happen") within marriage than without. Marriage nevertheless is neither the cause nor the cure for trouble. There will be disappointment, sickness, business reverses and visa versa, for all of us during the coming decades, married or single. The Apostle Paul seemed to expect more trouble for the married than for the single. (I Cor. 7:28). Socrates being asked whether it was better to marry or not replied "Whichever you do, you will repent it." ("Socrates" by Diagones Loertius). Thornton Wilder in "Our Town" say that out of a thousand marriages, only "one is interesting."

But ask those who have achieved happiness and they will tell you that keeping both eyes wide open before marriage and half-closed thereafter, daily counting your many blessings, and being ready to forgive seventy times seven, always looking to God for grace and guidance, you will find it to be a wonderful experience.

From Military Service to Christian Nonresistance

by Pierre Widmer, Mommay, France

At that time various pacifist movements were influencing opinion in our country, and I remember having actively participated in different meetings in behalf of peace. At school we were urged to give pacifist teaching. The old Latin precept, "Si vis pacem, para bellum," (If you want peace, prepare for war), was fought energetically, and under the influence of such men as Briand (Aristide). Frenchmen were learning the opposite maxim, "If you want peace, prepare for peace." The horrors of war were denounced by educators, and truly with all my heart I associated myself with that campaign of pacifist propaganda. I did not wish at all to help in preparing for war by performing my military service. However, as a teacher I had to teach obedience to the laws of my country and be an example. I had to do my military service.

Furthermore, in the course of the pacifist meetings, I had occasion to notice that certain parties were using the pacifist movement for their own propaganda, which was anything but pacifist. At Montbeliard, for example, in January, 1934, during a meeting in the municipal theater I intervened in order to brand those who were preaching class wars under the cover of pacifism, and I asserted my conviction that there is only one true pacifism, that of the gospel, that of hearts to which peace has come through the Word of God and which are no longer inspired by hate, but by love. The room full of people, mostly educators, applauded that intervention. And many of my friends feared that this speech would bring me into difficulties with the military authorities. But such was not the case.

In 1933 I had been deferred by the examining board. In 1934 I was to come before it again. At that time I was twenty-two years old, and I was thinking of setting up a home, feeling strongly that one should do so while young. The military service to be performed was for me a serious obstacle, a very annoying obstacle. When the president of the examining board spoke of deferring me again because of "weak constitution," I declared that I had never been sick. He grumbled something unintelligible and then said aloud: "Good for the armed services!" The die was cast, and it was a relief for me; for I disliked having to pass again as unfit for military service.

But when in the spring of 1935 I arrived at the barracks, I had fully made up my mind to do everything I could in order not to have to bear arms. I asked to speak to my officer, and I explained to him that I wanted to be a good citizen and to serve my country well; but that because of conscientious scruples, I did not wish to bear arms. I asked to serve as a nurse in the company made up of soldiers without rank. But he answered that if I wanted to serve my country well, I could do nothing better than to give an example of obedience and become an officer, as my capabilities bade me do. There was no other way for me.

The examination that I had taken in order to enter regimental music (and the non-ranking company) revealed, moreover, that I did not have sufficient practice with the instruments to be useful immediately. I was to be registered in the preparatory course for student candidate reserve officers. I was very much distressed. I, who had not wanted to take up military training to become an officer, was having to take the opposite road and become one. What was I to do?

I returned to my barracks room and fell to my knees to ask God to help me and to show me the way. Here I must candidly recognize, if I analyze, my feelings, that in my desire of obedience to Christ I was certainly afraid of carrying it out very far. If I deliberately renounced becoming an officer, if I refused to follow the preparatory course, what would happen? I would immediately be regarded with disfavor, prohibited from continuing such a course of action, considered a Communist and an anti-militarist, a bad Frenchman; and I would undoubtedly find it hard to continue in my profession. Beyond that, I was anxious for the esteem of men and for preserving my good reputation, and it was terribly painful for me to renounce these.

Certainly I was evading the issue; I had not truly made up my mind to "obey God rather than men." And, because I have gone through that experience, I now have much sympathetic understanding for those who have to engage in this struggle against themselves and who do not succeed in conquering. I recognize that God exercised infinite patience with respect to me, and that He dealt with me with long-suffering. I cried out to Him for light, when in the final analysis I knew very well that He was calling me to a way of renunciation and of nonconformity to the world. But that way was too hard to follow; it was beyond my strength. I was still insufficiently prepared, and I did not know the secret of life in Christ, the source of all strength and all victory. Counting on my own strength. I was vanquished beforehand.

But my Lord sustained me and without doubt seeing that I could not follow the wonderful and difficult way to which He was calling me, He allowed me to pass along another way. He gave me an answer. At that time, in my perplexities, in my hesitations and my doubts, I had the habit of opening at random the Word of God, asking the Lord to give me in this way the answer which I needed, a definite indication concerning what I was to do. The method is very debatable, and the interpretation of the answer received is always open to question; I know it now.

But in my unbelief, or rather, in my inability to obey and follow the way clearly traced for every Christian by the Word of God, it was necessary for me to seek a loophole. And our God, who is truly a God of patience and kindness, permitted me to open my Bible to the seventeenth chapter of the Gospel of John. My eyes fell on verse fifteen: "I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from the evil." I repeat that I now consider this method very debatable and that I am not giving it as a pattern for anyone. I am not reporting all this as an argument in a discusion, but as a personal testimony as accurate as possible. That happened thus for me.

Peace

by Victor D. Buller

Peace is a way of life,
A religion,
Christianity at its best,
A by-product of the Jesus-way of life,
The most precious, most delicious fruit of love,
Independent of the material world,
Impossible to measure in terms of precious ores.

It is the most sought for
Thread in the skein of life,
Elusive to the point of exasperation,
Costly to an extreme in its demands
Upon our personal rights and privileges;
Not to be had by trade or fraud,
No short-cut road can lead to peace.

Peace is basic Christianity
Which wins its way
By dedication to its achievement,
Consecration to its purpose,
Loyalty to its precepts,
Patience in its attainment,
Contagion of its message,
Burning with its power,
Praying with every thought,
Deed and word for its enthronement
In the lives of all ministers of our Messiah,
All Christians everywhere,
Rulers of men on earth,
Souls who know not Christ
As Saviour, Son of God,
Revealer of Life and its Laws.

They must be wholly aflame
With the religion of peace,
Christianity in its apostolic intensity,
Ready to die, but never to kill
For its advancement;
Christianity undiluted
By loyalty to denominationalism,
Religious customs and traditions;
Clannishness, self-righteousness,
Holier-than-thouism
And other glorified sins.

Love, most compulsive of all forces
Is the genesis of peace.
Peace is the call to global revolution
Without violence—
Without bloodshed—
Without fear—
Without bombs, or guns, or planes, or tanks, or ships—
Without armies—!

Souls charged by the love of Christ
Surging in their lives,
Throbbing, pulsing, breathing
Into the minds and thoughts,
Hearts and habits
Of mankind everywhere on earth,
Christianizing their worlds
To make of them ONE WORLD
RULED BY THE LOVING PEACE OF CHRIST,
His little known, unfathomed, God-made peace,
In which man and God are co-creators.

This is the road to peace—
Such is its plan and method,
Its price and cost.

The hope and longing for peace
That smolders in the thoughts,
In the souls, and on the lips
Of mortal man
Is the living seed of peace
Waiting to be transplanted,
Transformed
Into the limitless, man-changing power: love—
Which alone can give to the living world peace
And the unknown fruits of peace
For which man has ever yearned
But which he has never tasted.

Short-cuts end in wars—
Love alone yields lasting peace.

Christmas season of 1949
Victor D. Buller

I was there, then, on my knees in my barracks room, in agony of mind, and I was to give an answer to my officer. When I read these words, this seemed to me an unexpected bit of fortune, God was permitting me what I no longer believed He would ever permit me. It was the Lord Jesus Himself who had prayed saying, "I pray thee not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from evil!" No, I did not feel myself as of this militaristic and wicked world, and I only wanted the Lord to preserve me from the evil in it, since He Himself consented to me living in it.

I had always considered monastic life as an evasion of the responsibilities of the Christian life in the world, and I did not want to fall into the same trap by taking the attitude of a Christian "withdrawn from the world." Furthermore, I had read the fine book of Madame de Perrot, entitled, "A Christian Soldier: Raymond de Perrot;" and I saw its relationship to my boyhood dream,—to become an officer, the fervent desire to be, like Raymond de Perrot, a Christian soldier. And here God was opening the way for me, the Lord was praying to the Father for me, "I pray thee not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil." Instantaneously, I knew that I was going to answer, "Yes," to my officer.

is the continued assurance that one is in right relationships with God. Having that assurance, the other things will then shape themselves, if only we follow in this 'way'. But let no one think that this 'peace' is a pillow on which to rest. Sometimes we mistake assurance for complacency; Jesus leaves no place for that in His life and teachings. This peace is not a static something; rather, it is a calm that possesses the soul so that in any and all situations the Spirit is enabled to speak and to give direction to the soul. As such, it is at the same time the open avenue to the Source of Power, for when one is in tune with God, then there is no limit to the power that He can wield through us.

May each of us and all of us together enable Christ to give us His peace, so that we may become effective peacemakers, who shall be called "the children of God."

WICHITA, KANSAS. The fifteenth annual Institute of International Relations, sponsored by the American Friends Service Committee, will convene at Friends University, June 7 through 15. Among the speakers are Clarence Pickett, retiring executive secretary of the A.F.S.C.; Lewis Hoskins, newly selected executive secretary; Hans Rosenhaupt, dean of Ph.D. students at Columbia; Kenneth Boulding, professor of economics at Michigan University; Bharatan Kumarappa, Indian member of Social Commission of the United Nations. For further information address Guy T. Gebhardt, Executive Secretary of the Institute at Friends University, Wichita.

MEROM, INDIANA.—The annual Inter-Seminary Rural Life Conference, held at Merom, Institute, April 26-28 included 56 delegates from 8 seminaries. The conference chairman, Rocky Smith of Garrett, presented the opening address in which he demanded a broad picture of the Protestant Christian Church—seeing the social, geographic, and political aspects. Within this framework was viewed the "The Rural Challenge to the American Church." An afternoon trip took the group to the scenes of U.S. Soil Conservation Service projects. This actual experience of one of the rural problems helped the group to see existing problems and better understand the possibilities of church-agency cooperation in helping rural folk solve their problems.—Reported by Minna Regier.

HOLLYWOOD. — Actress Coleen Townsend, who recently announced her retirement from the screen to take up Christian endeavor, now plans to combine both careers by making religious motion pictures.

She has just completed a starring role in the first complete church service ever filmed for television. The film entitled "Your Television Church," will see Miss Townsend giving Scriptural readings.

She has also been cast in "Great Discovery," a production being undertaken by Light of the World Films, a new company dedicated to making movies with religious backgrounds.—Covenant Weekly

THE AMERICAN INDIAN of Hollywood's western pictures, of cowboy fiction and even of the history books may be revolutionized as a result of the research of the National Film Committee of the Association on American Indian Affairs. This committee has found evidence to show that white men, not the Indian, started the practice of scalping. Our concept of the Indian as cruel and ferocious has affected our treatment of him as a citizen.—Gospel Messenger violence, rejecting all wars, including wars of self-defense and 'just' wars.

Another significant difference may be that Grebel's convictions on love and nonresistance were not even primarily the religion of the Sermon-on-the-Mount ethic of loving one's enemy but that of the "suffering church." It is very interesting to note that at the center of his thinking stood "the Word of God with its absolute authority, and the Spirit of God with its divine power to transform the life of the believer; and as a second thought, the holy body of believers, the church of Christ, made possible by the individual's experience, bound to the Word of God and commissioned to proclaim the Gospel in the world as a sufering church." (Leidensgemeinde). p. 74 & 75. For Grebel the church is a suffering church and has no right to use the sword or to engage in war. True Christians are as "sheep among wolves, sheep for the slaughter, who must be baptized in anxiety and need, tribulation, persecution, suffering and death, who must be tested in the fire, and who must find the homeland of eternal rest not by the means of killing but by spiritual means. They use neither worldly sword nor war, for among them killing is done away with altogether." This positive conviction of refusing to take part in war and any killing, political and personal, as a definite part of the true Christian disciple in the "suffering church" is one of the unique contributions of evangelical Anabaptism. This outstanding movement for faith and life was begun by the Swiss Brethren with Conrad Grebel as their leader. Here is one place that we have been weak and many times at difference. Much of modern pacifism has secularized this high and noble conviction of the early Anabaptists such as Grebel and thus is closer to Erasmian humanism than it is to the Swiss Anabaptist belief of Biblical love as lived in the true spirit of the "suffering church." It is not expected that the masses will come into the church but that the true New Testament church must expect persecution. There must be a true fellowship of believers. Christians have a right to seek to elect a Christian council in order that the government may be influenced by divine righteousness. Conrad Grebel did not think that all that has been said was to be a future ideal but rather a present working out. The Messiah is at hand. For the Kingdom of God is to be built here and now in the fellowship of believers, in the loving community of disciples of Christ. This is the foundation stone of Conrad Grebel and the other Swiss Brethren. All this is declared by the outward ordinances of Believer's Baptism and the Lord's Supper. The Lord's Supper, the pledge of brotherly love and faithful sanctified Christian living, is to be observed frequently, not in the church-house, but in the home, so that no false devotion might be started.

This book speaks in a vital way to us in that Conrad Grebel sought to revive the "pure gospel" and "the true church." With him we have the beginning of the modern "free church" movement. He and the Swiss Brethren planted the seed thru the "suffering church" which has brought about our great democracy with its freedom of conscience, freedom of religion, voluntary church-membership, and separation of church and state. Indeed, as Mennonites, we have the great heritage of faith and life founded on Apostolic Christianity —radical to many, but definitely basic for such a day as this if we would be truly Christian.

This is a medium-sized book and will be interesting and challenging reading and study for any one who is sincerely seeking for "the true church." It should have a strengthening value for the basic Anabaptist-Mennonite principles as based on the Bible.

Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Jesus Christ.

SUMMER AND SUNDAY

"Though my hands and my mind have been as full of secular business, both before and since I was a judge, as may be any man's in England, yet I never wanted time in my six days to ripen and fit myself for the business and employments I had to do, though I borrowed not one minute from the Lord's day to prepare for it, by study or otherwise."

The Sabbath can be kept in the summer months. No money or pleasure we derive through the weakening of the Sabbath will profit us. The law says "works of mercy or necessity:" can the Christian say less? This does not mean we will be denied that relaxing refreshment we need, but this will be in proper spheres. The observance of Sunday as God intended does not mean getting less out of the day, but much more! It will then provide refreshment, enriching our lives!

SUMMER TIME can be harvest time for the church too. The church must ever think of summer in terms of sowing and reaping rather than vacationing. This is not to say that the church necessarily carry its winter program right through the summer without a change of any kind. In summer the church needs to be concerned about those unique seasonal opportunities that can be used to the glory of God. Summertime offers free time for children. Often free time in the life of children provides opportunity for spiritual deterioration where children are left entirely on their own on the one hand, or it may mean the clinching of Christian experience where opportunities for Christian decision or growth are offered. Sometimes deterioration may take place when this freetime is exploited by parents who feel that if wintertime is for the school and the church, the summertime is all for work. They forget that even in winter with the public school taking the large block of time and the church having opportunity to serve youth at weekly intervals, there is little opportunity for sustained exposure of youth to the impact of the gospel as is permitted in the summer Bible school and the retreats. In all too many churches and homes these twin opportunities of the church—in summer time—Summer Bible school and retreats—are still considered as optional "extras." But consider well that at no other opportunity with the exception of the Christian home does the church have such sustained and lifewide contact with boys and girls. Here the church is truly being built where lives are being welded together into a Christian fellowship.

Early Christians, with their books of devotion, searched their own hearts; modern Christians, with their morning papers, turn the pricks of conscience into jabs of condemnation of the sins of others.—Ralph Sockman.

SOME MAY THINK it strange that a church paper say anything about safety precautions, but we have wondered whether the church has been entirely in the right by being silent on so non-spiritual a subject. If the first and greatest command is to love God with all the soul, spirit, mind, and body, then we must inevitably hasten to add, in the light of repeated tragedy in our midst, that a broken or, a dead body coming as a result of human carelessnes can not give much glory to God. Is it possible that as soon as we get behind the wheel of the car or the tractor we think that we enter upon an activity which is excused from the judgment of God. We may even be tempted to resign ourselves to a pagan determinism that says, "It must be God's will if I die in an accident as the result of my own or some one else's carelessness." Far too many temples of the Holy Spirit are being destroyed on the highways and in other types of accidents simply because we have developed a moral blindspot. Carelessness is a sin, and when we give our lives in complete consecration to Jesus Christ it also includes the foot on the accelerator.

ON JUNE 1, J. N. Smucker began his work as editor of THE MENNONITE. Previous to that time he was pastor of the large First Church at Bluffton, Ohio, in addition to his continuing responsibility as Conference president. This dual responsibility obviously left little opportunity for him to acquaint himself with the many sided task of editing our sixteen page weekly with a circulation of some 8,000. Such a task demands a substantial background of preparation. Part of such preparation is further personal acquaintance with the constituency of the paper. For this the Board of Publication has asked Brother Smucker to visit the various district conferences. Four of these occur in the next eight weeks with General Conference two weeks later. In view of this situation it is expected that there will be a transition period of eight or ten weeks in which Brother Smucker will enter increasingly into the responsibility for THE MENNONITE. It is expected that by August 1 he will have full responsibility for the publication. Meanwhile J. J. Enz, up to now the acting-editor will assist with the work in the process of the transition.

WILL IT BE YOUR LIQUOR?

The American Tract Society tells of a tragedy which occurred "one Saturday night when an automobile in which a young couple were driving suddenly crashed. The young man was killed and a popular high school girl, 17 years old, was seriously injured. They were taken to a hospital and the father and mother of the girl were called. The mother had been unable to sleep that night, for she thought she had seen a bottle in the young man's pocket as the couple left the home.

"On reaching the hospital, the parents learned that both young people had been intoxicated at the time of the accident, and that a bottle had been found in the car. The father went into a rage and exclaimed: 'If I can find the person who sold those children that whiskey, I'll kill him!' As they returned to their home the father felt he must have a drink to steady his shattered nerves. Going to the place where he usually kept his liquor, he found instead a note in the handwriting of his daughter: 'Dad, we hope you won't mind our taking your whiskey along with us tonight.' It was the father's own whiskey that had killed the young man and critically injured his daughter."—Clipsheet

My wife entered the room, dressed for church. A quick glance at the inventory papers before me told her my intentions of staying home.

"Did I tell you what happened at McCallum's garage yesterday?" she asked. "When I was ready to leave I said to Mr. McCallum, 'So long, see you in Church.' I had not seen him recently, so I asked him about it. He said, 'I send my wife and children. Isn't that enough?' When he said that, one of the other customers asked him, 'Do you let them eat for you too?' "

My mind couldn't compete with my wife and my conscience. I noticed that Mr. McCallum was in Church, too. — Salem Mennonite Church Bulletin, Freeman, S. D.

A Letter to a Son

MY dear son:

You are only a few days old, and yet I feel compelled, in the midst of these furious and confused times, to state for you a philosophy of life. Your life begins shortly after the end of a horrible war, and there is no surety of future peace. Millions of people are dying in Asia and Europe, and not enough of our countrymen seemed concerned. People are living in fear because already there are indications of more strife, the contemplation of which surpasses imagination. Selfishness and stupidity have too frequently characterized our political leadership. There is much evidence of a moral and spiritual breakdown. Physically and emotionally people are tired, and this leads to confusion and bewilderment. Men are asking, "What's the use of being honest?" "What's the use of being faithful in marriage?" "What's the use of anything?" Such people have lost their bearings, and that is why I must write this, for you were born out of faith and hope and love.

Here are some of the things your parents want you to know and experience. First, God is the Father and Creator of all things. Like your fellows, you came from Him; you belong to Him, and you are destined for Him. This is God's world! Perhaps when you are two or three years old, I will take you by the hand and through your eyes see all over again the mystery of creation. To see life again with the eyes of a child is a rare privilege which only mothers and fathers may know.

Here is a mystery in a blade of grass, in a calf, in a robin's egg, in a spreading tree, in a running stream. Here is a mystery in sun and stars, in night and day, in snow and rain. I hope you will always be sensitive to these things of creation. May you come to your manhood knowing them on skates and skiis, on mountain trails and down the rivers. Then, when you move with men and make decisions, you will know over and above the market price that lumber comes from trees, that mutton comes from sheep, that power comes from water, and that bread comes from the sunlit fields of waving wheat.

Thus you will know that these are God's gifts to men, not to be fought over, nor wasted, but rather to be used for the common good. Thus you will know that you are a debtor and a pensioner and that your life is dependent upon God's creation. Such knowledge will keep you humble, and you will understand that "earth might be fair."

My second hope is that you will know God's Son and be known of Him. God sent Him to save all of us from our selfishness. May you find your way to God through Him. What is called religion is the whole of life yielded to God and not just one segnmet of it. It is the whole character and direction of your life that we care about, not its individual accomplishments.

It is not of momentous concern if you do not make the athletic teams in your school and college. But to learn the fun of play is important. Play should not be used as an end in itself but for the strengthening of your body and the refreshment of your spirit. So play hard and as well as you can, losing yourself for the time in that form of recreation which does the best things for you.

Nor is it a matter of concern if you are not a scholar, provided that you lose yourself in study as well as in play. It will be better if you have to struggle for your academic grades rather than have them come too easily. It will be better if you excel in a few fields rather than achieve a gentleman's average in all.

I cannot say what your vocation should be, but I do not care if your income is to be large or small. Whatever your life's work, let it be something that needs doing; something that you do well, and something in which you find purpose. Thus you will be able to serve your fellows. Service can be rendered in any work which serves the common good—in the office or the operating room, in the law court or in the church.

Caring and loving are essential to the full life. I hope you love people, all kinds of people of many classes and of many different racial backgrounds. In loving people you will understand them, and you will have many friends. You will not use your friends except as friends. Never lose sight of the meaning of an individual.

I hope you will become an integral part of your community, sharing in its life. Towns and cities need responsible citizens who believe in good governments, good schools, and good hospitals. Generously offer yourself, your time, and your money. Don't hold back. Give. There is nothing to wait for. Spend and be spent in the service of your fellows.

One day I hope you will love a good woman with whom you may grow in the things that matter. Such things are your home, your children, your work, and the service of your fellows.

The good life as Jesus gives us to see it is hard thing to achieve. Most of us know what we ought to do, but we don't do it. However, help is available for men, and my third hope for you is that God's Spirit may be yours for Jesus' sake. To know His Spirit is to live with power and inspiration.

The Christian life is rarely apart from tension. A battle will be going on around you all the time. It is the ancient fight that has been waged from the beginning.

O CHILD, on this your dedication day,
Your eager baby eyes reflect the light
Of windows in a church, like candles bright,
While over you the heads are bowed to pray.
You are a little wave upon the sea
Of human life, and have received a name
Distinguishing you from the rest, the same,
That outward ripple toward infinity.
May God, who sets in motion with his hand
Each wave, remember when this one is spent,
And graciously take back the life he lent,
Into his cup, to pour a life more grand.
Each wavelet, blue in shadow, gold in sun,
Is precious to him as the only one.

It is the struggle of the good against the evil. Wars are only symptoms of this eternal strife.

You will feel this conflict in your own heart. You will know real and deep temptation. You will stumble and make mistakes. Written large, that is the story of mankind. Be honest with yourself. Recognize your failures. Pray for forgiveness and begin again. Draw on the Spirit of God. You cannot go through by yourself.

I do not ask for you a life without fear. You will be afraid. I do not ask that you be spared suffering or even death. These things cannot hurt you. They do bring pain to those who love you. But we love you because you are as you are. If you should be on the losing side, go down hard and fighting. Go down with love and understanding. Go down with forgiveness. You will not be defeated. God is the Father; Jesus is the Son, and the Holy Spirit raises the step for eternal life both here and hereafter.

I am glad that you are here, and I wish I might begin life all over again with you. In a certain sense I will do just that as I continue to live for you and with you.

Your father, G. L. C.

Material - Aid Needs in 1950

AKRON, PA. With the coming of harvest, many will want to share of their abundance with the needy abroad. The following information may be helpful in determining the form in which material gifts might be made available.

CLOTHING and related items will be in largest demand in the immediate future. Unfinished yard goods, woolen yarn and thread, as well as clothing and shoes for all members of the family, are very gratefully received. Last year approximately 250 tons of clothing were sent to the foreign field. It is hoped that gifts will be equally generous this year, so that at least 200 tons can be sent for distribution to refugees, orphans, old people and others unable to provide for their own necessities. Clothing contributions should be sent to the nearest center, as in the past.

FOOD will be needed but not in as large quantities as before. Contributions may include concentrated, foods such as flour, raisins dried beans and canned meat. It would be advisable to contact the Relief office at Akron before any food collection programs are undertaken. In all cases, it will be necesarry to ship in carload lots directly from the Mennonite communities to the seaport so as to avoid the high cost of processing and handling less than carload lots. It will also be necessary for the local community to assume freight charges to the nearest port. In some cases it may be possible for several communities to cooperate in contributing a carload lot of food. Sometimes it may be advantageous to sell commodities and contribute the cash. Large quantities of dried milk and eggs are available from U. S. Government surpluses at no cost, but considerable money is needed to move these from the point of storage.

As Christian stewards, it is necessary that every possibility be explored, so that the largest amount of material may be shipped at the lowest possible cost. Cash contributions make possible continued shipping, distribution and service "In the Name of Christ."

To Receive New Group of Children

On April 11 and 12 a new group of 50 children were to arrive at Bad Duerkheim children's home in Germany. The MCC workers had been visiting homes from which these children were to come, and found "deplorable conditions" in many cases.

Two previous groups of children have been cared for at this M.C.C. home during three-month periods. Here they receive physical nourishment and care, a new outfit of clothing, and daily teaching and training.

It is difficult to see many of these children return to their needy homes at the end of the three months; yet there are other children who also need a period of nourishment and care in the home.

Building Progress at Reedley

A report on April 18 indicates that good progress is being made in the construction of the M.C.C. mental hospital, "Kings View Homes" at Reedley, California. Arthur Jost, M. C. C. West Coast representative writes, "We have completed the septic tank, the rough plumbing, foundational work, radiant heating, floor slab including final color in the floor, some electrical work and the framing and pouring of some of the walls and partitions. In the next three months or thereabouts we will continue with the pouring of partitions and exterior walls and raising them into place. After the walls and partitions are up, we can proceed with carpentry work on the roof, painting, plastering, floor finishing and a number of other areas of construction and finishing simultaneously."

Summer Service Units to Open Soon

Final plans are being made for the M.C.C. Summer-Service Units which will open about mid-June. Approximately 250 young people have applied for a service opportunity for the coming summer months, in the United States and Canada. Leaders have been appointed for nearly all of the units; ministers and other resource leaders have been engaged to serve as counselors and advisors.

Religious Freedom and Naturalization

Through assistance of the M.C.C., U. S. citizenship was recently granted to Paul G. Brenneman of Trevos, Pa. His application had earlier been turned down, and was later approved largely on the ground that he is a conscientious objector to combatant and noncombatant military service.

Several measures have been introduced into the Senate which, although not passed, reflect some active opposition to the decision of the Supreme Court in the Cohnstaedt case. Plans have been made through the office of Senator Francis Myers of Pennsylvania, to interview the appropriate officials in the Justice Department, to restate the position of inability to perform military service for religious reasons, but willingness to render alternative constructive civilian service.

From the Mission Front

In India: Frontiers Unlimited

by Mrs. Lubin Jantzen

WE HAD not walked far, one morning during touring season, when we began to realize the advancing denseness of the jungle. It was strikingly diferent from the forest around Jagdeeshpur, for here there were still in abundance, tall, straight, choice trees for lumber. On either hand were bamboo trees, with their gracious sweeping leaves. These are valuable, hence are protected by the government, and only cut by permission. The Christian forest-ranger living at Deori, arranged a guide for us, who would take us to Achanakpur, a village situated right on the top of a mountain where probably no missionary had ever been.

Offering of Coconut and Coins

We were following a rocky mountain stream so steep that at times it was difficult to find secure footing as we hopped from rock to rock, or over fallen branches. Our party included four evangelists from the touring camp, a helper, Mr. Jantzen, the guide, and myself. At one place we came to a beautiful waterfall, and near it a heathen shrine hidden in a small cave on the rocky bank. In it was the rough idol, and before it some recent worshippers offering of coconut and a few coins. We were reminded of the words of the Psalmist, when he said: "The idols of the heathen are silver and gold, the work of men's hands. They have mouths, but speak not; eyes have they, but see not; they have ears, but hear not, neither is there any breath in their mouths. They that make them are like unto them, so is everyone that trusteth in them."

This Unusual Sound

By noon we finally reached Achanakpur. As we entered the village singing a Christian chorus, the women and children came running to their hut door to see the reason for this unusual sound—then quickly slipped back in again for fear. What a difference in these villages and villagers and those nearer civilization. These wore dirty or torn clothes, or none at all for the children. Their hair was unkept, matted and dirty. After some calling a few came out in their shy way and squatted on the floor to see what would happen next. While the evangelists and Mr. Jantzen sang and got ready to give them a simple message on sin and its only remedy in the blood of Christ, I walked up and down the village paths calling people to come and listen—I knew my white skin would attract them. And finally a group came.

Only One Could Read

Among them, in the whole village there was only one man who could read. After the message was given in Hindi, one of the evangelists put it right into their own dialect, so all could understand. They even said a verse of Scripture after him, pointing them to Christ. Some bought Gospels and song books which they would ask this one man to read aloud to them. We know they heard the Word, and also have it in written form. Thus, with God's Word in their midst, we ask you to pray with us that soon in the coming years some from Achanakpur will see the light and take Christ into their hearts.

As we left the village, singing in Hindi the chorus, "What can wash away my sin? Nothing but the blood of Jesus," we were conscious of a new spring in our step. The joy of proclaiming Christ to those in heathen darkness, flooded our hearts.

God's Laymen

by S. T. Moyer

THE modern Missionary Movement was pioneered by William Carey. He once described himself not as a shoemaker, but as a mere cobbler. God used him so mightily that before he ended His work, he had translated the Bible or portions of it into thirty different languages of India, wrote grammers of many of these, and compiled three massive dictionaries of Sanskrit, Bengali, and Marathi languages.

In India he was not welcomed by the East India Trading Company. This British institution in time assumed full governmental functions over vast areas of this sub-continent. It did not want missionaries to sail from England, and did not want them to enlighten their consciences on morals and ethics, not to do anything to disturb the natives. Carey was compelled to become an indigo planter. Almost alone he labored until there came the glad news that he was to be reinforced by four associates: Marshman, Ward, Grant, and Brundon.

The four recruits finally obtained ocean passage on an American sailboat, the "Criterion," which sailed from Plymouth England May 1799. The Shipmaster was Captain Wickes, who favored missionaries. He was an elder of a Presbyterian church in Philadelphia. In the Presbyterian system the term "elder" is not applied to ordained clergy but to certain laymen serving in the church. For twenty weeks they sailed around the Cape until they reached the mouth of the Hoogly. Then came orders that these misionaries could not land in Calcutta. What now?

Though the East India Company forbade these missionaries landing privileges, one of their directors, a Mr. Grant, the second layman in the story advised that they go on up the river to a Danish settlement, near the present Serampore. They finally landed at Serampore, then called Friedricknagore by the Danes. They were cordially welcomed by the Governor, Colonel Bie, who himself had imbibed the missionary spirit from a forerunner of Carey, C. F. Swartz, a missionary in South India.

Thus three laymen, an American sea captain, a British Corporation Director, and a Danish Governor, were used of God to enable the Protestant missionary movement to be launched, to enable Carey to do his translations, and his associates, Marshman and Ward to operate the printing press and publish this Word, not for the thousands, nor for the hundreds of thousands, nor for mere millions, but ultimately for hundreds of millions within India. Humanly speaking, these, God's Laymen, saved this initial effort from fading away, and from being smashed on the rocks, and enabled it to succeed.

It was the laymen of Acts 8 who were scattered abroad, who went everywhere preaching, not the apostles. It was the laymen of Acts 6, who authenticated the Word of God's love (Jn. 3:16) with the ministry of love to needy believers (Acts 6:3). In the total scheme for leadership, the vital place of laymen needs be recognized. The need for the well-trained full-ordained men, who will give themselves to prayer and the ministry of the Word is imperative. But all through history it is the layman who has stood by, as Hur, (Exodus 17:11,12) who completed the team with Moses and Aaron, whereby came the victory for God.

This is our golden jubilee year! Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow! And praise God for the laymen of America, scattered in so many different churches, who have so valiantly stood by this missionary effort in India, as well as the total Christian Enterprise.

FREEMAN STUDENT TO NATIONAL SPEECH INSTITUTE

IN A recent four-state contest conducted by the Flax Institute of the United States five of the Academy agriculture class entered essays on the subject: "How Modern Farming Methods Can Improve Flax Yields on My Father's Farm." One of the entrants received honorable mention in the State and received a prize. Benjamin Waltner is the Instructor of the Agriculture classes at Freeman and his earnest and untiring efforts in behalf of better rural living and Christianity in everyday experiences have made an invaluable contribution to the school and the community.

The two students from Freeman who are participating in the M.C.C. sponsored student-exchange program this summer are Phyllis Mueller and Ruby Tieszen. They plan to leave by plane June 16.

Marian Kleinsasser was admitted for five weeks' study in debate and public speaking to the National High School Institute of Speech at Northwestern University. Admission to this Institute is limited to 100 high school juniors from the entire nation.

Among voluntary service projects in which students will engage this summer are projects at Skillman, Topeka and Whitfield State Hospitals, Crippled Children's Camp, and the House of Mercy, Washington, D.C.

SEMINARY ALUMNI ELECT

THE Alumni Banquet had Grover T. Soldner, graduate of Witmarsum Seminary of the class of 1920, as the toastmaster. The opening address was by Mrs. Harold Ratzlaff who has been living here with her family this year prior to their return to India for a second term next fall. Mrs. Ratzlaff made a plea along practical lines for a missionary apartment completely furnished so that the Seminary may be attractive and workable as a center for conference missionaries who are on furlough. The major addresss of the evening was given by Ronald von Riesen, member of the senior class and Executive Secretary of the General Conference Board of Education. His topic was "The Place of the Seminary in the Total Work of the Conference."

Following the business meeting there was an election of officers. Officers for next year will be P. K. Regier, executive secretary of the General Conference, Newton, Kansas, as president; Maynard Shelly of the Allentown, Pennsylvania, Mennonite Church as vice president; Harold Thiessen of the Middlebury, Indiana, Mennonite Church, as secretary-treasurer; and President Edmund Miller of Freeman Junior College as Alumni representative on the Board of Trustees.

As usual the students and faculty were invited to the annual celebration of the traditional Brethren love feast and communion on Saturday evening.

BLUFFTON ANNIVERSARY BOOK OFF PRESS

THE new book, Bluffton College—An Adventure in Faith, came off the press Friday, June 2. It is a history of the college for the first fifty years and a record of the contribution of the school to the church and to education. It may be secured through the business office of the college.

President Ramseyer gave the commencement address at Chatham High School, in Medina County, Wednesday evening May 24. He spoke on the importance of convictions.

Summer school will begin immediately after the close of the regular school year. Short intensive courses will be given in which the student will take only one subject at a time for a three week period. There will be four such periods, making it possible to earn twelve semester-hours of credit during the summer.

Miss Edna Ramseyer and President Ramseyer will take part in the orientation program for students going to Europe this summer. The program will be held June 13, 14 at Messiah Bible College, Grantham, Pennsylvania. Four Bluffton students and one alumnus will take the trip. President C. N. Hostetter Jr., of Messiah Bible College will accompany the group as its leader. The trip is sponsored by the Council of Mennonite and Affiliated Colleges. Those from Bluffton going on the trip are Richard Hostetler, Smithville, Ohio; Joanne Miller, Cory, Pennsylvania; Leonard Smucker, Bluffton, Ohio; John Stutzman, Carlock, Illinois; and, Irma Ramseyer, Columbus, Ohio.

BETHEL CHOIR TOURS EAST

THE Itinerary of Bethel Choir is as follows: Beatrice, Nebarska, May 31; Ottumwa, Iowa, June 1; Meadows, Illinois, June 2; Chicago, Ill., June 3; Goshen, Indiana, June 6; Detroit, Michigan, June 7; Waterloo, Ontario, June 8; Niagara-On-the-Lake, June 9; Clinton, New York, June 10; New York City, June 11; Washington, D. C., June 14; Akron, Pennsylvania, June 17; Sugarcreek, Ohio, June 19; Bluffton, Ohio, June 20; Berne, Indiana, June 21; Bloomington, Indiana, June 22; Summerfield, Illinois, June 23; Fortuna, Missouri, June 24; North Newton, Kanas, June 25.

Man must not live only in the other world nor only in this world, but must make of the two one world, President Kaufman expressed in his sermon entitled, "Living in Two Worlds" at the baccalaureate service held in Bethel College Memorial Hall. One can concern oneself with the other world too much, neglecting the world in which one lives at present. However, man cannot really succeed in this life without living for the spiritual, the eternal. Only attending to the spiritual gives peace of soul to "the troubled hearts of our time."

The engagement and approaching marriage of Mrs. Anna Baumgartner and President Ed. G. Kaufman has been announced.

M. C. C. Serves in Winnipeg Disaster

by Arnold Regier

WINNIPEG, MANITOBA.—The Canadian Mennonite Bible College Octet upon returning from a tour through some of our churches in the midwestern States was greeted by the surging and destructive waters of the Red River. Houses were floating in the torrential stream, thousands of evacuees were wandering about the streets homeless, army trucks were speeding to danger zones, and thousands of volunteer workers were keeping vigilance over miles of dikes protecting large areas of the city.

The College building, situated on the Assiniboine River, also was surrounded by the back waters of the Red River, the water level reaching to within a few inches of the first floor. The College has found it necessary to vacate its building and continue work at Altona. The evacuation took place on May 12.

A Big Bag and a Pet Dog

It is estimated that over one hundred thousand people have been evacuated out of the city of Winnipeg and the surrounding Red River area. Neighboring cities and farm homes graciously made available their facilities and opened their doors to these stranded families. The evacuation, itself, was carried out in an orderly manner under the supervision of the Red Cross. It is a touching scene to see families being carted into the large evacuation centers on open trucks and buses to be further distributed to other communities. Many were able to save only that which they were able to take with them. Often one would see a little boy carrying a big bag in one hand and leading a pet dog in the other.

Many evacuees were extremely grateful to see an M.C.C. representative in the evacuation center who took a personal interest in their plight and helped direct them to some Mennonite community. Two Mennonite evacuation centers were set up in the city under the direction of David Schroeder and a ministerial committee of the city. With the aid of College students and volunteer workers approximately three hundred evacuee families were helped to find temporary homes. At the present time Mr. Schroeder is investigating possibilities of helping rural areas in the large rehabilitation program which is yet before them. It is in such crises that one may hope our Mennonite witness may again resound forth "In the Name of Christ."

Choir and leaders held their annual dinner at the church. Games were played after which the recording of the Easter cantata was played. Twenty-two of our group have enrolled in the Leadership Training School sponsored by the Conference. A group traveled to Denver to the annual Fellowship Dinner given by the Brotherhood.—Corr.

—Hereford Church, Bally, Pennsylvania: The Eastern District Conference was entertained at our church May 4 to 7. Our minister, Wilmer S. Shelly, was elected president of the Conference. The spring Communion Services were observed on Mother's Day when 12 young people were united with our church. Our pastor served communion to the guests at the old folks home in Fredrick, Sunday afternoon, May 21. Our Christian Endeavor Society gave a program at the Bowmansville Church on Sunday evening, May 28. Mrs. Wilmer Shelly spoke at the mother-daughter banquet of the Lansdale Church on Thursday evening, May 25. Our Women's Auxiliary held their Mother-daughter Program on Tuesday evening, May 16, in the Primary Department of our church.—Mae Latshaw, Corr.

MIDDLE DISTRICT

—Salem Church, Dalton, Ohio: Our cradle roll superintendent, Mrs. Caroline Lehman, who is now serving her twenty-seventh year in that capacity, has added another name to the list: Rodney Lee, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Arney, born May 3. Mr. and Mrs. Karl Fahrne and three children from Zurich, Switzerland, have now arrived in our community in the Menno Zuercher home. Taking the letters H-O-M-E as a basis for a Mother's Day sermon, our pastor Irvin Richert listed the main ingredients of a happy home as holiness, oneness, mercy, and education with Christ set at the head of the household as the Invisible Member through all and in all.—Mrs. Ivan Badertscher, Corr.

Report on Retreats

THE following reports on Retreats are not quite complete, however, they give a general picture of what takes place along the line of retreats in our Conference. By now, every district and province of the Conference have their own retreats. It is only in the last ten years that this has become true. It is only in the last twenty-five years that retreats began to be a part of our church life. And, only in the last fifteen years has any district owned its own camp site.

From this, it can be seen how young, camping and retreats are in our Conference. The Eastern District was the first to own its own site. It was obtained and built up in the thirties. Saskatchewan was next to own its own camp. The Western District was third to own its own camp having bought the land about three years ago and having had a retreat there the first time last year. This year a kitchen-dining hall is being built and actual dedication and serious development of the site is underway. This spring the Middle and Central Districts have gone together to buy their own camp site. So, with each year new developments are underway in this new and young program in our church.

NORTHERN DISTRICT

The Young People's Retreat sponsored by the Northern District Conference Young People's Organization will this year be under the directorship of George G. Dick of Bloomfield, Montana.

As last year, the Byron Camp grounds north of Huron, South Dakota, will be the site of the retreat. The dates are set at August 14-18.

Those conducting class sessions and assisting in the camp leadership are as follows:

Bible Study—Erland Waltner
Mennonite Doctrines—Walter Gering
Youths' Problems of Christian Living—J. Winfield Fretz
Arts and Crafts—Miss Esther Bohn

It is only as we show our interest by prayer and attendance that the retreat will be of benefit to us, our communities and the Church.

CALIFORNIA

Our seven California churches have their Young People's Retreat each year at Camp Gaines, Lake Sequoia National Park, during the month of August. We have a retreat Committee that is directly responsible for the success of the retreat, although our C.E. and S. S. Convention backs up the Committee one hundred per cent.

In California, we also have a family retreat with its own Committee. This one is held on Labor Day week-end at Cambria Pines, Cambria, California, expressly for adults with smaller children who are not included in the Young People's retreat.

EASTERN DISTRICT

The Eastern District Conference is the sponsor and in charge of the Retreats. A committee is choosen from various churches of the District to act as the Retreat board. All problems are settled by the board. Another committee is appointed which arranges for the program of the retreats.

The date for our retreats are as follows:

June 30 to July 6, Young People
July 8 to July 15, Junior
July 15 to July 22, Intermediates
July 22 to July 28, High School
July 28 to July 30, Adults

All of our retreats are held at our own retreat grounds which belongs to the Eastern District Conference. It is called Men-O-Lan, which is about seven miles from Quakertown. It consists of seven cabins, one auditorium, one Mess Hall, one cook's cabin, and two leaders' cabins.

Among the leaders for this year are:

John P. Suderman, from the Northern District and wife
Randall Heinrichs
Grace Moyer, charge of the youngsters and also teacher on Bible study at the Retreats
Wilmer Denlinger, song leader

MIDDLE AND CENTRAL DISTRICT

The retreat will be in two parts—a junior camp for people who next fall will be in grades six, seven, or eight. It is sponsored jointly by the Middle and Central District conferences.

The dates of the retreat are June 19-25.

The retreat will be held at Camp Alexander Mack, Milford, Indiana.

Members of the faculty of the Junior camp will be:

Olin Krehbiel, dean
Viola Lehman
Joe Atherton
Irvin Richert
Raymond Yoder, camp pastor
Arlene Hartzler, music
Harold Thiessen
Lotus Troyer

Members of the faculty of the Senior camp will be:

Robert Hartzler, dean
Ernest Bohn
Virgil Gerig
William Stauffer
Raymond Hartzler
Marvin Dirks
H. E. Nunemaker, camp pastor
Leonard Metzker
Esko Loewen
Lotus Troyer
Evelyn Nunemaker Krehbiel

SASKATCHEWAN

The schedule for our retreats is as follows:

Canadian Conference to be held at Rosthern, Sask., July 1-5
Rosthern retreat (Sask.), July 6-9
Swift Current retreat (Sask.), July 16-23
S. C. Children's camp, July 23-30

The retreats are sponsored by the Provincial Youth Organizations.

Our faculty for Saskatchewan will include Andrew R. Shelly from Kitchener, Ontario; Walter Hohmann, North Newton; Miss Marie Regier, missionary to China, and J. C. Schmidt, Steinbach, Manitoba, who is the former President of the Sask. Youth Organization. There will also be some local speakers.

MANITOBA

The Manitoba Youth Retreat is sponsored by the Manitoba Mennonite Youth Organization. The plan followed last year was to appoint a committee of three who organized the program and also acted as leaders at the retreat. This year the committee is increased to 4. The members of this committee are: Henry Funk, Carman, Manitoba; David Schroeder, Winnipeg, Manitoba; P. R. Harder, Arnaud, Manitoba; and Gerhard Ens, Gretna, Manitoba. A retreat has been planned for the days of August 13-16 inclusive to be held at the Assinaboine Mennonite Mission Camp near Headingly, Manitoba. The workers at the retreat will probably be the following: J. M. Pauls, evangelism; P. J. Schaefer, Mennonite History and principles; J. D. Adrian, Bible; G. Ens, German Literature; Ed. Enns, Sports program. Efforts are being made at present to co-operate with other provinces to secure missionary workers for the various Canadian retreats.

From Military Service to Christian Nonresistance

By Pierre Widmer, Nommay, France

(concluded)

OH, HOW I should like to help them, to show them a little kindness! But what can I do? I am an officer, and I do not have the time to look after them. However, I feel myself made more for such work than for the work of a soldier. And it appears to me to be just as necessary to care for these people as to use up my strength to find suitable sites for my part of the mortars, which must constantly be changed for absolutely incomprehensible reasons. It seems to me much more desirable to devote my strength to the work of love and peace than to the preparation of positions for war which will perhaps never serve any purpose. (The conjecture will eventually prove to be correct.) There are enough others who reasoned to the call of violence. And I feel like a stranger among them . . .

During this entire period of the war, the winter of 1939-40 I suffer intensely as I discover the lack of constraint of so many soldiers, against which the high command struggles without much efficiency. The alcoholism of the army deeply distresses me. The indecision of the leaders worries me. I have the impression that an inevitable catastrophe is in the making; and when I unburden my heart to my captain, he threatens me, half-seriously, and half-jokingly, with a court-martial. However, I have the conviction that "all is not well." And the periods of instruction which I have occasion to carry on in various places confirms me in my impression. How I should like to work in a labor of peace!

But May 10, 1940, arrives, bringing the brutal serial attack of the Germans on Holland, Belgium, and France. Upon first hearing the news by radio (I am at this time at Valdahon and have come to spend the night at home), I am horrified and struck with consternation at the same time.

Several days afterwards I am in Alsace at the border of the Rhine in the Haardt forest. In the morning the planes pass again in successive waves high overhead. It is absolutely useless to fire upon them with our infantry weapons. But I am suddenly seized with an intense feeling of revolt: they are not attacking us, the soldiers, the people prepared to fight, but our wives, our children, our parents, our friends, our villages, our schools, our homes . . . . And I, too, want to do something to prevent them from doing it. I seize the machine gun in firing position on its picket; I take aim; I fire . . . I pull, but the charge does not go off: the weapon locks; it is impossible to fire with this machine gun! And there I am, my feeling of revolt in my heart, and my useless weapon in my hands. God is

A Questionnaire on Smoking

By C. Aubrey Hearn

1. How many people smoke tobacco today?

It is said that there are sixty million Americans who smoke tobacco. One study revealed that three out of four men and two out of five women above the age of sixteen smoke, and that ninety per cent of both prefer the cigarette.

2. How much do Americans spend for tobacco?

In a recent year the American tobacco bill was $3,880,000,000. This was more than was spent in that year for all education—elementary, high-school, and college.

3. Why do people smoke?

Various reasons are given by smokers. Among them are to break down social barriers, to aid digestion, to give a lift. Most of these reasons are based upon ignorance and cannot be scientifically defended.

4. How can the increasing popularity of the cigarette be explained?

While cigarettes in 1915 accounted for only ten per cent of the total tobacco used in production, in 1946 they accounted for seventy-seven per cent. In 1914 there were three billion cigarettes manufactured in the United States. By 1918 this figure had jumped to forty-six billion. It was the first World War that gave gigantic impetus to the smoking of cigarettes. By 1928 cigarette manufacture had jumped to 106 billion, and by 1939 to 172 billion. In the next decade the latter figure more than doubled. In 1948, 388 billion cigarettes were manufactured—over a billion a day. This was an average of nearly eight cigarettes a day for every person in the country.

5. Does smoking shorten the wind?

One of the first noticeable effects of smoking is upon the breathing. It is for this and other reasons that athletic coaches forbid smoking.

6. Does smoking waste time?

Smoking is one of the most common time wasters. Dr. Douglas Southall Freeman, famous biographer and newspaper man, quit smoking because he found that the buying, lighting, smoking, and crushing out of cigarettes wasted eight and one-half hours a week.

7. Does smoking harm the voice?

I sent this question to Dr. Chevalier Jackson, one of the world's most eminent throat specialists. He replied: "Untold thousands of singers have ruined the finest qualities of their voice and have fallen short of the highest attainments in their career by smoking tobacco. Relatively few succeed in spite of indulgence. The enormous increase in cigarette smoking has made laryingotrachetis (cigarette cough) an extremely common disease, deplorably so among women. It has ruined many beautiful voices among choir and concert singers. This effect is local in the larynx and trachea, and is due to empyreumatic oils produced by the destructive distillation of the tobacco leaf in burning."

8. Is tobacco habit forming?

I examined a dozen books on hygiene and health and all said that smoking soon becomes a habit. It is a habit that is hard to break. Relatively few smokers have the will power to quit.

9. Does tobacco cause cancer of the lung?

Dr. Alton Ochsner, professor of surgery at Tulane University School of Medicine, wrote to me: "Cancer of the lung is a common disease, particularly in men. It is increasing more than any other kind. The reason is smoking. This disease is also increasing in women because of smoking. It is my opinion that smoking is the main factor responsible for the increasing incidence of lung cancer."

10. Is it more harmful for women to smoke than for men?

Smoking has the same effect upon women that is has upon men. It has been found, however, that girls and women tend to smoke to greater excess because they have more leisure for smoking.

11. Does smoking shorten life?

Dr. Raymond Pearl published his famous study on "Tobacco Smoking and Longevity" in Science in March, 1938. His conclusion was: "The smoking of tobacco is statistically associated with an impairment of life duration, and the amount or degree of this impairment increased as the habitual amount of smoking increased."

12. Has tobacco advertising increased the number of smokers?

Millions of dollars spent to make smoking appear glamorous have undoubtedly played a big part in the increasing popularity of smoking. The general tendency of tobacco advertising is to promote a belief in the harmlessness of smoking. Tobacco advertisements are cleverly designed but shrewdly misleading.

13. Does smoking aid digestion?

Smoking reduces appetite and interferes with digestion. While occasional smoking may have little effect upon the appetite, the tendency of smoking is to make food become tasteless and to lessen the desire for food. Normal appetite induced by hunger is interfered with by tobacco.

14. Does smoking soothe the nerves?

Tobacco is used primarily for its effect upon the nervous system. The effect upon the brain is essentially narcotic, or depressing. Denicotinized tobacco has never been popular. When smoking becomes a habit, as it soon does, the nervous system tends to demand the drug effect which tobacco produces. If this demand is not satisfied, irritability and insomnia may follow. "Smoking nervouseness" manifests itself in some cases in shaky hands, nervous movements, and in indisposition in general.

15. How much does it cost to smoke?

The per capita expenditure for the smokers in 1948 was about $62. Many a smoker spends $150 a year for tobacco and accessories.

16. Is smoking the leading cause of fires?

Careless smoking causes about thirty per cent of fires and has been for many years the leading fire cause. In 1947 the property loss from fires caused by careless smokers was $51,500,000. Most of the nations' destructive fires are now caused by careless smokers.

17. Does careless smoking cause forest fires?

It is estimated that fires caused by smokers cause an average loss of 562,822 acres of forest a year. Figuring at the rate of $70 per acre, the loss amounts to $39,541,390 a year.

18. Are smokers inconsiderate of others?

Westbrook Pegler said that smokers are, as a class, the most inconsiderate of human beings. No-smoking rules are often not observed, and nonsmokers have no way to protect themselves from such clouds of offense. Dr. Samuel Johnson said: "To be sure, it is a shocking thing—blowing smoke out of our mouths into other people's mouths, eyes, and noses, and having the same thing done to us."

19. Is it possible to quit smoking?

Yes, but it requires the exercise of will power. The best way is to stop at once. The tapering-off method is not recommended.

20. What are the rewards of not smoking?

Among them are: more money, better sleep, keener sense of smell, and better appetite.

Wanted—Reliable Information on Smoking

WHERE can one go to get information on smoking? If you would listen only to the radio and observe the movies and read the papers, you would get a picture of smoking which is completely good and appealing. The radio claims it is "free and easy on the draw" and "there is not a rough puff," they are "so mild, so round, so firmly packed." If you observe the movies, the good people relax with a cigarette, how genteel it is to sit back and converse about many subjects with beautiful women and handsome men amidst a cloud of fragrant smoke. The whole weight of emphasis is in the direction of being smart, of being socially proper, or being suave by smoking.

All of this evidence carries an underlying assumption that a prig doesn't smoke, a person who doesn't smoke is trying to be 'goody goody' and who wants to be called that? If you really want to be a man, you have to be able to take deep draughts of strong smoke. If you want to be a woman of affairs, you have likewise to be able to handle a cigarette with finesse.

These seem to be the attitudes underlying the push toward the use of tobacco. In addition, the nicotine has a pleasant drugging effect which high strung people in a high strung age desire.

But, very seldom does one find a scientific analysis of the use of tobacco. Seldom does one find authoritative information on what the use of tobacco does to one's health. Those things are covered up in the ads. Smokers cough, cancer of the lung, and loss of appetite go unmentioned. For this reason, the article in this issue of the Youth section requires special care in reading and discussion.—E. L.

speaking to me. It is not given to me to use these weapons of war to accomplish justice according to the opinion of men.

Six months later, during the last days of the French campaign, I am taken prisoner with the whole army. What a disaster! And for five years I shall experience being in captivity. Five years a prisoner! In 1935 I was afraid of going to prison; I shrank in the face of this prospect; I did not accept this dishonor entailed in loving Christ and remaining faithful to the Gospel. And now I do not have the choice: I am a prisoner, and am going to be one for a long time. I shall have all the time to meditate on my situation, my conduct, and the teachings of the Word of God.

For five years in the midst of distress, I am going to have the opportunity to proclaim Jesus Christ to my comrades in misfortune. Quickly our life is organized. In July we have our first religious service, during which I give testimony to my Saviour. This testimony is received by several who later also accept the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour. Throughout the entire period of captivity I have the joy, either alone or with various other pastors, of bringing several comrades into the knowledge of the Gospel. What a happiness to be able, even in the midst of adversity, to lead souls to Jesus Christ and to realize daily that He is living, faithful, and powerful. And in this work I feel perfectly in my place, in the place where God wants me. My conviction becomes firm and definite: I am, and want to be, nothing other than a disciple of Jesus Christ and His Gospel of peace.

Little by little I see clearly and I understand that my position as a Christian, as a child of God, makes it necessary for me to be only a stranger and a pilgrim on earth. I am no longer to take arms to defend by my power a terrestrial country to which I am however bound, but to which I have other duties. I am not to receive my orders from a general staff, but from my Lord and His Word. Properly speaking, I am not a citizen of the earth, but a citizen of heaven. And I am not to follow the profession of bearing arms, so unmistakably in contradiction with that Word, but rather to be a minister of love and consolation in the name of Christ. That must be my manner of being a good citizen.

At a time when one speaks about totalitarianism in other countries, I am astonished that no one notices how totalitarian we have been in France for a long time, since no exception is permitted and every male citizen must sacrifice to the god of war, even against his conscience. I am astonished that the churches, even mine, have heartily accepted that, and find it natural and good. Oh, Christian churches, what responsibility will be yours, and at what a loss you will be at the time when you will have to give an account!

Have you not accepted with a willing heart the rule of Mars over you instead of the rule of Christ and His Word? Have you not professed in word that you are disciples of Christ and in deed accepted all the human doctrines concerning the position of man on the earth? Do you not accept taking up arms to defend an earthly country simply because it is a human concept and because you do not have faith in God and do not believe Him capable of using other means to protect your earthly inheritance? Have you not till now pretended to believe every war a holy one in order to

NEW YORK, N. Y.—The Christian Church was called upon recently to wage an "all-out" battle against anti-Semitism as an effective means of insuring the Church's own survival.

The appeal was made in a special statement, described as a "Declaration of Principles" by the recently formed American Committee on the Christian Approach to the Jews.

The Committee, with headquarters at 297 Fourth Avenue, is composed of representatives of the following Protestant interdenominational agencies: the Federal Council of Churches, the Home Missions Council of North America, the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, and the Internationad Missionary Council.

Together these agencies have the support of over 27,000,000 Protestants of more than 50 denominations.

Describing anti-Semitism as "absolutely irreconcilable" with Christianity the statement warned that the existence of anti-Semitism, "no matter what its origin," constituted a "throat and menace" to the existence of Christianity. It added:

"Wherever anti-Semitism thrives, Christianity cannot long survive."

Conrad Hoffman, executive secretary, of the American Committee on the Christian Approach to the Jews, emphasized that the statement represented the "first time a widely representative group of Protestant leaders have agreed on a common strategy and plan of action dealing with Christian-Jewish relations."

Tolerance and Conversion

In setting forth what the right Christian attitude be toward the 12,400,000 Jews who remain of the prewar total of 16,500,000, the statement's recommendations boil down to the words "tolerance" and "conversion."

On the latter, the statement specifically rejects the view that Jews should be omitted from evangelistic efforts of the Church on the ground that they worship the same God as Christians.

Such a view, the statement claims, "is to maintain the Judaism, which is without Christ and in fact rejects and denies Jesus Christ, is adequate for the Jew."

"This means the Jew does not need Christ. If we accept that conclusion then no other people necessarily need Christ. To admit this would end all motivation for evangelism or Christian missionary effort at home and abroad."

Against "Special Ministry"

At the same time, the statement cautioned against a "special ministry" to the Jew, claiming that such a practice would result in "singling out" the Jews.

The proper way for the Church to convert Jews is to include them in the normal service and ministry of the local parish, the statement said.

In releasing the statement, Dr. Hoffmann said the Committee was planning a nation-wide series of "regional" meetings to discuss Christian-Jewish relations. Plans were under way, he said, for the establishment of a Christian Institute for Jewish studies, modeled along the lines of similar European institutes, where ministers and laymen will be prepared to work among Jews, while regular seminaries are to include special courses on Judaism in their curriculum.

Jewish Missions Neglected

In stressing the need for the Church to intensify its work among Jews, Hoffman pointed to the fact that Latin America now has over 600,000 Jews, with more arriving every month. Yet only two North American Protestant groups are at work among these people, he continued. These are the American board of Jewish Missions and the North American Hebrew Christian Alliance.

The Middle East, North and South Africa, were other places mentioned by Hoffman as in need of similar missionary work. Pointing out that anti-Jewish feeling was on the increase in Islamic countries, Hoffmann said the failure of American missionaries in these countries to include the Jews in their work, "Helps to set the Jews apart from the natives of these lands."

justify your position, and given your blessing to all the conquerors of the earth? Oh, Christian churches, are you in reality Christian?

When I read the Word: "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world" (John 17:16), or: "Christ also suffered or us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps" (1 Pet. 2:21), or again: "Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment, because as he is, so are we in this world" (1 John 4:17), I am obliged, either to renounce being a Christian such as God desires, or to conform my conduct to these truths in order to be truly Christian. And I do not see how I could be like Christ in the world and follow His steps while carrying a weapon of war and killing anyone. But I remember His word: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me." (Luke 9:23.)

And here I have come to the foolishness of the cross, incomprehensible to the world, unacceptable to so many people who call themselves Christians, but which is the power of God. It is understood that in choosing this foolishness, I am condemned in advance by the world. But I prefer to be on the side of God, not in order to be saved by my good works, but because He has saved me by grace, redeemed me at great price in order that I might belong to Him and be a child of peace in the world, a disciple of the Prince of Peace, and not a servant of Mars.

Prompted by loyalty, I tried to be a child of peace with weapons in my hand, not for attacking other people, but for defending my own. And I did not succeed. Now I want to count on God and leave to Him the care of defending us, my people and myself, as He has promised. Besides, He also says in His Word: "Be not righteous over much: neither make thyself over wise" (Eccl. 7:16), and that is why I am ready to accept for the service of my country any task to which my conscience can give consent, any task in which any man of good will can recognize that in it a disciple of Jesus Christ is in his place, any task for which I can be sure of the approval of God. (2 Tim. 2:15).

Looking Toward Freeman

When we Canadians came to know that the General Conference of the Mennonite church of North America of 1938 was to be held in Canada, (the first time in its history) we were very eager to attend this Conference. We had not only heard, but personally seen and experienced the fruits of its labors. Such was the case in connection with the Relief Work and the Home Mission Board which helped the immigrants in a special way to organize as congregations and to build churches.

Then the Conference came. Practically during the entire time of the Conference at Saskatoon I was an observer, and at the same time the host, even though I had served several terms in the Peace Committee. The next time, however, I too, was invited to attend the Conference at Souderton, Pa. In the meantime war had broken out. In 1941 we spent 2-3 days at the border near Niagara Falls, but were not permitted to cross. Brother J. J. Thiessen of Saskatoon and I each had a brother in Russia. This circumstance prevented us from obtaining the permission to cross the border. Perhaps they feared, south of the border, that we would say something unpleasant about that ally. Now we have no difficulty in crossing the boundary.

Thus I am looking forward to Freeman. The General Conference has a vast field of possibilities for work. One has his own thoughts concerning many things. We would not agree with everything the way it is done in the Conference. However, the main point is that it is our Conference, our Work. In the same way one does not approve of everything in his own home, but we say, "Our home," and strive toward greater perfection.

The General Conference has been a great blessing. With God's help and our efforts it can be a greater blessing still.

Editorials

HOW CAN WE AFFORD to consider expanding our present missionary work and even open a new field in Japan as the Foreign Mission Board suggests (and as Conference must decide in August) when we are having immense difficulties raising our present budgets not only in other phases of work but in mission work as well? This is a question that some will undoubtedly ask as they read the report of the semi-annual meeting of the Board of Foreign Missions. The answer to this query is not so much a question of our capacity or ability as it is a matter of our obedience and consecration. One way of approaching the problem is to say that a group with the size and resources of the General Conference can be counted on being able to contribute just so much to all Conference causes and no more. But we must be careful that we do not place our human limitations on God. The foreign mission task is one phase of the Conference response to the specific call of Jesus Christ to bring the whole gospel to the whole world now. It is not our business to question what we can do; it is rather our business to place our full confidence in the commands and promises of God and launch out into the deep. Such an act means that as such Conference enterprises are expanded there must be a parallel expansion of the consecration of Christian at home.

JAPAN ought to be entered by our Conference! But if it is at the cost of detracting funds from the seminary, relief work, Conference schools and education, and other needed ministries it will not be a gain for Christ. Therefore two alternatives lie before us. One is to maintain the status quo lest other areas suffer—and this would mean atrophy. The other is to search our hearts anew and determine that we haven't begun to sacrifice for the work of Christ. Every expansion of our work in any area must be matched by a dynamic program of stewardship education. Furthermore, we can and must open new potential for giving in the lives of those we are or ought to be winning to Christ and the Church for the first time. Surely this is one way that we can by the grace of God make the kingdoms of this world to become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ. It is high time that the Conference churches make it unnecessary for Conference boards and institutions to scale down budgets in the eleventh hour of opportunity by challenging their members to pour out their lives in stewardship and evangelistic effort to underwrite the task before us.

BUT WHAT ABOUT CHINA NOW. The report has it that the doors are apparently closed. Which doors? Obviously, the political doors. But the church is never satisfied when political doors are slammed in its face. There may be iron curtains, bamboo curtains, and economic curtains that keep men out; but, they cannot keep the Spirit from penetrating. Where the Spirit of God penetrates and permeates, there the curtains must eventually come down. In the meantime, thank God, we have workers and a dynamic native witness in China. Becoming concerned with Japan ought not to let us drop our concern with China or cross that country off our prayer-lists. China has been noted to swallow her enemies again and again over the centuries. The gospel and the missionary, a friend in any country, she has not been able to swallow. Can it be that God may yet use Christians in China to convert the Communists? After all, Communists are part of the world for which the blood of Christ was shed. Is it possible that God may be preparing China as a bridge for the gospel into the heart of godless Russia? Whatever may be our answers to these questions, we may be sure of two things. First, God is not through with China. And second, that we better not go to sleep on other opportunities in India, South America, Japan, Africa, and other areas where the enemies of God often are working with a much greater sense of consecration than the friends.

THE FINNS HAVE DEVELOPED an unusual attack on the alcohol problems according to Finnish Information Service. The State Alcohol monopoly ". . . allocates roughly one-third of these profits for the construction and maintenance of schools and churches. Another third is spent directly by the Government on temperance promotion and the care of alcoholics. Long concerned over their drinking habits, the Finns tried prohibition from 1919 to 1932, and then repealed the law by referendum and established a State Alcohol Monopoly which is required to spend two-thirds of its profits for projects which tend to discourage drink. According to a recent survey by the Daily Mail (London), consumption of alcohol per inhabitant in Finland is now among the lowest in the world." Making the profits on alcohol pay for the damage it creates as well as discouraging people to be damaged by it makes sense. On that basis the state being in "the business" makes a little more sense too.

Christian Foundation for Marriage

by Willard W. Wiebe

JUNE is the month of marriages. It is in this month that the familiar words are spoken most often, "We are gathered here in the sight of God and this company to unite this man and this woman in Holy Matrimony."

The Church has always been interested in the formation of the home. This is one of the Church's greatest responsibilities and highest privileges. To assist in the founding of the Christian home is indeed a crowning task of the Church. We shall never tire of the truth that marriage and the Christian home were "instituted of God, blessed by our Lord Jesus Christ, and commended by Saint Paul." The thirteenth chapter of I Corinthians will always be cherished as the melody of matrimony.

The home may be made in a tent, a mansion, a cabin or a rented flat. "The home," as one has said, "is a fold that shelters the family from the wolves of lust, strife, unbelief—a harbor in which souls anchor and abide secure from the storms of doubt and carnal stress that are without—a fortress from whose citadel the armed forces of love, truth, chastity, go forth to bless the world—a sanctuary in which faith builds an altar, opens the door of prayer and yields life and life's destiny to God."

It is strange that Joshua, the man of force and war, has given to this haven of love and peace—the Christian home—one of the most frequently used mottos. In his old age (and that is not without significance) he gives the challenge to Israel, "Choose you this day whom ye will serve . . . AS FOR ME AND MY HOUSE, WE WILL SERVE THE LORD." Joshua 24:15.

There are homes and then there are homes. There are Christian homes and there are just homes. The Christian home is a place where God's children live, where God's Son reigns, where God's Word is cherished and where God's Church is given prominence. The CHRISTIAN HOME is our goal.

Joshua's motto suggests three foundation stones for Christian homes. "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord.' There is DECISION.

The Christian home will not come about automatically. A church wedding, Christian grandparents or church membership will not guarantee your home to be Christian. The dangers of our modern day that threaten the Christian home demand much prayer, planning, work, ingenuity, sacrifice and many decisions. Young people are urged now to decide that their home will, by the grace of God, be Christian. After that commitment and decision is made, then anticipate a lifetime of decisions that will need to be made as new problems arise. In the Christian home there are decisions to be made in spiritual areas, recreational areas, educational areas, vocational areas, and many others. "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." Let that be the basis of an unending vigilance as new problems are faced and new decisions for Christ are made.

A second foundation stone for Christian homes that is suggested to us in our motto is DEDICATION. This is a step beyond decision.

One way in which dedication can be expressed and encouraged in the home is through the little worship services in the home. Grace at meals and a family altar are as natural to the Christian home as brushing teeth or reading the daily paper. "As for me and my house," implies parental authority in the home, including the worship services of that home. The modern parent will have no easy task to keep such services from becoming meaningless formalism or deadening monotony. We need to be on the alert for practical suggestions on new and simple ways to pray at the table or to conduct family worship. This takes effort, study, prayer, and dedication. "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." There is decision, and there is dedication. The third foundation stone is DEVOTION.

To couples who are looking forward to the establishing of their home we would offer this foundation stone also. "We will serve the Lord." Joshua's devotion is the active type. His devotion is spelled with the capital "S" of service. This is true devotion. This kind of devotion is yet a step further than dedication. I well recall the little boy's question in one home where I visited, "Mommy, will we have motions?" Devotion and motion not only sound alike but they are inseparable. We have devotion only when we are ready to serve. Service is the highest expression of devotion. Service is the fruit of Christian devotion. This too will help to make your home Christian.

June is the month of matrimony. But whether it is June or January, we wish to encourage you in your efforts to make your home Christian. May the words of Joshua be true of your home. "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." Young people, begin now to make your home Christian. You need not wait in this until after the minister has said, "I now pronounce you man and wife together." It is never too early for your decision for Christ, your dedication to Christ and your devotion to Christ to begin. In a real sense the first foundation stone of the Christian home is Christ, the second foundation stone is Christ and the third foundation stone is Christ! St. Paul writes in I Corinthians 3:11 "For other foundation can no man lay, than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ."

Christmas Bundle Project Under Way

Extensive Meat Distribution in Frankfort

AKRON, PA.—In the past years the Goodwill Christmas Bundles have filled a very valuable place in the relief program. Many letters of thanks have given deep and moving expressions of appreciation. Relief workers have also repeatedly commented that the Bundles contain just the things most urgently needed by children in countries where the scars of war can yet be seen.

Since these Bundles are so valuable in relief, and needs for this year have been confirmed, an appeal is again being made for Bundles. Parents, Sunday School teachers, and other leaders are encouraged to help plan to make one of these gift Bundles. The date by which Bundles are to be sent in is August 18, 1950. Contents and general directions are similar to those of past years; however, it is important to follow the specific instructions as listed on a special folder, copies of which have been sent to each congregation. Additional copies may be secured from the Relief Section, MCC, Akron, Pa.

There Are Still Food Distributions

During the month of March, some 2,700 families of Frankfurt, Germany, were the recipients of 8,047 cans of meat. A combined relief organization from the city helped in providing lists of particularly needy people. Heads of these families then received cards entitling them to several cans of meat, depending on the size of the family. There were twelve distributions in various parts of the city. Many of the recipients were old people who are unable to work because of age or physical disability. Many had crippled limbs or failing eyesight. For many of these people, meat is a rare item because it is so expensive.

One of the workers observes, "I have found that material aid assistance has given a solidarity to our expanding spiritual ministry and gives forth a better balanced and more consistent testimony." Some of the distributions involve visits to families, giving opportunity to speak personally with them.

Dried Eggs Secured for Relief Use

A total of 33,600 pounds of dried whole eggs have been secured from U. S. Government surplus, for use in foreign relief. Of this amount, 6,104 pounds are being sent to Austria, and the balance to Germany. This supply of dried eggs is free of charge at point of storage, which is Fort Worth, Texas. Transportation to the port of Houston, Texas is at MCC expense.

European Summer Work Camps Announced

Plans have been made for six Summer Service projects in Europe sponsored by the M.C.C. These are to open about July 25, and will continue for nearly a month. The projects include refugee housing projects at Donaueschingen, Darmstadt, and Westhofen, all in Germany; an emergency church building at Kiel, Germany; a youth center, "Agape" of the Waldensian church in Italy; and building of a center at Belfort, France, to be used by the French Mennonites. In these projects, North American and European Mennonite young people participate.

Use of C.O. Wages Again Defeated

The bill giving to the C.A.R.E. Book Program the sum of $1,300,000 which was earned by C.P.S. assignees and paid into the government "frozen fund" during the war, was recently defeated in the House of Representatives by a vote of 265 to 102. It had been proposed that this money be used through CARE to make available technical books for libraries destroyed in the war. A number of attempts have been made to apply this money to a cause related to relief.

Milk Powder Available for Relief

Within recent weeks it has been possible to secure (free of charge at point of storage) from government surplus stocks, powdered milk for relief purposes. A total of 43½ tons is being shipped to Germany, at present and within several weeks 22½ tons additional will be sent to Germany, 10 T. to France, 4 T. to Belgium and 6 T. to Austria. The transportation expense for sending this milk abroad is also reimbursed by the government, since these shipments originate from warehouses located in Minnesota and Wisconsin, and are loaded on ocean-going vessels departing fom lake harbors.

There is need, however, for funds to make possible adequate distribution of such materials on the foreign field—particularly for maintenance of workers and for local handling of supplies. To dispose of the material is not difficult or expensive but to distribute it carefully to reach the greatest need "In the Name of Christ" requires, and is worth, the additional investment of workers to give the "plus" witness and service. Some of this powdered milk will be used in institutions such as refugee camps, old people's homes and children's homes.

Additional quantities of powdered milk are available from government sources and will be secured as needed in the program and as distribution can be properly accomplished. Powdered eggs have also been ordered for similar use in relief, but no notice of shipment has been received.

More Farm Trainees Arrive

On May 27, seven more Mennonite young men arrived to begin their year of agricultural training in the United States. Following are the names of these young men, the country from which they have come, and the Mennonite community in which they will work:

Simon de Vries from Holland, to Mio, Mich.; Tabe Lei from Holland, to Newton, Kansas; Christian Gyger from France, to Eastern Pa.; Daniel Roth from France, to Nebr.; Jacques Graber from Switzerland, to Berne, Ind.; Hans Nussbaumer from Switzerland, to Va.; and Willy Sammt of Switzerland, to Lancaster County, Pa.

In Europe, a number of Voluntary Service workers are helping on farms of Mennonites, as an experimental project with purpose similar to the U. S. Trainee program.

Christian Responsibility and the State

by Don Smucker

ERNST TROELTSCH once said that there are no solutions for the problem of church and state—only periodic reformulations of the problem. This is to say that the Christian relation to government is one of the great mysteries of the Gospel, a mystery created by the relations of a redemptive community to a fallen world. I think Troeltsch is essentially correct and that the present time calls for a reformulation of the problem, particularly for the Mennonite churches and affiliated groups.

The history of any real Christian church can be studied in terms of the interaction between Matthew 28:19-20 and II Cor. 6:17. The first is outgoing; the second is in-going. Go ye! Separate ye! Some Christians have abandoned witnessing in order to stay pure and clean. Others have abandoned separation in order to witness more effectively. Yet both remain deeply imbedded in Scripture and in the experience of genuine church life.

Non-Conformity, A Secondary Defense

In our day the Mennonite church has re-discovered the witness aspect of these two Biblical forces—and, of course, it is clear that witness is the primary aspect of the Gospel since non-conformity is a kind of secondary defense designed to keep us worthy for witness. At the beginning of our church we were a powerful witnessing Christian movement. Franklin Littell believes that our Anabaptist forefathers were the real missionary party of the Reformation, restoring something which had been slumbering for centuries. Martyrdom and persecution silenced this outgoing force in our church life. Then came American and Canadian freedom for two centuries. About fifty years ago missions and education arose to awaken American Mennonites from their slumbers. About thirty years ago the M.C.C. re-opened the channels for cooperative emergency relief. And relief, let us heavily underscore, is always an encounter with government. All this was climaxed by Civilian Public Service, the most far-reaching and comprehensive relationship to government in the history of the Mennonite church. All this was coupled with a worldwide campaign in relief and refugee work, bringing forth our deepest resources, spiritually, financially and professionally.

An Original Contribution

Now we are emerging from the C.P.S. era, if we may call it that. We are so close to it we still have not fully realized how C.P.S. climaxed 50 years of missions education and general spiritual development. We entered the war knowing we could successfully carry on our own church program of missions and schools—all this with government relationships involved but not in any primary sense. But we entered C.P.S. not knowing if we were really capable of dealing with government when we sought to make a Christian witness essentially in the context of the government rather than the church. There were mistakes and heartaches of course. But out of this has come an original contribution, one of the most striking contributions in the history of American church and political life. It is the simple discovery that we can be active citizens and good patriots without killing and without training for killing. Needless to say, the American government learned this also in regard to conscientious objectors. Behind it was the obvious, but often overlooked fact, that governments are administered by human personalities with whom mutual self-respect, tolerance, and fair play can operate. From another standpoint our experience in this war era can be interpreted as the introduction of the personal element into our relationship with government. Whereas government was seen as impersonal, legal, and coldly judicial now it is seen as Lewis B. Hershey, Franklin Roosevelt, Col. Kosch, Clarence Dykstra and Congressman Starnes as they interpret our constitution, our laws and our general political tradition. From their point of view Mennonites now are not only church buildings, colleges, books, plain clothes, and other symbols, but also Orie Miller, Henry Fast, P. C. Hiebert, Albert Gaeddert, Eli Bontrager and E. J. Swalm.

Accepting Christ Solves Problem

What are the implications of this?

Well, first of all, when one goes back to the Bible after this there is the obvious fact that the church and state are not rigidly and dualistically sealed off from one another. In the picture of early church life in Acts and the Epistles there is no confusing of the church with the state. But, on the other hand, there is a fairly free and natural encounter with government as long as it was not a persecuting government. The witness was made everywhere. The witness is not accompanied by a long analysis of the consequences of becoming Christians, what this might mean for the government or a heavily developed pattern of theory. No, it rather suggests a simple witness which assumed that accepting Christ could not really create problems; it could only solve them.

Second, it suggests that American Mennonites have very likely never fully reflected on the fact that the large Christian community in this country and Canada does make a difference among governmental leaders. When we witness to General Hershey there is an understanding present which one could not expect in the

We will concede that government is outside the perfection of Christ, that it is not set up for the Sermon on the Mount. Indeed, we reject all un-Biblical optimism which expects world peace as the gradual triumph of world government and economic justice. And yet, under the Lordship and Kingship of Christ under the sovereignty of God, we cannot refrain from saying to government or anyone: "If you do not yield yourself to Christ Jesus and the royal law of love, you will perish."

Roman Empire or in Switzerland of the 16th century. While there are completely secularized pagans in the American and Canadian governments yet there are men who do start with many basic Christian presuppositions. This does make a difference. Perhaps we will not agree on how much difference. But the leaven of Christianity in a fairly democratic culture creates a different situation than that of Europe 400 years ago and in Russia of today. Roland Bainton says that the Mennonites arose under the death penalty the Brethren under banishment, and the Quakers under ostracism and persecution. None of these three have prevailed in the U. S. and Canada. C.P.S. showed what could be done when conscientious objectors were given opportunities for a more positive witness.

Another Frontier to Cross

Third, it obviously suggests an extension of the precedent established by C.P.S. Our witness was modest enough, mainly concerning our particular needs in C.P.S., the rights and needs of the men, their hopes for larger service, the philosophy back of the camps and so on. Continuing interaction with the government continues at this level through voluntary service. But there is still another frontier to cross, namely, the witness to government in relation to issues which do not directly effect us in C.P.S. or relief or missions or naturalization. I refer to issues dealing with larger government policy at the end of which will be war or peace; freedom or tyranny; bitterness or happiness. At this very point there is not total agreement. One group seeks to maintain a rigid dualism between church and state. Yet this group would quickly admit that we should try to convert anyone and everyone in government to the full Christian Gospel. Thus it concedes the witness principle but only seeks to deny the use of witness principle along ethical lines.

Yet I sense an overwhelming majority of our people moving in a direction something like this: We will concede that government is outside the perfection of Christ, that it is not set up for the Sermon on the Mount. All this is true. Indeed, we reject all un-Biblical optimism which expects world peace as the gradual triumph of world government and economic justice. And yet, under the Lordship and Kingship of Christ, under the sovereignty of God, we cannot refrain from saying to government or anyone: "If you do not yield yourself to Christ Jesus and the royal law of love, you will perish."
